A NEW HISTORY OF PAINTING IN ITALY

CHAPTER I

PIERO DELLA FRANCESCA

It is not by dwelling exclusively on the growth of the purely Florentine school that we shall explain its development. Its ultimate perfection was due to the wisdom with which all past and contemporary elements of progress were assimilated and combined, from whatever quarter they might originally proceed. The great laws of composition founded on the models of Giotto, the plastic element made dominant by the sculptors of the fifteenth century, the scientific perspective of lines, which owed its grand impulse to Uccello, the more subtle one of atmosphere which Masaccio mastered, the tasteful architecture revived by Brunelleschi and Alberti, were summed up in a great measure by the spirit and grasp of Domenico Ghirlandaio. The changes in the use and application of mediums carried out by the Peselli and Baldovinetti, enlarged and extended by the Pollaiuoli, gained a concrete value in Verrocchio. But the merit of these and later artists owed much to the example of one who is not a Florentine, though educated in his earliest years under the tuition of a master formed on the pure Florentine models.

Pietro di Benedetto of the Franceschi,¹ more commonly known as Piero della Francesca, was born at Borgo San Sepolcro in Umbria,² on the western face of the mountain chain which parts Tuscany from the old duchy of Urbino and the States of the Church on the Adriatic coast. He might have reached the twentieth year when he laboured at Florence, and the date of his birth may therefore be fixed about 1415-20. The master who first instructed him has not been recorded, but a Sienese fibre can be traced throughout his artistic organism; and future investigation may prove that he was in early years disciple of a painter wandering, after the constant fashion of his countrymen, from Siena to the eastward, in search of employment. His good fortune, however, at an early period, brought him in contact with Domenico Veneziano, whose residence at Perugia as early as 1438 has been described; and by Domenico he was employed, in 1439, on the frescoes of S. Maria Nuova¹ at Florence. How long he may have remained with this master is uncertain.² We have no intermediate clue to the story of his life between 1439 and 1451, when he is known to have painted in Rimini; but we judge from his style that he tempered its local Umbrian features by assuming and imbibing the nobler qualities of the Florentine school. His masterpieces alone suffice, indeed, to prove that nature had created in the person of Piero a man of a rare type, endowed with great penetration and powers of reflection, able to fathom the problems of abstruse science, and capable of searching and co-ordinating the secrets of nature. He was, in a word, an artist enjoying a happy conjunction of the talents which adorned the Van Eycks and Leonardo da Vinci.³

Thrown by his connection with Domenico Veneziano into friendly relation with one of the realistic Florentines, he entered into the study of nature with an ardour equal to that of his master, equal to that of Andrea del Castagno or the Peselli. Their style he made his own without a thought for selection, but with the determination to master the true laws of motion and of life. With their energy, he assumed their coarseness, which he refined, however, with some of the grand quality perceptible in the nobler creations of Paolo Uccello. Without rising much above a common conventionalism apparent in the constant reproduction of a type affecting Moorish rather than European forms, he still reveals, in composition as well as in figures, some of the massive grandeur of the Florentines. With more science than Uccello or Mantegna,¹ he turned his knowledge of linear perspective to admirable account, and learnt not merely to fix rectangular planes in perfect order, but to measure them, and thus set his figures at their just proportional height in the most advantageous situations. Nor was the question of place one which remained unheeded. It was not casual with him that the figure should occupy its proper space in a fixed plane. He applied the severest geometrical laws in ascertaining the just proportions of figures to each other and to their stations in a given room.² But he did not rest even there; he was the forerunner and superior of Domenico Ghirlandaio in the mode of projecting shadows, and thus added to art a new perfection. Calculations of the comparative values necessary for the due distribution of light and shade were familiar to him, and one can conjecture that he assisted his experiments by the aid of artificial light in dark spaces. Yet he seldom concentrates light, but gives each tint its proper local depth in exact proportion to its distance within the plane of the picture, thereby differing from Rembrandt, who affects the spectator by condensing light on one spot and throwing the rest into comparative obscurity.³ The natural result of this scientific acquirement in Piero was an elaborate certainty in the rendering of atmosphere. Without being a colourist who, like the Van Eycks, gives air to a picture by intuitively breaking up tones as the distance recedes, he was so sure of the variation produced in primaries by the effect of remoteness that he never faltered in the application.⁴ The juxtaposition of two colours is never attended with any startling or brilliant contrast as in the Van Eycks; and the rules of

² [Certainly till 1445 Domenico was at work in Florence at the Hospital. Piero seems to have remained with him. In 1446 he received a commission from the Brotherhood of the Misericordia in Borgo San Sepolcro to paint an altarpiece for the chapel of their hospital. See infra. Cf. MILANESI, ubi sup., and PICHI, La Vita e le Opere di Piero della Francesca (Borgo San Sepolcro, 1893), and F. WITTING, Piero dei Franceschi (Strassburg, 1896), and W. G. WATERS, Piero della Francesca (Bell, 1901).]

harmony are equally maintained in the fore and background, by a judicious fusion that perfectly satisfies the eye. At the same time, the effect of the application of all these laws is perfect in the relief and natural projection of every object living or dead. If in the delineation of the human frame upon which these laws of relief and colour were carried out, Piero did not rise above the level of Paolo Uccello, if he shows occasional neglect,¹ and sometimes falls into the angularities of nude noticeable in their exaggerated aspect in the painters of Perugia, Foligno, and Gualdo, his architecture is admirable in taste, in proportion, and in ornament; and he is so peculiarly great in this respect that his perspective of edifices in S. Chiara at Urbino has been assigned to Baccio Pontelli and Bramante.²

To complete this sketch of Piero della Francesca one grand feature remains. The mediums introduced into painting by the Peselli and Baldovinetti, known to Domenico Veneziano, improved by the Pollaiuoli and Verrocchio, went through a new and clean crucible before they were perfected by Leonardo da Vinci and Fra Bartolommeo. It was the Umbro-Florentine Piero della Francesca who performed this necessary and meritorious operation. He carried out improvements in the mode of oil-colouring that place him next in Italy to Antonello da Messina, not because he followed the Van Eyck method introduced by the Sicilian, but because he added something like perfection to the system of the Florentine innovators. And thus we have before us a vast genius who only wanted the essential quality of selection in the human form to become one amongst the very greatest men of his country.

The uncertainty as to the time of Piero della Francesca's forsaking Domenico Veneziano has been touched upon. It would appear from Vasari that both master and pupil laboured together in the sacristy of S. M. di Loreto,³ and that, frightened by the appearance of the plague, they abandoned their work and the neighbourhood in all haste. According to a conjecture derived from the knowledge that the plague raged in the Marches between 1447 and 1452, it has been supposed that Domenico and Piero may have been residents at Loreto within those years. The statement is hard to deal with, because the only paintings in Loreto are those of Signorelli, Piero's pupil. Again, if Vasari be reliable,⁴

² The style and proportion of Piero's architecture, the taste of its ornament, are equal and perhaps superior to those of Domenico Ghirlandaio.

³ VASARI, vol. iv., pp. 19, 145.

Piero was called to Rome in the pontificate of Nicholas V., and competed with Bramante in two frescoes adorning the Camere, which were thrown down for Raphael by Julius II. This may have occurred after 1447 and before 1451, when Piero served Sigismondo Pandolfo Malatesta, the lord of Rimini.

There is nothing more curious in the history of Italy in the fifteenth century, than to see truculent soldiers, known as faithless leaders of armies, or guilty perpetrators of dreadful crimes, spending the fruit of their depredations on the erection of sacred edifices, and employing not only the best architects of the world to plan and erect, but great painters to adorn them. The wily and ferocious Sigismund Malatesta, whose cold-blooded cruelty and lust make readers of our day loathe his name, was a patron of architects and painters,¹ Rimini owes to him the erection of S. Francesco between 1447 and 1455; and the roll of artists whom he employed numbers Pisanello, and Gentile da Fabriano, Leon Battista Alberti who drew the plan of S. Francesco, Matteo de' Pasti of Verona who carried it out, and Piero della Francesca whose brush adorned some of its walls.²

Sigismund Malatesta may still be seen with two couchant greyhounds at his heels kneeling before the throned Saint Sigismund of Burgundy, in the Cappella delle Reliquie at S. Francesco of Rimini; and on the lower border of a frame, imitating the Grecian antique in the most pure and classic style, are the words :

SANCTUS SIGISMUNDUS. SIGISMUNDUS PANDULFUS MALATESTA
PAN. F. PETRI DE BURGO OPUS. MCCCCLI.³

A lofty simplicity pervading this fresco, a perfect adjustment of proportions in the figures and in their relation to the classic intercolumniation of the background, reveal the talent of Piero at this period. His drawing, pounced from a cartoon on a very smooth surface, is of Leonardesque precision, his flesh colour is painted in thin, cool tones of yellowish light, shadowed with a transparent inky grey, stippling. As a profile portrait nothing truer can be desired, except that perhaps the joined hands are flat and short and generalised in form. The face of the enthroned king is vulgar in type. But the architecture rivals in taste that of Alberti himself.¹

Whether, after this, Piero betook himself to Pesaro, where Galeazzo Malatesta was Governor; whether he laboured at Ancona,² may possibly remain for ever doubtful; but a certain correspondence of style and of handling suggests that the choir of S. Francesco at Arezzo was decorated by him shortly after the completion of Malatesta's votive fresco at Rimini.³

The legend of the Cross which Agnolo Gaddi had illustrated in S. Croce at Florence was that whose various incidents now gave occasion to Piero to display the versatility of his powers. Distributing the space allowed to him with judgment assisted by a knowledge of geometry and perspective at that time unsurpassed, he applied to the delineation of episodes affording the widest scope for action, architectural adornment, and costume, all the qualities which have been described as combining to form his style.

In the lunette to the right, the Death and Burial of Adam form two distinct subjects, parted from each other by a tree. The dying man is supported by Eve, whose hanging breasts indicate an advanced age; and three other naked figures represent the children of the first man. The Burial to the left is an animated composition of ten figures. Both scenes are connected with the legend by the tradition, variously stated in different books, that the seed or a bough of the tree out of which the Cross was to be hewn, being that of the Tree of Knowledge, had been granted to Seth, and either sown beneath the tongue of Adam or planted on his tomb; and that growing to a noble size it was hewn down by Solomon, and formed into a bridge over a stream. Its sacred nature was revealed to the Queen of Sheba, whose arrival and reverent prayer by the bridge, in the presence of her followers, is, together with her reception by Solomon, the subject of two frescoes, side by side in the course below the first lunette. In the lowest space of the same side, the whole room is taken up with a view of the battle between Chosroes, king of Persia, and Heraclius, emperor of the Romans, for the recovery of the Cross.

The lunette of the end wall is only adorned with two grand figures standing at each side of the window, one to the left gesticulating with his hand as he speaks, the other at rest and haunched, but now much injured. In the course below this, to the right of the window, labourers busy with the raising

³ [All we know is that Piero must have painted the frescoes in Arezzo before 1466, for in that year the Compagnia of the Annunziata in Arezzo made a contract with him for the execution of a processional banner. The balance of the price for this was paid him on November 7, 1468, when he is described as "il maestro di dipingere il quale a dipinto la chupola maggiore di S. Francesco d'Arezzo."] of the Cross are depicted with realistic truth, whilst to the left of the window is an equally natural group of men hauling up a figure with a crane out of a well. Beneath these two subjects are severally (right) the Vision of an Angel to Constantine, who appears lying in his tent with an attendant slumbering at his bedside, and two guards at the entrance; and (left) the Annunciation, where the Virgin, standing under a splendid portico, receives the visit of the Angel and the Spirit from the Eternal.

In the lower course of the left side, the battle, already in progress at the opposite side, is continued and closed by the Execution of Chosroes, the upper space being filled with the Finding of the Cross before S. Helen, and the proof of its miraculous power by the cure of the sick man. The lunette (much injured) represents the Progress of Heraclius into Jerusalem. In the left pilaster of the entrance arch, whose vaulted frieze still preserves some figures by Bicci (two saints above the cornices being by Piero), a Cupid resting on his bow stands above two superposed saints, a bishop and Peter Martyr (half gone). The right pilaster is empty, with the exception of part of an angel in the lowest space.

Though injured in a great many places, these frescoes have not been retouched—the spots where intonaco has fallen being simply filled in, whilst the painted frames have been renewed.

Following close on the comparatively feeble Bicci, who had only completed a ceiling and part of the frieze at the entrance,¹ Piero could well claim the gratitude—he deserved the reward—of Luigi Bacci of Arezzo,² who might congratulate himself upon having exchanged the ordinary productions of a low Giottesque for the more perfect ones of a great and noble painter. Not only had Piero naturally surpassed his predecessor; he shows that he had thus early matured most of the qualities which formed at last the complex of his manner. Following the technical system of drawing and colour which he had already applied in S. Francesco at Rimini,³ he distributed his groups and distances, whether of buildings or of landscape, on their just planes according to the laws of linear and aerial perspective, with a science and certainty only equalled later by Leonardo, and with a startling reality of truth in effects, both of relief by light and shade, and of harmony by juxtaposition of exact values of tone. The unity which, in the founder of the Florentine school, was evolved by the subordination of all parts to an idea requiring, or not claiming more than, a generalisation of distances—defective therefore, because the truth remained concealed under a conventional symbol—was attained by Piero by the effectual representation of each portion of his subject in reference to its exact place in nature. Treating the human figure as a mere geometrical unit, he neglected idealism of type or selection of form, contenting himself with realistic portraiture, with the conscientious reproduction of shapes, weighty of frame and of limb, coarse in hand and foot, after the examples of Andrea del Castagno, and conveying a sense of truth to the spectator as Michael Angelo conveys it, in the midst of much that is fanciful, by proof of great knowledge as to the bone and muscle of the human body, and its development in rapid movements. He was in fact the best painter of nudes in his age, and not inferior in this sense to Masaccio or to Ghirlandaio. If a Virgin, an Angel, an Eternal, as he conceived them, lack comeliness, spirituality, or idealised benevolence, they are still grand by the dignity of their demeanour, and they have their proper individuality of passion, age, and sex. Draperies may be realistic and broken, they may be sought out like those of Uccello, they are still broad in treatment. An illustration of his power of individualising, of his talent for nude, may be found in the subject of Adam's death, where one of the youths, with his legs crossed, leaning on a staff, presents the prototype of a creation hardly surpassed by Signorelli. The keen perception of natural momentary action is shown in the scene of Adam's Burial,¹ the Florentine quality of grand composition in the arrival of the Queen of Sheba, where masculine shape marks the females, and varied costume gives richness to a well-preserved episode.

The battle between Heraclius and Chosroes, where the Persians are driven in disarray over a stream, is a mêlée of combatants and fugitives on horseback, in which, without the confusion which marks the fights of Uccello, Piero allows one to perceive that he has not as yet mastered the forms of the horse in quick motion.

The absence of comeliness in females is proved by the Virgin of the Annunciation, whose common type, affecting a superhuman gravity—whose costume, of the painter's own period—are more natural than suits the elevation of the subject. The angel is in no sense celestial. His wings are clearly useless, his locks are wiry, as indeed are those of most of the persons represented, and his hands are cramped in the Umbrian manner which Perugino preserved. Nor is the Eternal rendered with more elevation than King Sigismund at Rimini.

The portraits in the group of the Execution are excellent; and if in the human forms generally there is little suppleness, there is yet none of the conventionalism which became apparent later. His types generally are peculiar, his costumes often singular; and had Vasari related of him, instead of Lippi, that he had once been a captive in Barbary, we should have believed him.

But Piero excites our surprise and admiration in the Vision, in which an effect of light in the darkness, and a daring foreshortened view of an angel, give a double attraction to the picture. The effect is similar in principle to that in the Liberation of S. Peter at Rome, which Raphael conceived, no doubt after he had studied Piero's masterpieces.¹ There are, it is true, but traces of the head and wings of the heavenly messenger; but the hand and arm remain, and explain the general movement, which rivals in boldness that of Uccello's Eternal in S. M. Novella.² The light dress of the figure, the yellow cone and sides of the tent, whose shadows are tinged with red as they verge into the blackness of complete obscurity—the powerful cool tone of the dark interior giving the idea of night, relieved by the lined white and blood-red coverlet of the Emperor's bed—the twilight on the sleeping soldier in front, the alternation of light and shade in the two sentries,³—the shadows projected in a manner appropriate to a scene thus illumined, all combine to give an effect similar to the reality. The edge lights, or broad shadows, such as that cast on the face of the soldier to the right by his helmet, are truth itself; yet throughout, the proper balance of chiaroscuro is maintained, and the drawing is rapid, bold and correct. No one can wonder at the design for this fresco⁴ being taken for one by Giorgione. It might have been assigned with equal propriety to Correggio or to Rembrandt.

Assuming, as we must, that this great series was commenced after the death of Bicci di Lorenzo in 1452, we are led to judge from the general similarity of its execution with the fresco of Rimini that it was completed shortly after, and that Piero della Francesca resided at Arezzo during 1453 and 1454. The traces of his activity are, however, not confined to the choir of S. Francesco. A Crucified Redeemer between the Virgin and S. John the Evangelist, in a chapel to the right of the portal, betrays, it is true, the less able hand of an assistant in Piero's school;¹ but a standing figure of the Magdalen, between the Tarlati monument and the door of the sacristy in the Duomo, appears to have been painted on the wall by the master himself. She stands life size in a richly ornamented niche of feigned marble, with the cup in her left hand and the drapery of her mantle in her right; and long locks fall in the usual thorny style to her shoulders. Some affectation in the movement of a figure which is more weighty and grave than feminine or graceful, coarse hands and articulations, are the usual characteristics of the master, whose angular draperies are still broad in the style of Uccello, and who succeeds better than usual in giving regularity to the features of the faces. The mass of light and shade is grandly distributed, and thus we have a work worthy of being cited amongst the fine ones of Piero.

² DR. GAYE in Kunstblatt, No. 85, 1836, treating of this piece, affirms that there is no angel in the Dream of Constantine, and takes the mutilated one still there for an eagle!

From Arezzo to Borgo S. Sepolcro is no great distance. Twenty-five miles is the utmost that separates the two places, and our artist may have resided in his native town and kept his family there when busy in person elsewhere. Records and pictures are still extant to prove that numerous commissions flowed in to him during a course of years at Borgo S. Sepolcro. An order for an altarpiece from the brothers of the Compagnia della Misericordia in that town is said to exist, and may possibly be found at a later time.² The piece to which it refers, rebuilt in a modern and tasteless shape, remains in the church of the hospital occupied by the Fraternity before its suppression.³ It affords an example of Piero's skill in the handling of the Florentine oil medium, and proves more clearly than the frescoes of Arezzo the consistent mixture of Umbro-Sienese and Florentine character forming his peculiar style.

The altarpiece in its present shape is a large wooden screen, in the midst of which an arched rectangle contains the Virgin of Mercy, under whose cloak kneel groups of males and females of various degree.⁴ The screen rests upon four arched niches, in which SS. Sebastian, John the Baptist, a nameless saint, and Bernardino are depicted,⁵ and the whole on a predella, which belonged to another picture representing Christ's Burial, between the

⁵ These saints are injured, and the colour is cracked on the surface of the panel. The lower parts are mutilated, or covered by the predella.

Flagellation and Christ in the Garden, the Maries at the Sepulchre, and the "Noli me tangere." The old predella, containing eight saints, amongst whom are SS. Benedict, Jerome, Anthony of Padua, Francis, Dominic, and three others;¹—the Virgin and the Angel Annunciate of the side pinnacles have been built up into pilasters at the side of the frame containing the Virgin of Mercy, whilst the central pinnacle overtops the whole edifice, and holds a Crucified Saviour between the Virgin and Evangelist, in the exact form of that in the Duomo at Arezzo.

The whole of this piece, with the exception of the predella scenes, which seem more in the tempera method than the rest, is painted in the mixed system already noted in the life of Domenico Veneziano, improved in some measure by Piero, and still further perfected in his latest examples. The Virgin, whose type as usual lacks comeliness, is still fine and grave. The females at her sides are graceful portraits, whilst the males, also impressed with a powerful stamp of nature, are moulded in a form reproduced on a lower scale by the school of Gubbio and the painters of Gualdo and Camerino. Equally fine are the saints in the pilasters, though vulgar types. A threatening glance in the open eyes and a realistic precision in the extremities, not characteristic of a painter educated solely in the Florentine school, reveal an inspiration derived from Siena. The mixture of Siennese character and the Florentine coarseness of Andrea del Castagno is marked likewise in the vulgar Crucified Saviour, and in the somewhat extravagantly posed Virgin and Evangelist. A still greater want of selection is sensibly felt in the SS. Sebastian and John the Baptist, whilst Umbrian or Siennese spirit of composition, type, and action are most conspicuous in the predella. Yet the whole work is Piero's, aided perhaps in the less important parts by pupils.

A surprising softness and fusion of colour of an equal brown tinge marks the flesh tints in the Virgin, in the figures at her feet, and in the pilaster saints; and the higher surface of the shadows explains the process of handling, which is carried out on the same system in draperies of powerful primary or secondary tones, glazed with half-body colour, and bright with the brightness of Van Eyck, Antonello, Titian, or Giorgione.

Whilst Piero thus reveals the mixed nature of his manner in a picture which introduced the system of the Florentine innovators into Umbria, he gives another illustration of his fancy for Siennese typical compositions in the Resurrection of Christ, a fresco adorning the old Palazzo de' Conservatori at Borgo S. Sepolcro, now the Monte Pio.² Following the arrangement of an artist (probably Nicholas Segna) who in earlier years had used this subject at S. Chiara, a monastery in this very city, Piero depicts the four guards, weighty and grandly presented in armour, asleep, in telling attitudes, one of them admirably foreshortened in front of the sepulchre, inside of which the Saviour has risen in His winding-sheet, and, grasping the banner, has a foot already on the ledge. It is apparent that the great object of the artist was to make the figure of Christ prominent in spite of its station on a more distant plane than the guard; he succeeds in his intention by keeping the tones of the foreground and landscape distance low. The Saviour, whose winding-sheet is drawn round over the left shoulder, leaving the torso and right arm bare, is at once realistic and colossal, and imposing as in the old Byzantine Siennese examples founded upon the antique. The parts are modelled with anatomical truth. But the type of the face is Moorish, with full lips, straight broad-barrelled nose, and hollow eyes, whilst the extremities are coarse and common. More striking for the science which it displays than pleasant to the view, this Resurrection is painted with a breadth almost conventional, and in great relief, the various planes of light and shade being precisely defined and mapped out. The broken folds of draperies, of double stuff, recall those of Benozzo, and are glazed in shadow over the local tone, a system pursued in the flesh tints with equal success.¹ Greater freedom of hand, more impasto, suggest a later period for this piece than for the frescoes of the choir of Arezzo.

Less uncertainty as to time is created by the fresco of S. Louis, originally painted by Piero in the Regio Tribunale of Borgo S. Sepolcro, now in the Municipio, and dated 1460,²—a mutilated piece representing the saint in the mitre and robes of office and holding the crosier and book.³

Of greater value, however, especially to the English critic, who can now study a genuine production of Piero in the National Gallery, is the Baptism of Christ, formerly part of an altarpiece in the priory of S. Giovanni Evangelista at Borgo San Sepolcro, of which the remainder is by another hand.⁴

³ [CAVALCASELLE, in his Italian edition of this work, vol. viii., pp. 243, 244, describes certain frescoes of Piero existing in a palace in the Via delle Aggiunte at Borgo San Sepolcro, and more especially a figure of Hercules. This fine figure was later removed by its owner, Sig. Collacchioni, to a neighbouring villa, and has recently found its way into the collection of Mrs. J. L. Gardner, in Boston, U.S.A.]

Christ stands in the stream, in the centre of the picture, whilst John pours the water on His head. Three angels wait to the left, and behind the Evangelist a proselyte strips. In the distance four figures in Oriental dress stand and cast reflections into the water of Jordan. A garden and the town of Borgo S. Sepolcro form the background.

A serious drawback to the enjoyment of this picture is the abrasion of its colour and its reduction to the condition of a preparation such as we might expect to see in an unfinished work by Correggio; but the insight which it gives into Piero's mode of painting in the Florentine method of oil is most interesting. We have described in the Peselli the somewhat artless use of viscous and lustrous colours tempered with a new medium; in the Pollaiuoli, the introduction of a mode of glazing with the same vehicles transparently or in half body. Piero della Francesca gave a new impulse to the whole system. Instead of painting flesh tones of a certain monotonous value and marked by a difficulty of fusion in the passage from light through semitone to high surface shadow, he took advantage of some successful improvement in the liquefaction of the hitherto viscous medium. The certainty of this is derived from the picture of the National Gallery as well as from earlier and later examples, in which the flesh tints, instead of obtaining light from within, i.e. by the brightness of the underground piercing the superposed tone, receive light from outwards, being prepared at once in a sort of dead colour, modified afterwards by half-bodied preparations and final transparent glazes. The lights and shadows are always given over the local flesh tone, and are thus more plentiful on the panel, the whole gaining a lustrous and pinguid aspect of much brightness. The primary colours of dresses temper each other judiciously because of the perfect proportion of their tone in the general harmony. The sky and distances of hills, plains, roads, houses, and trees are prepared so that the lighter portions (paths for instance) should receive light from the white underground, this quality being attained by the use of hardly perceptible glazes; whilst the parts less flimsily touched over are still mellow, easily spread, and free from excessive pastosity. It is thus clear that Piero had gained the knowledge of many of the improvements which contributed to the greatness of the Van Eycks and Antonello; and that, without revealing any material contact with them, he had gained possession of a great advantage in the use of vehicles less viscous, more manageable and paler than those of the Pollaiuoli and Peselli. He came nearer than any of the Florentines to the Flemish and Sicilian innovators in feeling for colour as well as in the technical manner of applying it.¹ We need but pause further to note that in form, in type, in study of nude, Piero as usual draws unselect models with the precision of Leonardo, shows his mastery in giving elasticity to flesh and muscle, and his carelessness of aught but correctness of action in coarse extremities; we hardly require again to point out the clear basis of Greco-Roman antique in his somewhat academic figures, or the defect of angularity in his drapery. It is not unimportant in the meanwhile to mark that the analysis of this and other productions of Piero della Francesca is not the only source from which the conviction is derived that he painted in oil. We are in possession of the original contract in which the brethren of the company of the Nunziata at Arezzo ordered a standard of Piero to be adorned with a Virgin and Angel Annunciate in December 1466; and one of the clauses of that contract is most important, as it states that the whole picture shall be "worked in oil" (lavorato a olio).

Meanwhile certain pictures may be excluded from the series truly attributable to our artist,—for instance, a portrait assigned to him in the National Gallery, supposed to represent Isotta, the wife of Sigismund Malatesta,¹ another portrait unlike it, yet said to represent the same person, in Mr. Barker's collection,² a third likeness in Mr. Drury Lowe's possession,³ all of which seem to belong to other masters,—in order to revert to the personal career of the artist.

When the brethren of the Nunziata sent from Arezzo to Borgo S. Sepolero for their standard in November 1468, they found that Piero had left the town in June 1467, and had taken up his abode in the neighbouring place of La Bastia, in order to avoid the ravages of the plague. Their satisfaction at the result of his labours is simply and warmly recorded, and the brethren relate how the brotherhood turned out on the following Sunday with their new purchase at the head of a solemn procession; and the public voice of Arezzo proclaimed that Piero della Francesca had done his duty; a verdict which their present posterity is unable to ratify, because the picture has perished.⁴

⁴ See all these facts in the records already cited in Giornale Storico degli Archivi Toscani, 1862, p. 9 et seq.

It may have been in the course of these years that Piero conducted to a successful termination a small panel containing the portrait of a man kneeling in prayer before S. Jerome, seated frontwise, turning the leaves of a book, now in the Academy at Venice, and authenticated by a signature. The distant landscape, enlivened by a view of a town very like that of Borgo S. Sepolcro, the figures arranged in the relative positions of those in the fresco of Rimini, are very characteristic of the master, and the piece is on a level, as to perfection in technical methods, with that of the National Gallery, whilst the drawing is pure and precise like that of Verrocchio or Leonardo. As for the person represented, it is clear from his attitude before S. Jerome that that hermit was his patron; and this is confirmed by the inscription at foot: "HIER. AMADI. AUG. P." Nor is it unlikely, since we know the artist's connection with Sigismondo Malatesta, that this should be Girolamo, the son of Carlo Malatesta of Sogliano, who, in 1464, married a daughter of Federigo of Urbino.¹ The connection which shortly afterwards arose between Piero della Francesca and Sigismondo Malatesta's consistent enemy the Duke of Urbino, might thus become more comprehensible than it otherwise would be; although, in respect of patronage, the experience of centuries proves that painters were free to come and go through the territories, and were welcome at the courts, of princes bitterly hostile to each other.

Pausing for the sake of recording only that the Ascension of the Virgin assigned to our artist in S. Chiara of Borgo S. Sepolcro, though coloured in a low key of tempera like that of Piero, suggests by its appearance the names of Gerino da Pistoia, or Francesco da Città di Castello, artists whose style may be more accurately defined hereafter,² we are led to inquire the time when our Umbro-Florentine made his way again across the hills to the eastern side of the crest dividing the

² This altarpiece in S. Chiara (of old S. Agostino) has been assigned to Piero della Francesca by the annotators of the last edition of VASARI (vol. iv., note 3 to p. 18). It represents the Ascension of the Virgin between six playing and singing angels. Below are SS. Francis, Jerome, Louis, and Chiara. In the distance are the youthful Baptist, S. Thomas, and the twelve Apostles. It is a carefully executed piece of feeble character. Francesco da Città di Castello, one of the painters suggested in the text, has many features of the school of Perugino combined with a mode of drawing reminiscent of that of Piero della Francesca: his figures being thin and angular. He approaches Perugino most in a picture at Città di Castello. PASSAVANT (Raphael, vol. i., p. 433), assigns to Piero della Francesca an Ascension in S. M. de' Servi at Borgo S. Sepolcro. It is strange that a man of his experience should have confounded the works of this great master with a purely Sienese production. But see postea, "Benvenuto di Giovanni." [This work is by Matteo di Giovanni, of Siena.]

Marches from Tuscany, and received employment in Urbino. The records of the Brotherhood of Corpus Domini assist us to solve this difficulty. They tell us that Piero was invited, in April 1469, to paint an altarpiece, and that the expense of his journey was paid by Giovanni Santi, the father of Raphael.¹

This was a time when the Duke of Urbino was in the enjoyment of great power and wealth. He was captain-general of the Florentine league, Florence, Naples, and Milan, against the Pope and Venice. He had already begun vast architectural enterprises under the direction of Luciano Lauranna, a Dalmatian it is thought, who was afterwards succeeded by the Florentine Baccio Pontelli. Francesco di Giorgio was his adviser in the art of fortification, Santi one of the artists who most illustrated his state. That such a man should employ Piero della Francesca, when he appeared under the auspices of Santi in Urbino, was natural enough;² and accordingly it seems that Piero, who is not known to have carried out the commission for the altarpiece of the Corpus Domini, was soon at the service of Federigo, painting a Flagellation, intended, it was said, allegorically to illustrate the last days of Odd' Antonio of Montefeltro,³ and an apotheosis, with portraits, of the Duke and his wife, Battista Sforza.

The melancholy fate of Odd' Antonio di Montefeltro is historic. He perished with his minions, Tommaso dell' Agnello of Rimini, and the apostolic protonotary Manfredi de' Carpi, under the blows of men who in their age had at least the excuse of revenge for atrocious wrong to urge in mitigation of their actions.⁴ It is a tradition preserved by the historians of Urbino, that three portraits of persons in local costume standing outside the portico in which Piero della Francesca depicted the Flagellation, are likenesses of the murdered Prince and his advisers.⁵ Others suppose the persons to be Guidubaldo the father, Odd' Antonio and Federigo, his lawful and illegitimate sons. Be this as it may, the picture which Piero here completed on the innovating system, still further improved since the completion of the Baptism, is the finest that he had

yet produced. Preserved in the sacristy of the Duomo at Urbino, it represents Pilate seated at a distance on his chair of state, under a splendid porch, in the midst of which the naked Saviour is fast to a pillar crowned with an idol, and receives the flagellation from three executioners, whilst outside to the right, and at the top of a street retreating to a distance of trees and sky, stands, in closer proximity to the spectator, the group we have endeavoured to describe.¹

Piero had now polished the style but partially developed at Arezzo. As a geometer, an architect, and a master of perspective, he shines alike, giving a beautiful form to the colonnade in which the principal scene is placed, distributing the figures with judgment on their planes, and imparting to them their exact shade of tone with sufficient relief. The sense of depth and rotundity is naturally assisted by carefulness and cleanness of tone, great softness and fusion of colour, and a perfect keeping in the parts, productive of a grand unity. Yet Piero's neglect of all but the block of human form is perceptible as ever.²

A still more finished example of the technical progress of our painter is the diptych at the Uffizi, in which the fair side of Federigo's countenance, left untouched fortunately for him in a tourney, faces the profile of his wife.³ Neither are agreeable types, but nothing can exceed the Leonardesque precision of the drawing or the softness and fusion of the impasto. The obverse of each portrait contains a triumph, in one of which Federigo is driven on a car, and Battista is seated on another with similar accompaniments. Both allegories are handled with the same talent as the portraits, in landscapes of a charming expanse, in the mixed medium improved by Francesca in a manner quite original and purely Florentine. If in the representation of the horse at Arezzo he shows imperfection, he is now free from that reproach; those which drive the triumphal cars of the Duke and Duchess of Urbino being fine and precisely drawn like those of Verrocchio. Nor can one refrain from comparing these masterpieces, produced at least as early as 1472, with the altarpiece of Justus of Ghent in S. Agatha at Urbino, which was completed two years later. Italian art, obviously, had nothing to gain either from this second-rate Fleming or from Van der Goes, whose works at S. Maria Nuova of Florence, if justly assigned to him, are second to those of Piero della Francesca.

These, however, are not all the works with which our artist graced the city of Urbino. We must, it is true, withdraw his name from the six panels of Apostles given to him in the Duomo, of which a description shall be deferred to the life of Giovanni Santi; but he is clearly the author of a splendid picture in S. Chiara representing a circular temple of two stories, flanked by a line of edifices at each side, carried out with the taste and science for which Piero is already known, drawn in good perspective with the greatest feeling for the gradual breaking up of tones according to the receding planes which they colour.¹ Piero della Francesca may indeed at this time have matured his treatise on Perspective, composed, according to Fra Luca Pacioli at Borgo S. Sepolcro, in the vulgar tongue, and translated into Latin by his friend "Maestro Matteo";² for though Fra Luca only states the fact in his Summa de Arithmetica, published in 1494, he does not indicate the exact period in which Piero wrote. Pacioli, who has been very unjustly accused of plagiarism and the plunder of his friend's work, is really quite innocent of the charge, and always speaks of Francesca with a reverence quite extraordinary. It is from one of his works, indeed, that we learn the artist's existence as late as 1509, as he declares in his treatise on Architecture published in that year, that Piero "is still alive in these days, having been monarch of art, when he still had power to work, as is proved in Urbino, Bologna, and Ferrara, on the wall, on canvas, in oil and distemper, especially in the city of Arezzo."

But this statement is further of interest, as it shows that Piero, who does not seem to have become blind, as Vasari states,³ but to have been gradually incapacitated for work by age, not only painted at Arezzo and Urbino, but at Bologna and Ferrara. At Bologna there are no traces of his stay, but at Ferrara there is reason to believe that he resided;⁴ and sufficient confirmation of Fra Luca and Vasari's assertion to that effect is at hand. The latter indeed is more than usually circumstantial in affirming that Piero, whilst at work either at Pesaro or Ancona, was invited to Ferrara by Duke Borso, who caused him to adorn many rooms in his palace. These, however, were removed later, on the occasion of Ercole's reduction of the building to a new form; and the pictures were lost.

The palace of Schifanoia, literally "Begone dull care," was decorated between 1450 and 1468 by Duke Borso. Duke Ercole, his successor, altered it in 1469, by taking down the old roof and adding a story to the edifice.¹ It is very likely that, in the repairs, Piero's frescoes perished. But he had lived long enough at Ferrara to exercise a marked influence on the painters of the place, where indeed he must have had many assistants. This is clearly proved by some of the frescoes in the upper story of the Schifanoia which were recovered from whitewash in 1840, one series of which, representing the Triumphs of Minerva, Venus, and Apollo, is composed and carried out in the spirit of his schooling.

In the first of these, Minerva on a platform car, graced with a Cupid at each corner holding festoons, is driven round into the foreground by two unicorns, parting with her equipage two groups of men and women busy at various avocations in a landscape. In the second, Venus led by swans, holds Mars captive on his knees before her, amidst groups of musicians. In the fourth, Apollo's car harnessed with four horses of various colours, is guided by Aurora and accompanied by groups of nude children, whilst various incidents fill the rest of the picture. The series is continued in the same spirit as to subject, but with a distinct decline in the skill of the artists, on the neighbouring walls.

The three principal frescoes exhibit character hardly akin to that which marks the pure Ferrarese school. Nor is it the Paduan style which exclusively prevails in them. The dominant manner is the Umbrian of Piero della Francesca, a manner reminiscent in some respect of that peculiar to Benedetto Bonfigli, revealing at least as close a contact, through Piero della Francesca, between the Ferrarese and Perugian as between the Ferrarese and Paduan schools. The heads in some groups of the Triumph of Minerva are detached from each other, and are marked by types, which betray the influence of Piero's school. The composition in the three frescoes is grander, more geometrically correct, and less defective in style than those of a pure Ferrarese of the time could be, and more in the spirit of the painter of Borgo S. Sepolcro. They are in fact executed by men educated in his school, and clearly prove the great influence of his style and teaching in Ferrara.²

We have said Bonfigli's works recall in a like manner the influence of Piero. Great uncertainty exists as to when Piero was at Perugia. There is, however, an altarpiece by him in the Academy of that place,³ and it is, no doubt, the very picture described minutely by Vasari and recorded by Mariotti¹ as adorning in his time the convent of S. Antonio. It is a large gablepiece, with the Virgin and Child enthroned in the centre; four saints in the niches at her sides; the Annunciation in the upper space, and two saints in a mutilated predella. The Virgin annunciate is like all those of Piero; the angel more gentle in mien than usual. The enthroned Madonna is not comely, nor is the infant pleasing in its nakedness because of its excessive fatness and the ugliness of its type; yet this type seems to have served as a model for the Boccati of Camerino, Matteo of Gualdo and Bartolommeo of Foligno; nor is it clear that Bonfigli disdained to take an inspiration from it. The saints are more or less short in stature and common in aspect; and the cramped fingers of a S. Francis are the same that we have seen in the picture of the Spedale at Borgo S. Sepolcro. Still this is a genuine work by Piero, painted imperfectly on the mixed system, in colours of much fusion, but of a low key on a brownish preparation, marked by high surface bitumen shadows. The draperies, too, have the involutions and angularity of those of the Pollaiuoli and Benozzo Gozzoli.

In Piero's manner, but not more attractive than the foregoing, is a Virgin and Child between two angels in the convent church of S. M. delle Grazie outside Sinigaglia, a mixed tempera panel of high surface shadows and hard leaden yet translucid colour, in which the pleasanter forms of angels contrast with an Infant of the same type as that of the Perugian altarpiece.² Other panels may be thrown together as follows:

At Borgo S. Sepolcro, in possession of the Marini Franceschi, descendants of Piero, is a portrait in oil of Piero della Francesca, common enough and of a later time, but perhaps a copy of that from which Vasari derived his woodcut of the painter.

In the same family collection, four small saints, a little more than half length, representing S. Antony between SS. Chiara, Apollonia, and another figure, much damaged and repainted, but still in Piero's character.³

In Mr. Barker's Collection in London, formerly belonging, we believe, to the Marini Franceschi, is a Virgin kneeling before the naked Infant, with five singing or playing angels on one side, S. Joseph on the other and two shepherds in the landscape distance.⁴ This piece is injured in colour and seems to have remained unfinished. It is painted with much impasto and of a brown tone. The shepherds and S. Joseph are, as regards vulgarity

³ [These panels are no longer to be traced.]

of type, reminiscent of Signorelli, who is known to have been Piero's pupil. As a work of art this is preferable to the panels of Perugia and Sinigaglia.

At Città di Castello, a Coronation of the Virgin, with saints, in the convent of S. Cecilia, is falsely assigned to our master, and seems more properly attributable to Ridolfo Ghirlandaio or Granacci's youthful time, when under the tuition of their master Domenico.

Milan can boast of no genuine work by Piero, and the Resurrection, with saints, on the outer face of the portal of S. Sepolcro, is a fresco of the Lombard school.¹

The master's influence at Arezzo is apparent, although its fruits are not of a high order, in a fresco of the Virgin and Saints (life size), inscribed with the date of 1483, in the Palazzo del Comune;² and in a Madonna between SS. Benedict and Bernard, dated 1502, a fresco in the sacristy of S. Bernardino.³

Having thus brought to a close the life of Piero della Francesca, and described the advantages which accrued to Italian art from his great and peculiar talent, it is but a just tribute to his memory to add, that, having formed the bold and vehement style of Luca Signorelli, their combined influence extended to all the schools of their native country. Both these artists were connected with the court of Federigo of Urbino, assisting to produce an exotic splendour which waned soon after; because the protection first given to art was too soon withdrawn after it had begun to strike a local root in the person of Giovanni Santi. Raphael's early studies derived a beneficent impulse from Piero della Francesca through Santi, but, for want of sufficient support at home, required the direction of Perugino. In the same way the schools of the Adriatic side of Central Italy felt the effects of Piero's genius, until Venetian and Paduan artists invaded the Marches. Melozzo da Forlì, amongst others, derived much from contact with, or study of, Piero, and strengthened by his example the same fibre in Santi which had already been made to vibrate by the master whom they had both known and honoured. Such indeed was Melozzo's power over Santi's style that some of the productions due to the latter show many characteristic features noticeable in the works of Melozzo's pupil, Marco Palmezzano. A clump of artists, headed by Piero della Francesca, most of them Umbro-Florentine—that is, commingling Florentine maxims with an Umbrian nature—were thus mainly instrumental in giving a powerful impulse in a particular direction to Italian art.

The name of Piero della Francesca in union with that of one Fra Carnovale has been alluded to by many authors. The connection of this friar's name with extant paintings is authenticated by no records whatever. He is casually mentioned by Vasari, in a life of Bramante, as the author of a picture in S. M. della Bella at Urbino, of which the subject is not given,¹ and the following facts are said by Pungileoni to refer to him :²

He was called Bartolommeo, the son of Gio. di Bartolo Corradini, and entered the Dominican order. In 1456 (the record is given) he was absolved by mutual consent from the duty of painting a picture for the company of Corpus Christi at Urbino. In 1461, he performed the duties of pievano or curate³ in S. Cassiano of Cavallino, near Urbino, and there are further records of his existence in the same capacity at the same place till 1488.

So far, it appears that a certain Dominican friar of the name of Bartolommeo di Gio. Corradini was a painter at Urbino about the year 1456. There is no proof that this Bartolommeo should have gone by the name of Carnovale, nor is there any authentic memorial of his works. Pungileoni adds, however, from certain statements furnished to him out of the convent of S. Bernardino of Urbino, which he quotes at second hand (and which still exist in the very words of Padre Pungileoni in the convent above named, being drawn up apparently in the last century), "about this time (1472) the altarpiece of the high altar (of S. Bernardino) was painted by Fra Bartolommeo called F. Carnovale, because the Virgin is a portrait of the Duchess Battista Sforza, wife of Duke Federico, and the Infant on the Virgin's lap is the likeness of the son born to the Duke by the said Duchess." ¹

It is to be submitted that this is a very untrustworthy authority for assigning to Fra Carnovale the altarpiece of S. Bernardino at Urbino, which now hangs in the Gallery of the Brera at Milan. ²

The Virgin, of life size, is represented there enthroned under a semidome rivalling in architectural beauty the creations of Leon Battista Alberti. The Infant Christ is stretched on her knees, adored by her and by a kneeling figure of Federigo of Urbino in armour at her feet. Four angels are in couples at the Virgin's side supported by SS. Jerome, Bernardino, and John the Baptist (left), Francis, Peter Martyr, and another (right).

This is a picture on the system of Piero della Francesca, with scientific perspective, with a geometrical division of lines, of light, and of shadow. The figures seem only subservient to an effect of chiaroscuro, being placed side by side without much variety. The Child has the peculiar type of the least pleasing ones painted by Piero. The angels are in his well-known mould and dress, but, like the rest of the picture, on a lower scale of art than his. The stamp of the master's school, without the impress of his hand, is marked. The colour is of full impasto and of a leaden grey, in good keeping, however, because of the judicious distribution of the lights and shades in juxtaposition. That the work may have been by one of Piero's pupils is evident. It is of the same class, and shares defects already visible in the Madonna at Sinigaglia or the altarpiece of Perugia, and, to a less extent, in the panel at the Spedale of Borgo S. Sepolero. We know but of one assistant or pupil of Piero besides Luca Signorelli and Dom Bartolommeo della Gatta, and that is Lorentino d'Angelo of Arezzo, ³ whose works are, however, not preserved. ⁴ If the author of the Brera picture be Fra Carnovale, we add to the list another pupil whose picture was completed possibly about 1472, the date named, or perhaps later. The same hand had clearly a share in other works assigned to Piero della Francesca, and until records shall have settled the matter, Fra Carnovale's name may be taken as a conventional one to indicate works bearing the impress, but not revealing the perfect manner of a greater master.

In this class we shall at once place a S. Michael trampling the dragon and carrying the monster's head in one hand, a picture now in Sir Charles Eastlake's collection. ⁵ We have here again the tendency to give effects of light and shade, perhaps better and brighter colour of rich impasto. A Virgin and Child belonging to the Marquis d'Azeglio belongs to the same order.

In conclusion, a just surprise may be expressed that Vasari should in his life of Bramante make Fra Carnovale the great architect's teacher in his art and in perspective, when it is certain that, being born in 1444, he (Bramante) might have learnt from Luciano Laurana,¹ or other great professors, such as Piero della Francesca.²

VENTURI (Arch. St. dell' Arte, 1893, p. 416). CAVALCASELLE describes them in his Italian edition of this work (vol. viii., pp. 268-9, and gives them to a follower of Piero. One of the panels in question represents the Nativity of the Virgin, the other her Presentation in the Temple. Both are remarkable for their splendid architectural settings.]

CHAPTER II

MELOZZO OF FORLÌ AND MARCO PALMEZZANO

THE name of Sixtus IV. has frequently been noticed in these pages. During a long pontificate of thirteen years, he promoted the interests of artists in Italy with a zeal scarcely surpassed by later popes. He had not been long raised to the chair of S. Peter before he undertook a series of great architectural and pictorial enterprises. He caused the Sixtine chapel to be erected in 1473, the Vatican library to be restored in 1475, and the churches of SS. Apostoli, S. Pietro in Vinculis, and S. Sisto at Rome to assume a new shape. His relatives the Della Roveres and Riarios shared his partiality for architectural improvements; and the whole family favoured with its regard, or supported by wages, a crowd of architects and painters from every province of Italy. We have seen with what perseverance Sixtus IV. called in succession, to Rome, Botticelli, Ghirlandaio, Cosimo Rosselli, Perugino and Signorelli. His chief architect, Baccio Pontelli,¹ bred under Francesco Giovanni Francione at Florence, distinguished himself so remarkably that Federigo of Montefeltro, who had perhaps made his acquaintance at the wedding of his daughter to Giovanni della Rovere in 1472, was induced to engage him for the completion of his palaces at Urbino and Gubbio. But Sixtus was not content to think that Roman pontiffs should always be obliged to ransack the cities of the Peninsula for artists, and he determined to found and to endow an Academy at Rome under the patronage of S. Luke. He gave that body a constitution which was promulgated with great solemnity; and he succeeded at once in enrolling several masters in its register.

Prominent amongst these was Melozzo of Forlì, whose name, inscribed in his own hand, "MELOTIUS PIC. PA." (Pictor Papalis), is one of the foremost in that interesting record.²

Forlì, Melozzo's native place, had long been under the sway of the local family of the Ordelaffi. It had not been celebrated for giving birth to any remarkable painter in the earlier centuries, but it had, like most cities, fostered the exertions of local artists, as the narrative in these pages sufficiently shows. It continued to do so, as may be fully proved by more modern examples, at Forno, at Imola, Pesaro, and Ancona.¹

It was the fortune of Melozzo to rise into manhood at a period when the influence of Piero della Francesca was powerfully felt throughout those parts of Italy in which Forlì is situated. He was of the Ambrosi of Forlì and born about 1438.² His infancy coincides with the manhood of Francesca, and we have the more ground for believing that the two men were connected by the ties of art; because, beside the clear derivation of Melozzo's style from that of Piero, the latter was not less known to his contemporary and fellow-countryman, Fra Luca Pacioli, than Melozzo, whom he praises for his acquirements and talents in perspective and architecture, and of whom he adds that his figures would have lived, had it been possible to infuse breath into them.³ It has been suggested indeed that he owed his education in part to Ansuino of Forlì,⁴ an assistant of Mantegna at the Eremitani of Padua in 1453-9;⁵ and it is true that in some of the remains of his works, we trace a Mantegnesque fulness, hardness and angularity in drapery, reminiscent of the Paduan school. But this characteristic is accompanied by others, and even merged in them, and

Of the same inferior style is a Coronation of the Virgin, with numerous saints, in the Lovatelli Gallery at Ravenna, signed: "HOC OPUS FECIT ANTONIUS ALIAS GHUIDACIUS IMOLĒSIS AÑO DÑI 1470, DIE 17 MENSIS OCTOBRIS." This is a grotesque tempera, with figures of ugly type and character, but curious for an exaggeration of gravity imitated from Piero della Francesca, and akin to that in the works of the school of the Boccatti of Camerino.

A little better perhaps than Antonius of Imola is Johannes Antonius of Pesaro, whose picture of S. John Evangelist in the Monte Pio of Rome is inscribed: "1463. 7 JANUARIJ JOHANNES ANTONIÛ. PISAURENSIS PĪX." In the character of this panel is a figure of S. Primiano in the monastery of that name at Ancona, with a kneeling monk in adoration before him.

² His death in 1494 is recorded by Leone Cobelli, a contemporary whose MS. chronicle is cited in REGGIANI, Alcune Memorie intorno al Pittore Marco Melozzo da Forlì (Forlì, undated but printed in 1834), p. 42. His epitaph in S. Trinità di Forlì has been preserved as follows: "D. S. MELOCHII FOROLIVIENSIS PICTORIS EXIMIÛ OSSA. VIXIT A. LVI. . . . M. OB. AN. . . ." If he died aged fifty-six in 1494, he was born in 1438.

may be due indirectly to examples which shed an undeniable influence throughout the Adriatic coast. Melozzo indeed combined Mantegnesque features to a slight extent with others of a more decisive nature derived from the teaching of Piero della Francesca, and from contact with Giovanni Santi of Urbino. Giovanni, who eulogises most of the painters of his time, alludes to Melozzo in terms suggestive of near ties of friendship. "Melozzo a me si caro," he says, "che in prospettiva ha steso tanto il passo."¹ The Forlivese would thus have been known to the Montefeltri; and the connection of Federigo with the Della Rovere as early as 1472² may have caused the employment of the painter at the court of Sixtus IV.

That he was a man of completely formed talents when he was promoted to the favour of the Pontiff is evident as much from his works at Rome as from the statements of contemporaries. Fra Luca Pacioli's opinion has been quoted: that of Fra Sabba da Castiglione is equally favourable;³ and a Roman compiler of the reign of Sixtus soars to fulsomeness in the epithets with which he honours his hero.⁴ All these authorities, and many more that might be added to the number, call him Melozzo da Forlì, a name by which he was known through life and remembered in death, and as distinctly preserved in contemporary records as in a funeral epitaph. It might seem needless indeed to insist on a fact so patent; yet we are bound to dwell upon it in order to meet the assertions of some modern writers who call him Marco Melozzo, because they give to him pictures which shall be shown to have been executed by his pupil Palmezzano.

A conclusive proof that Melozzo's style was derived from that of Piero della Francesca may be found in the fact that one of his masterpieces was for years assigned to the latter. Yet there is nothing more certain than that when Baccio Pontelli had finished the restoration of the Vatican library, and Sixtus IV. had appointed Platina to superintend the valuable collection which he formed there, Melozzo was employed (1475-80) to celebrate the event by a fresco, long an ornament of the walls, but subsequently transferred to canvas, and now in the gallery of the Vatican.⁵ It is apparent indeed that Sixtus, constant communication with the nobleman when he built his palace at Rome.¹

In the meanwhile Forlì, whose loyalty to the Ordelaffi had lasted for a considerable period, shook off its allegiance and gave itself to the Holy See in 1480. The person to whom Sixtus IV. entrusted the government was no other than Girolamo Riario, the patron of Melozzo, who may thus have returned to his native city with unusual advantages. That he did so is probable.

Yet in Forlì, the only production that can be assigned to Melozzo is a fresco originally painted as a sign above a shop and now in the Collegio,² representing a grocer's assistant in a violent state of exertion, open-mouthed, panting, but vulgar in type, wielding with both hands a pestle over a large mortar. The figure is not less remarkable for its realism, warts on the forehead and right cheek being imitated from nature, than for Melozzo's known ability in accurately measuring the effect of place. As the sign was above the shop, the mortar boy was conceived as if seen from below through a window, the projection of whose beam and side were given with perspective truth.³ The piece is thus essentially of interest as a link between the creations of Melozzo and those of his pupil Marco Palmezzano.

With the notices of it; however, we exhaust all that is known of Melozzo and his works, because albeit a portion of certain frescoes in S. Girolamo at Forlì discloses a style related to his, and he may have had a share in laying out the chapel, the paintings there are clearly by Marco Palmezzano. Whether they were ordered by Girolamo Riario is uncertain; but a ceiling in the Cappella del Tesoro of the Duomo at Loreto, adorned in the same manner under the direction of that nobleman, dates from the same time; and reveals also the hand of Palmezzano.

Whether Melozzo ever painted at Urbino may possibly remain doubtful. It has been usual to consider him the author of several amongst the portraits of celebrated men collected by Duke Federigo in one of the rooms of his palace. These, described by Bernardino Baldi,⁴ became at a comparatively recent period divided as heirlooms between the Roman families of Barberini and Sciarra. The latter series was purchased for the Campana Collection; now in Paris, and comprised portraits of Plato, S. Thomas, Bessarion, Virgil, Solon, ³ Though seriously injured some years since, the true character of this piece could be discerned. Since then it has been damaged in various additional ways, so that a true opinion can now hardly be formed. The figure is only seen to the knees in a sort of frock of a yellowish tone; the background having been originally blue. The tone of the whole was of a low key, tending to olive.

MELOZZO DA FORLÌ.

Vatican, Rome.

Pietro Apponio, Dante, S. Augustine, S. Jerome, Vittorino da Feltre, Aristotle, Sixtus IV., Ptolemy and Seneca.¹ Of these illustrious persons, the Venice Academy contains ten drawings in the character of Raphael's youth, and unanimously assigned to him by the most competent critics.² We conclude from this that they were sketched from the originals by young Santi at Urbino; and we assume at the same time that the originals were finished before 1482, the year of Federigo's death. The character of the series, in so far as it may be judged from the portion in the Campana collection, is not constantly the same. The Solon is painted in a Flemish, the Dante in an Italian style. S. Augustine is Flemish, S. Jerome is like the work of a man formed on the model of Van der Weyden, Vittorino da Feltre is Italian. This mixture is apparent in various ways, some figures being in freer action or motion than others. The drawing of the greater part is, however, Flemish; the draperies are angular, and the hands coarse. They are all boldly handled, in a transparent yet horny olive brown tone through which the ground and outlines appear. The shadows are high in surface; and a softer fusion or more perfect modelling distinguishes a part from the remainder. The obscurity which overhangs these productions is double; and it is not possible either to name the author or the person for whom they were done. But it is, obvious that, if they were really copied by Raphael in his youth, they cannot have been completed later than 1500. Their foreign aspect naturally suggests the inquiry whether Justus of Ghent might not have produced them. His labours at Urbino are comprised between the years 1462-75. The Flemish element in the gallery of heroes before us may be that of a Netherlander whose style should have been modified by contact with Italian painters at Urbino; but there is still room for conjecture in our present state of doubt; and it may be interesting to select some other artist for the sake of continuing the inquiry. Though pictures of Girolamo Genga's later time, and unlike the series before us, exist, we know of no early productions attributed to that artist. Youthful talents are prone to imitation, and Genga's name may not be excluded. This indeed is a prudent course when we consider that the Campana series is not an isolated example of Urbinese pictures.

Mr. Spence, in London, owns a panel which formerly belonged to

² [Raphael's authorship of these drawings has since been questioned by more than one competent critic.]

Signor Conti at Florence¹ and is supposed to have been originally in the sacristy of Urbino cathedral. A throne is occupied by a female ; a small organ lies at her side, to which she points as she presents a book to a youth kneeling in front of her. Whilst the colouring offers some analogy to that of the portraits in the Campana collection, its style is more Italian. A certain viscosity, reminiscent of that in the tones of pictures by the Pollaiuoli, is coupled with much boldness and ease of handling, and an impasto which reminds one of Rembrandt. The progress of the method apparent in these examples may be noted further in a fine bust portrait at three-quarters, in the costume of the close of the fifteenth century, in possession of Signor Leoni at Urbino.² A certain hardihood in the drawing in Signorelli's fashion—a hard viscous colour of dull olive tone, but shadowed with brown stippling and touched up with high surface lights of a diaphanous quality—the whole well modelled and glazed, are characteristic in this piece.

More modern still, under the same principles, an allegory similar to that of Mr. Spence, is in the Berlin Museum under the name of Bartolommeo Suardi or Bramantino.³ The female on the throne is dressed in gold brocade, in a rich architectural space, on whose upper frieze one reads : “DURANTIS COMES S.P.R.” The Count of Castel Durante is the ruler of Urbino ; and the arms of the Duchy, quartered with the keys and tiara on a shield, may suggest to one cognisant of heraldry which of the Dukes is here represented receiving the book. The style is purely Italian, of the rise of the sixteenth century, and the colour of rich impasto.

It is needless perhaps to remind the reader that none of these creations are by Melozzo ; but they illustrate the course of a particular form of art in a particular place. As for Girolamo Genga's name, it might apply perhaps with greatest force to the last-named allegory. The pictures previously named must remain a matter for further study.⁴

² Via Urbino, and still in possession of that gentleman in 1859. The portrait is life size, the panel 16 inches by 13. The cap of a dark green, the coat dark brown.

FLORENCE. Uffizi. No. 1563. Gabriel, and on the back of the panel half a figure of S. Benedict.

No. 1564. Mary at Annunciation, and on the back of the panel half a figure of an Evangelist (? S. Luke).

These fine works—originally organ doors—have been recently acquired by the Uffizi Gallery from Prof. Luigi Grassi, of Florence.

Melozzo died in 1494, leaving behind him Marco di Antonio Palmezzano, who seems to have found employment under the same patron as his master.¹ The date of his birth is unknown,² but he lived far into the sixteenth century and has left behind a number of important pieces that are now scattered throughout the galleries of Europe.

In a chapel in S. Biagio e S. Girolamo at Forlì, a furnace vault, resting upon two full walls and upon two arches supported by square pillars, is painted so as to simulate the appearance of a panelled dome resting on a balustrade, in front of which, or on which, eight figures are placed sitting in varied attitudes and action. An attempt is made to show the thickness of the section of the dome by feigned openings of a polygon shape at the angles of the lunette and arch spandrels. The sky is supposed to be seen through the openings, and the view of it to be intercepted in part by children carrying scrolls. The place usually occupied by the lantern is a circular shield with armorial bearings,³ surrounded by heads of cherubs. The figures are foreshortened in a manner for which Melozzo was celebrated, a manner which his pupil is known to have inherited; and the decoration, arranged in its totality so as to strengthen the illusion of the spectator looking up from the floor of the chapel, is the work of a man of great experience in the use of the compass and rule and in the working of architectural plans. Melozzo had already given proof of his ability in this line of pictorial ornamentation at the SS. Apostoli in Rome, and elsewhere.⁴ He and his pupil were the continuators of the practice of Piero della Francesca and Signorelli, diversifying it with a novel variety of perspective, and invention of forms. They were

At Loreto, in the Santa Casa sacristy, are some frescoes—in cupola, Prophets and Angels; on the wall, the Entry into Jerusalem. According to CAVALCASELLE (Storia della Pittura, vol. viii., p. 287 et seq.), these frescoes, although designed by Melozzo, were probably executed, in part at least, by Palmezzano. CAVALCASELLE in his Italian edition, vol. viii., pp. 296–8, describes a panel belonging to the King's Collection at Windsor, representing Duke Frederic with his son Guidobaldo seated in an ample hall, and listening to a third figure, supposed to be Vittorino da Feltre, who is reading from a book. This panel, according to Cavalcaselle, displays the characteristics of a genuine work of Melozzo. Signor Venturi ascribes to Melozzo, among other works, the striking panel of S. Sebastian with two donors, No. 6820 of the Corsini Gallery at Rome, but Mr. Berenson, Mr. Perkins, and other critics give this panel to Antoniazio.]

in their age the great illustrators of the system which in the sequel was perfected by Correggio in his cupola paintings, by the Carracci and the most skilful of the so-called barocchi, Luca Giordano and Pietro da Cortona. As exponents of this style, in fact, Melozzo and Palmezzano were naturally esteemed; and although Mantegna, a great master of perspective in his day, was acknowledged as such even by his contemporaries, he did not originate, any more than Piero della Francesca, Signorelli, or the Florentines, the particular mode of applying its laws which shed lustre on the painters of whom we are now treating. These, however, but Palmezzano chiefly, were geometers and monumental draughtsmen whose figures, though accurate in the block of proportion and contour, were not otherwise more refined than was necessary for their positions in given spaces. The result to them of contemplating art under this point of view was a certain hardness and rigidity which became in Palmezzano a sculptural immobility, extending alike to action, details, and drawing. A coloured bas-relief or stone-model, placed at a certain height and imitated according to the laws of perspective, would produce the same impression as one of his decorations, being correct, well proportioned and sculptural, but hard and angular in outline and naturally lifeless, and deriving little additional charm from a dull yellow-red flesh tone shadowed with brown. That these are the characteristic features in the ceiling we have attempted to describe, is undoubted. They are clear in the broken and rigid figures of naked children, whose defects in this respect are striking as compared with those of Melozzo, whilst in the rest of the work, Palmezzano exhibits inferiority in the reproduction of movement or of flowing drapery, and betrays his comparatively feeble handling in a higher surface colour, and the use of cross hatching in the modelling of parts.¹ Like Melozzo, he has no feeling for colour, hence no atmosphere. He displays fancy and taste, however, in the ornaments of pilasters and friezes. Human figures supporting vases, themselves receptacles for monsters, winding tracery of stems, leaves, and scrolls, all on a dark green ground, cover the pilasters of the Riario Chapel, and reveal a style not unlike that of similar ones in Signorelli's frescoes at Orvieto, and not inferior to those of Pinturicchio and Spagna; and we thus trace the origin of the taste for decoration which is in later artists of this school, such as Rondinelli, Zagganelli called Cotignola, Cordelagi or Giovanni da Faenza, better known as Bertucci, all men in whom this secondary feature is stamped with a mixture of Bolognese, Ferrarese, Paduan and Venetian art.

No sensible difference is observable between the painting of the ceiling and that of the solitary wall which remains in its pristine state.

This wall is divided into two courses. In the lunette, a number of persons kneel or stand in the centre of a court attending to the feat of a juggler setting two cocks against each other. A man on the left, in the light dress of the period presents his back to the spectator, and reminds one, by the freedom of an action expressing surprise, of Signorelli's powerful creations. A broad flight of steps, and landings winding round from the right of the picture and pivoting on a broad pillar, is enlivened with figures. Two men stand to the right on the landing, of whom it has been said, upon very slender grounds, that they are portraits of Melozzo and Palmezzano.¹ Nearer the centre, two youths of vulgar features on the steps are evidently trembling at the juggler's feats, whilst on the left a male and female are seen coming down, followed by two persons in converse.

In the lower course, parted into a double arcade with a groined vaulting, a rider in the garb of a pilgrim carries a dead body on the crupper of his horse, and is followed by a pilgrim on foot, whilst three figures stand to the left.² In the arcade to the right a kneeling man is about to be decapitated. Guards are at hand, and a gallows has been erected in the landscape distance. On a scroll fixed to the central pillar are the remnants of the inscription: "MARCUS PALMEZZANUS PICTOR FOROLIIENSIS M" The date is illegible, but a monogram follows it.

To characterise this work would be to repeat remarks suggested by the ceiling. The perspective is true; the figures are well arranged, and a due subordination of parts is preserved. The costumes are rich, and some faces are pleasing, but the drawing is hard and angular, the forms unwrought, and the draperies broken, whilst the colour is without charm.³

Whether painted originally for Girolamo Riario or for another patron, the frescoes of this chapel at Forlì are valuable for the clue they give to the author of an exactly similar work in the Cappella del Tesoro in the Duomo of Loreto. The arms on the centre of the dome in this place are clearly those of the Della Rovere. Eight prophets sit on the balustrade,⁴ whose ornaments are copious and beautiful, but the curve of the dome is not divided into lozenge panelling. It is cut into sections by radii or ribs of ornament, each section being filled with an angel, foreshortened so as to appear in the act of approaching the spectator, and bearing a symbol of the Passion. The type and form of heads, reminiscent of those of Melozzo, seem truly to date from the period when he was patronised by Girolamo Riario. But the same nobleman may have befriended Palmezzano likewise, and the execution, which is richer and better than that of the chapel at Forlì is clearly Palmezzano's, who thus had occasion to study Signorelli's ceiling in the sacristy of the same church.

² In this group again, it is affirmed, are Melozzo and Palmezzano with Sigismondo Ferrarese holding a compass. REGGIANI, ubi sup., pp. 46-7.

In assigning to Palmezzano two important wall paintings, we have pointed out the difference between his style and that of his master. This difference is traceable in pictures on panel, and not less on those which bear the signature of "MARCUS DE MELOTIUS" than on others more distinctly inscribed with Palmezzano's name.

There are but two pieces with the inscription "MARCUS DE MELOTIUS." They shall now be described in their order. The first, in the Chiesa de' Zoccolanti at Matellica, near Fabriano, represents the Virgin Enthroned with the naked Infant in benediction between SS. Francis and Catherine. A Pietà and five saints fill the lunette. Three saints stand in a pilaster at each side, resting on a plinth in which is also a saint. In the predella between the two plinths are : the Last Supper, the Martyrdom of S. Catherine, and S. Francis receiving the Stigmata. The Virgin's throne rests on a sand-glass pedestal, and a scroll at its base reads thus :

MARCHUS DE MELOTIUS FOROLIVIENSIS FATIEBAT, AL TEMP. DE FRATE ZORZO GUARDIANO DEL M^o CCCCXI.

A peculiar monogram closes the inscription. The relation between this picture and the frescoes in S. Biagio at Forlì is obvious, in the rigidity and motionlessness of the figures, the angularity and hardness of the drawing, and the copious broken folds of the double draperies, whose Umbrian character is at the same time reminiscent of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, and Lorenzo di Credi. The colour is hard, reddish in the flesh tints, and of much body ; and the architectural ornament is copious and tasteful. A tendency to roundness in the heads reveals an approximation to the painters of Treviso and Friuli, for instance to Cima da Conegliano.¹

The second piece in the SS. Annunziata or Carmine of Forlì ² is an apotheosis of S. Anthony the Abbot, enthroned in a portico between SS. John the Baptist and Sebastian. The throne on which the saint stands is similar in general shape to that of the picture at Matellica, and bears a scroll in its centre inscribed : "MARCHUS DE MELOTIUS, PICTOR FOROLIVENSIS FACIEBAT," with traces of the monogram.³

² [Now in the Pinacoteca, No. 119.]

The proportions of the figures are undoubtedly good, yet their character is not different from that of the Madonna at Matellica.

The contradiction which the inscription on this altarpiece would introduce into the chronology of Melozzo's life, if it were assigned to him, has been remarked by the commentators of Vasari, who settle the matter summarily by altering the date from 1501 to 1491. Others have accepted the contradiction, and Signor Reggiani has gone so far in his eagerness to multiply examples of Melozzo that he introduced the signature "MARCHUS MELOZZI" in a Pietà originally forming part of an altarpiece in the Duomo of Forlì, and now in the National Gallery.¹ Yet the altarpiece in the Duomo is proved to have been finished in 1506, and is signed. "MARCUS PALMEZANUS FACIEBAT."

The finest picture given to Melozzo, however, is the Virgin and Child seated on a sand-glass pedestal, between the standing SS. Michael and James the Less in the Orfanotrofio delle Michelline at Faenza. A landscape is seen through the open lodge in which the Virgin is enthroned. A warrior on horseback, an apparition of S. Michael on Mount Gargano, are in its foreground and distance, to the left. Two saints are in the rear to the right. In the lunette, the Eternal appears amongst angels. The richness of architecture in parti-coloured marbles, the octagon pedestal resting on pillars and filled with diamond ornaments as in the Ferrarese school, the tracery on friezes, are characteristic of Palmezzano. The Infant Christ is the counterpart of those bearing scrolls in the chapel at S. Biagio of Forlì, but the figures generally are more pleasing, and have less defects than are usual in the average of Palmezzano's Madonnas. The colour is of high body, and handled with ease. Yet the reddish general tone peculiar to the master is everywhere perceptible.² This fine production was ordered of Palmezzano on the 12th of June, 1497, by the prior of the company of S. Michelino of Faenza, and on the 16th of March 1500, the painter gave a discharge for sixty ducats for his labour.³ All the pictures enumerated in the foregoing pages have

² The Eternal in the lunette is of inferior execution to the rest. Four vertical splits stopped with colour spoil the heads of the saints at the sides and other parts. The flesh tints have also been retouched in some places.

³ "12 Junii 1497. Mag. Antonius ol. Santis a credentiis et Mag. Ant. ol. Siverii Maneghelle priores societatis S. Michilini de Faven. dederunt M. Marco qd. been assigned to Melozzo of Forlì on the obvious ground of their superior excellence when compared with the general series of Palmezzano's works. But this ground is removed when it appears that the best of these choice examples is not by Melozzo, but by his pupil. The contract for the Madonna of Faenza is therefore of value as it proves the ability of Palmezzano in 1497, and justifies the presumption that having worked long under Melozzo, his best efforts are due to the period immediately succeeding that master's death. It is evident at the same time that Marco was willing at first to rest his chance of fame upon the acknowledged fact that he was Melozzo's pupil; and hence the custom of signing his earlier works "MARCUS DE MELOTIUS." During thirty-seven years of the sixteenth century he painted a great number of pictures, all of them in oil, and now scattered throughout the galleries of Europe. They have all the same general character, reminding one fundamentally of Melozzo, frequently of the Umbrian school and of Pinturicchio, casually of the Lombards and of the Luini, and in landscapes, of Cima, whose clear atmosphere, however, they do not rival. Marco's portrait was till lately in possession of the Palmezzani family, and is now in the Pinacoteca of Forlì, with the inscription: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS NOB. FOROL. SEMET. PINXIT OCTAVA ÆTATIS SUA 1536." It is the likeness of a white-haired, aged man, smiling open-mouthed, in a white skirt and black dress, with pallet and brush in hand, heavily painted in tones now dulled by time. His bony face shows a good-humoured vulgarity, but reveals vigour remarkable in a man of eighty as the inscription purports him to be. If indeed we interpret the words octava in the above sense, we find that Palmezzano was born in 1456.

His works may be classed as follows:—

Forlì. S. Biagio e S. Girolamo.—In the fourth chapel, to the right of the entrance to this church, is an altarpiece of the Virgin and Child on a throne, in front of which an angel plays the guitar. A scroll on the throne bears the words "MARCHUS PALMIZÆUS PICTOR FOROLIVIËSIS FACIEBAT."

Marcus pro . . . confesus est habuisse ducatos viginti. Ego Bartholomeus olim fris Philippi de Taurellis not fav." The discharge, dated March 16, 1500, runs as follows: "Cancellatum fuit presens instrum. debiti ducatorum 60 de Mandato dicti M. Marci et ad instantiam dictor. M. Antonii Maneghelle et M. Antonii Santis quia fuit confessus se esse integre satisfact. et solut. et etiam de omni pictura facta hac usque in Societati s̄i Michaelis &c. Act faven. in domo mei not. present. Petro babini armaroli et Antonio M. Andree ab armis test. Ego Bartolom. de Taurellis rogatus scripti et cancellavi." This extract was made for the authors by Don Marciolo Valgimile of Forlì, from the contract in the Archivio Notarile at Faenza; but the piece has been printed in the Calendario Faentino for 1857.

To the left kneel a man and a child, to the right a female and a child. Flavio Biondo¹ and Buriel² pretend that these are portraits of Girolamo Riario, Caterina Sforza, and their children; but Reggiani³ thinks they are members of the Acconzi family, patrons of the chapel in which the picture is situated. The sides of the centre piece contain SS. Catherine of Alexandria, Domenico, Anthony of Padua and Sebastian. A predella is filled by small figures of Christ, apostles, and saints. The date of 1486, given to this altarpiece, is conjectural. It is not a fine picture, but of paltry and dry execution with considerable flatness. It may be doubted whether the work be by Palmezzano in person, the domed ceiling of the chapel being decorated with wall paintings by men of his school.

Milan. Brera. [No. 469].—A Nativity. The Child on straw is adored by the Virgin; and S. Joseph sits on the opposite side. The Magi and Shepherds are seen approaching from the distance. This is an abraded and restored picture with a mutilated inscription of a suspicious character on a scroll as follows: "MARCHUS PALMIZANUS FOROLIVENS . . . FECIERUNT MCCCCLXXXII." The piece is, however, quite in Palmezzano's manner.

Milan. Brera. [No. 471].—The Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. John the Baptist, Peter, Dominic and Mary Magdalen; distance a landscape. A modern inscription in capitals reads: "MARCHUS PALMEZZANUS FOROLIVIENSE FECERUNT MCCCCLXXXIII." The picture is pretty, and treated like a tempera, but has been restored in former times in the figures of the Virgin and S. Dominic. The date may be incorrect.

These two pieces are the only ones in which the strange word "FECERUNT" occurs, but in both cases the inscriptions appear to have been tampered with.

Same Gallery. [No. 470].—A Coronation of the Virgin on a high pedestal. Two angels play on each side. In front are two kneeling monks, half the size of life; and on a scroll the words: ". . . . PALMIZANUS DA FORLÌ" The picture is pretty, and in the Umbrian character.

Berlin Museum. [No. 1129].—Christ crowned with Thorns and carrying His Cross. A fine creation of Palmezzano in which the type is reminiscent of those of the Leonardesque school copied by the Cotignola and others. It is inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMEZZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT M.CCCCCIII."

Berlin Museum.—Not exhibited, but catalogued in the catalogue of 1830. Christ erect in front of the Cross, inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMEZZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT MCCCCCXV."

Berlin Museum. [No. 1087].—A Virgin and Child between SS. Barbara and Jerome, almost a monochrome. The usual pedestal and colonnade are in this piece, which is inscribed: "MARCUS PALMEZZANUS PINCTOR M."

Dublin, National Gallery. Late Bromley Collection.—The Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. John the Baptist and Lucy, with an angel in front of the throne playing a guitar, inscribed: "MARCUS PALMEZZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS MCCCCCVIII."

Munich Gallery. [No. 1026].—Virgin and Child on the usual pedestal between SS. Peter, Francis, Anthony the Hermit and Paul, with an angel playing in front, a fine picture inscribed on a scroll: "MARCUS PALMEZANUS P. FOROLIVIANUS FACIEBAT. 1515."

Ravenna. Palazzo Rasponi.—Christ (life size) on a pedestal, raises one hand high in benediction, an angel playing at the base, and SS. Roch and Sebastian at the sides, the whole under a portico through which a landscape and two hermits are seen. This is a fine picture of the master, of a dull yellowish but well fused colour, the Christ reminiscent of the Luini, inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVENSIS FACIEBAT MCCCCXXIII." The date may be 1524. We need but mention by the way a pietà here assigned to Melozzo, all but a copy of a splendid Bellini (Gio.), falsely attributed to Mantegna in the Vatican.

Faenza. Municipal Gallery.—Christ going to Calvary. Not signed.

Rome. Museum of S. Giovanni Laterano.—Virgin and Child under a colonnade, from the key of which a lamp is suspended, SS. John the Baptist, Francis, Anthony the Abbot and Dominic at the sides, on a scroll the words: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT MCCCCXXXVII." Although type and form are not pleasing, the picture is good and shows no decline of power.

Same Museum.—Virgin and Child on the usual quaint pedestal between SS. John the Baptist and Jerome, with an angel in front playing the viol. The scene is laid in a much ornamented colonnade, the execution, as before, in oil, much stippled. The piece is injured, however, and a scroll originally inscribed is now bare.

Bologna. Galleria Ercolani.—Another picture is here, dated 1537, of which the notes have been mislaid by the authors.

Forlì. Pinacoteca.—From the suppressed Church della Missione. Christ going to Calvary, and carrying His Cross (four life-size bust figures). The Saviour's type reminds one of those of the Leonardesque school. The colour is reddish and hard, and the faces of the attendant figures are vulgar; inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT MCCCCXXXV."

Forlì. Pinacoteca. [No. 122].—Christ giving the Communion to the Apostles, with the inscription in front: "MARCHUS PALMIZANUS FACIEBAT." The scene is laid in a lodge through which one sees Satan in pilgrim's garb, tempting Christ. On the right, the Saviour erect gives the Host to a kneeling Apostle, whilst the rest are in similar attitudes on the left. S. John Evangelist stands with the cup in rear of the Redeemer. Some hardness and rigidity may be noticed in this picture, but the character, types, and execution are similar to those in the wall painting at S. Biagio and Loreto. This piece was noticed by Vasari in the cathedral of Forlì, where it once stood, and was assigned in his first edition to Rondinelli.¹

London, National Gallery. [No. 596].—Pietà. Lunette of the foregoing, a fine work. The whole piece is noticed in Albertini's MS. Chronicle, and described there as placed on the altar in 1506.

Forlì. Chiesa dell' Annunziata vulgo Carmine.—In the choir of the church is a fine altarpiece injured by repainting in the shadows, representing the Annunciation. The Virgin, seated before a little desk, is surprised at the appearance of the angel kneeling before her. The types, the draperies, are amongst the best of the master. A landscape without much atmosphere is seen through an arcade, in front of which is a garland of seraphim. A scroll on a column to the left is bare. [Now in the Pinacoteca, No. 113.]

Forlì. S. Maria de' Servi, vulgo S. Pellegrino. Sacristy.—A small Annunciation like the foregoing, and of the same beauty, inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMIZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT." [Now in the Pinacoteca, No. 120.]

Forlì. S. Mercuriale, Cappella de' Ferri.—An altarpiece, in its frame of the period, representing the Conception of the Virgin. Mary kneels on the right, with S. Stephen behind her, on the left a child kneeling, S. Rufillus, repainted in the seventeenth century as S. Barbatian, and S. Mercuriale. In the upper corner to the left, the Eternal appears amidst seraphim, and reminds the beholder of a similar type by Pinturicchio in the frescoes of Spelle. In the lunette, Christ rises from the tomb, and the guard in foreshortened attitude sleep in front; the execution being reminiscent of that of Cima and the Bellini. Two prophets occupy medallions in the angles of the square circumscribing the lunette at the Virgin's feet. A scroll bears the words: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT," and the monogram. The predella is divided into four parts containing S. Peter and a monk, the Salutation, the Martyrdom of S. Stephen and S. Paul, and an anchorite. The altarpiece is painted in a dry, dull manner, and is coldly worked out. The predella, however, in the Umbrian style, is amongst the best creations of Palmezzano.

Forlì. Same Church.—Fourth chapel to the right of the portal. Virgin and Child between S. Catherine of Alexandria and another saint, with a landscape distance. This is not one of the fine productions of Marco. It is thin in colour and painted alla prima, inscribed: "MARCHUS PALMEZANUS PICTOR FOROLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT."

Forlì. Same Church.—Third chapel to the right of the portal. The Crucifixion. S. Giovanni Gualberto presenting a kneeling soldier, the Magdalen to the right, and a landscape. This is a much injured picture, in which the head of the Magdalen is new. The colour is of a dull purple and opaque, yet there is no other difference between it and a genuine Palmezzano than inferior execution. A scroll bears the mutilated inscription: "MARCHUS . . . PICTOR FU."

Forlì. S. Trinità della Torre.—In the style and character of the foregoing is a Virgin and Child between saints in the sacristy of this church, a feeble piece apparently by a pupil, and inscribed on a scroll: "MARCHUS . . . PICTOR DE FOR . . . FACIE . . . M." Casali's Guida di Forlì (ubi sup., p. 19) gives the inscription as follows: "MARCHUS VALERIUS MOROLINUS DE FORLIVIENSIS FACIEBAT MDIIL." The inscription of the Crucifixion he also gives thus: "MARCHUS . . . A . . . E . . . IS . . . LI . . . DRI . . . MC . . ." He adds, "the painter here named is not otherwise known." The words on the scroll of the Madonna in S. Trinità are uncertain. The name of Valerius may have been there. But we must be cautious at Forlì, for we have seen how pictures are tampered with there. Still if we assume Marcus Valerius Morolinus as a conventional name for inferior works in Palmezzano's school, we may place the two foregoing in that class. [Now in Pinacoteca, No. 143.]

Forlì. S. Antonio Abate.—Half-length of the Virgin's Meeting with S. Elizabeth, not without merit.

Forlì. Pinacoteca.—Virgin and Child, and S. Joseph. A bare scroll is on the front of the picture, which has less the character of Palmezzano than of his school.

England. Late Lord Northwick's Collection.—No. 145 at the Manchester Exhibition, under the name of Raphael. Incredulity of S. Thomas: to the right, S. Antony of Padua presenting a kneeling patron; originally in the Solly Collection, where it was called a Perugino, this is a fine work by Palmezzano.

At Forlì, a S. Jerome, signed "MARCHUS PALMEZZANUS MCCCCXXXIII," is but a poor copy.

CHAPTER III

GIOVANNI SANTI

WE are indebted to the industry and zeal of men of the present century for the most precious details respecting the life and works of the father of Raphael. Seldom has it been the fortune of a youth bred to art in the atelier of his father, to grow and flourish in the paternal profession with such luxuriance that his fame has obscured that of his progenitor. History but too frequently records examples in which the progeny is content with the laurels of its ancestors and consents to the happy ease of mediocrity. But, if Giovanni Santi has been rescued from oblivion,¹ because we like to trace the smallest particularities connected with the rise and progress of Raphael, it would be an error to suppose that this is his sole claim to the attention of historians.

Giovanni Santi was one of the men who contributed to the brilliancy of the constellation in which Piero della Francesca, Signorelli and Melozzo shone with such conspicuous prominence; and we know enough of his career and influence to be able to affirm that their omission would form a very sensible gap in the sum total of elements out of which the talent of Raphael was formed.

We shall first endeavour to extract from the minute narratives of Pungileoni and Passavant the few facts which are of special interest. Giovanni's grandfather Peruzzolo was married and settled at Colbordolo in the country of Urbino in 1418. His small property in land and houses having been plundered and burnt by Sigismondo Malatesta in 1446, the family wandered in 1450 to the capital of Urbino, where a house, hired from the brotherhood of S. M. della Misericordia, sheltered them. Sante, Giovanni's father, succeeded, on the death of Peruzzolo, to a huckster and general dealer's business,² which prospered with him so that he was enabled to purchase lands of some value in 1457 and 1461, and in 1464 to buy a double house in the Contrada del Monte at Urbino, famous now as the birthplace of Raphael. Giovanni Santi alludes to the vicissitudes which his family underwent, in a dedicatory epistle, written towards the close of his life, to Guidobaldo of Montefeltro, describing the paternal homestead devoured by fire, the loss of substance and the struggles of the succeeding time. He was not bred to art, he admits, but, "having tried various ways of getting a livelihood, he gave himself up at last to the wonderful art of painting, of which he does not disdain to be called a follower."¹ It is still a question when he began that art, and under whom he learnt it. We have not to recapitulate how the Dukes of Urbino fostered architecture, sculpture, and painting in their capital, or to enumerate afresh the artists who laboured there. We do not know the date of Giovanni Santi's birth; but we infer from the vivid memory which he had of the sack of Colbordolo, that in 1446 he was of an age to realise the terrors of the siege and of the cruelties which accompanied it. Raphael was born in the house which his grandfather Sante had purchased in 1464; and it may therefore be presumed that Giovanni Santi lived and kept shop in common with his father. We are induced to think that he had some standing as a painter in Urbino when Paolo Uccello appeared in 1468, and when the company of the Corpus Domini charged him with the defraying of expenses attending the stay of Piero della Francesca in 1469. That his own talents were considered subordinate to theirs might be deduced from their employment, to his exclusion. But that he felt no jealousy of Piero is apparent from his accepting, as it were, the office of his host.² Who indeed can tell whether earlier ties had not already existed between them? Who can say whether Melozzo of Forlì, at one time clearly under the direction of Piero, had not sounded in Giovanni's ear the praises of his master? Melozzo, "so dear to Santi," is not known to have lived in Urbino or even to have visited it. Yet where else can the two men have met? It may be that Santi, like most painters, wandered from place to place. It has been suggested that he might have accompanied Federigo of Urbino (1468) to Milan,³ but it is not ascertained that he was ever in the service of that prince,⁴ nor was a single work of his produced without the Duchy. But Urbino, during the reign of Federigo, was a city in which a man of parts had every chance of successfully developing his faculties. The biographer Vespasiano has left a minute description of the transactions of that reign. He has sketched the daily life in the city; and it is impossible to imagine one in which despotism assumed a paternal and patriarchal aspect under more singular circumstances. We may conceive a mountain chieftain at the head of his clan, personally acquainted with every member of it, awarding praise or preferment to the obedient, chastising the unruly, by all equally beloved. But we connect this mutual relation of a ruler and his people with primitive habits and the rudeness of uncivilised ages. At Urbino, Federigo stood in the position of a father to the people of the town and its neighbourhood, holding an open audience to all comers, joining the crowd of the market-place, at home in every man's house. But he was surrounded at the same time by artists, by men of science and of letters, who shared his favour with the captains of his council in the field. We can fully understand how Giovanni Santi should have risen in purpose and in thought above the level of his father's shop, when the atmosphere of the city was redolent with breezes from a higher sphere; how, mixing with a society which so completely eschewed exclusiveness, he should gradually feel the incentives to improvement in the pursuit of art and of letters. For Giovanni Santi was not only an artist of fair attainments; he had the ambition of being thought a poet; and his Rhyme Chronicle, so often quoted in these pages, is just such a production as might issue from one who feels impulsively, and who sometimes happily clothes his thoughts in language; but who lacked completely the education required for correct writing.

It is unfortunate for the true judgment of Santi's career that we should possess no early examples of his manner; but we may conjecture that he had fully completed his pictorial education when he was commissioned by Piero Tiranni to decorate a chapel in S. Giovanni Battista, now S. Domenico, of Cagli. The pictorial ornaments of this place have generally been attributed to a later time; and Pungileoni has been followed by most subsequent writers in an assertion, for which he gives no proofs, namely that the Cappella Tiranni was painted in 1492. The truth is that some at least of the frescoes in S. Domenico of Cagli were painted in 1482, and it is fair to suppose that the rest date from the same period.

Pietro Tiranni was of a patrician family in Cagli, and was attached to the court of Urbino, where he held (1502) the office of chancellor or secretary to Federigo's daughter, Giovanna della Rovere.¹ The loss of his wife broke up their home at Cagli in 1481; but he signalled his fondness for his lost partner in an affectionate epitaph ; his taste, by choosing Bramante to carve her funeral urn, and Santi to paint the wall against which it is erected. Whilst Pietro exhausts his power of language in the words of the epitaph : "Non fuit uxori castè carior alter, gratior et conjux non fuit ulla Viro," his sorrow is symbolised in Santi's fresco of the Redeemer up to his middle in the tomb, grieving and attended by SS. Jerome and Buonaventura. The marble urn containing the ashes of the departed lady is placed in front of the fresco, which was clearly first completed ; and on the plinth is the inscription, which concludes with the words : "BAPTISTĒ CONJUGI PIENTISS. PE. CALLEN. S. D. MCCCCLXXXI."¹ A mournful interest is created by the expression in the Redeemer's head, whose face, however, is of a bony Umbrian type, somewhat marred by a large nose. His frame is lean and square, searchingly anatomised. Overweight of head is noticeable in S. Buonaventura. The hands are unwrought, as we are accustomed to see them in the works of Melozzo, the heads well defined, with a slightly abrupt passage from light to shadow, and the latter darkly stippled up to the edge of the outline. The general tone is a liquid water colour, of a brown grey yellow.²

It is difficult to trace a difference of period between this fresco, which is obviously by Gio. Santi, and the wall paintings of the adjacent chapel. That sacred space, indeed, is said to have been erected and endowed by Pietro Tiranni in memory of his lost wife ;³ and hence it may be supposed to have been decorated shortly after her death. Its architecture, assigned to Bramante and worthy of his fame, is beautiful, being a simple arch resting on columns and square pillars, and the front being adorned with parti-coloured marbles and a frieze in dead colour. Two medallions at the upper angles of the front are filled with the Virgin and Angel Annunciate. In the vaulting, the Redeemer gives the benediction ; angels, in prayer, or playing divers instruments, seraphs, are about Him. The two subjects of the Resurrection and the Virgin Enthroned amidst saints fill the lunette and wall below it. But the painter and the architect clearly understood each other ; and Santi endeavours to increase the depth of the chapel by producing the lines of the real entablature into his picture according to the laws of perspective. He thus simulates a beautiful stone court, above which an opening discloses a rocky foreground, and a distance of hill and vale. In this opening, the Saviour has risen from the tomb, a conical mound, whose door yawns directly behind Him. He advances with the banner in His hand, giving a blessing, whilst the guards sleep all round Him, lying, sitting or leaning back, in various attitudes. Below this scene, the Virgin sits in a beautiful stone-tabernacle holding the Infant, erect and all but naked, to the adoration of two angels and four saints at her sides. It is not possible, when contemplating the Saviour advancing out of the tomb, to divest one's mind from memories of Melozzo da Forlì, whose defect of rigidity appears to have passed to Santi. Nor is it less remarkable to notice in the exaggerated swing which the painter has given in a certain stiff way to the figure, the germ of a peculiarity which became developed in the later Umbrians, and is visible in the works of Alunno.¹ The fine and well foreshortened forms of the soldiers produce much the same impression as that of the Redeemer. There is something Mantegnesque in the creation of at least one of them, a certain affectation in the arrangement of the place and attitude of the remainder ; but one, seated with his head and elbows on his knee, is graceful, and seems to foreshadow the coming of Raphael.

The old Umbrian tenderness and grace reign in the group of the Virgin and Child in spite of some squareness in the shape and pose of the latter. The youthful angel on the left, looking on with his arms crossed, reveals a fine Raphaellesque type, a juvenile face encircled with chestnut locks ; and the draperies, improved from those of Melozzo, have some Umbrian character. This very youthfulness and grace are no doubt the sole grounds for the statement that Santi here depicted his own son. The bowing angel in prayer on the opposite side is less fine and more immediately derived from Melozzo. S. Peter, on the extreme left, distantly suggests by his movement the grandeur of similar figures in the masterpieces of Fra Bartolommeo and Raphael ; a figure somewhat square of head, but pregnant with such character as, simplified and remodelled, might serve to embody the talents of greater men of a later time. There is less to be said of the S. Francis at S. Peter's side, or of S. Thomas Aquinas,² behind the Baptist to the right of the Virgin. But S. John is a repetition, as to pose and action, of the Saviour in the lunette, with such changes of raiment and of features as the nomenclature required, but, if stripped of its externals, taken from the same model. Yet even in this artless repetition one traces the existence of a correct experience in Santi as regards perspective; for the Redeemer is properly foreshortened to suit the position He holds, and the Baptist is drawn correctly on the level of the plane of the picture. Meanwhile we must not omit to notice the open eyes and mouths, the high bony forehead and balled nose, the wig, which detract from the dignity of S. John's aspect; nor shall we fail to observe that the attitude is at once rigid and strained after the custom of Melozzo, or that the drawing generally has the hard dryness peculiar to him and to Palmezzano. The traces of Melozzo's influence on Santi are, however, most visible in the Christ who gives the benediction in the vaulting, and in the angels who surround Him. It is in the aged type of this figure and the foreshortened aspect of the whole that we trace an exact resemblance to similar creations in the frescoes of the SS. Apostoli at Rome.

² There is no doubt that this figure represents S. Thomas Aquinas. The Sun, which is his special symbol, forms a brooch to his dress.

The entire series, however, more or less discloses the same general characteristics—dry, hard drawing, absence of half tints or reflections, untrimmed and often coarse forms;¹ draperies of a good intention, a little festooned and full perhaps, but Peruginesque in fold, a cold general local tone, grey half tints, red shadows and white lights, the planes of tone being defined with Mantegnesque precision, and the inky shadows stippled up to the outlines. Remarkable correctness may be noted in the reproduction of projected shadows.²

Santi does not approve himself a genius of the highest order, but he shows at Cagli a respectable proficiency. The mysteries of the science of architecture and perspective are known to him, which is no small merit if we consider that the old schools of Gubbio and Fabriano were ignorant of the scientific progress of the fifteenth century. On the other hand, it is not surprising that he should have mastered so much, if we suppose him to have meditated the examples of Melozzo. These indeed would have sufficed, even if Santi had also had the advantage of analysing the works, if not of forming an acquaintance with the person, of Mantegna. It has been suggested that the two artists may have met at Mantua; but we know of no occasion on which Santi should have had a chance to visit that city except in 1486, when Guidobaldo of Montefeltro was betrothed to Elizabeth Gonzaga; and at that time his style had long been developed to its final growth. There was something of the Mantegnesque too in Melozzo, and it was his style which superseded that of Pietro and Julian of Rimini, of Antonio da Ferrara, Ottaviano Martini Nelli and the brothers S. Severino, along the Adriatic coasts. In considering art with reference to perspective, we must recollect also that that science, greatly illustrating the Paduan school under the skilful pupil of Squarcione, was not confined to one city in the North of Italy; that it owed much of its progress to the efforts of Uccello, Piero della Francesca, Signorelli, Melozzo, and Palmezzano; and that, being immutable, it would show itself under similar aspects in the various places in which it assumed an equal development. We are too apt to make certain features derivative from a peculiar quarter, without considering that similar ones might characterise schools at a distance from each other, the real cause of certain resemblances of style arising perhaps less from contact, than from the common use of principles invariable as axioms, which, once acknowledged, spread like light, and naturally create a common impress. We must not therefore too hastily assume that one painter like Mantegna influenced Santi more than others, although we know that for that master he had a special reverence.¹ We must rather believe that Uccello, Piero della Francesca, and Melozzo, who incarnates the same qualities in a broad sense, had an equal share in forming his style. We do not know Angelico's picture at Foiano which is said to have had its influence on Santi; but we are well acquainted with his style as well as with that of Gentile da Fabriano; and it must be submitted with all deference, that Santi left them totally unheeded.

Whilst forming himself on the model of Melozzo, as is so apparent in the frescoes of Cagli, Santi retained an Umbrian fibre, in the feeling for tenderness and grace which pervades his works and which passed from him to his son. The presence of this feeling in all, but especially in later, works shows indeed that Santi had analysed the creations of Pietro Perugino. A tempera picture on canvas, representing the enthroned S. Jerome, originally in S. Bartolo of Pesaro,² but now in the Museum of S. Giovanni Laterano at Rome, is a remarkable example of the affinity of the two painters at one time. The bearded saint, in a niche with pen and book, is delineated, as to form and draperies, with less power, but with many of the characteristic features of Perugino's manner. Angels in flight above the principal figure, rival in softness of expression similar ones by the great Umbrian. The drawing reveals conscientious care; and the greyish tone of the whole piece is not unpleasant. It is clear indeed that Santi was more at home in the old system of tempera than in the more difficult one of the innovators.¹

That Santi laboured at Pesaro, and left his mark there, is proved by traces of the extension of his manner to inferior artists whose productions are still extant.² Nor is the picture of Pesaro a solitary one of its class; another of the same character, representing the Virgin and Child, is in the gallery of Count Mazza at Ferrara, lamentably injured, it is true, but still interesting.³

A masterpiece, however, in which Santi exhibits Umbrian feeling allied to improved execution, is the Madonna and Saints in the church of the Hospital of S. Croce at Fano. Its principal group of the Virgin complacently watching the veiled Infant, in benediction on her knees, charms by greater sweetness and maternity than that of Cagli,⁴ embodies some Peruginesque feeling, and discloses Santi's progress towards the creation of those chastened and sensitive models which assumed a shape so beautiful when finally perfected by Raphael. A better and broader style of drapery adds to the effect produced; and the untrimmed hands alone remind us that Santi cannot divest himself of characteristic traits derived from his connection with Melozzo.

Two most pleasing types are those of the seraphs, whose winged necks support the poles of the red tapestry on which the Virgin and Child are relieved. A fine apparition is that of S. Macarius immediately to the left of the Virgin and partly concealed by the pendent tapestry. S. Helen at his side, in diadem, veil, and imperial purple, is noble in aspect as, enveloped in broad, but perhaps too copious draperies, she points to the Cross in her left hand. There is something Florentine in her face and figure which indeed are superior in style to

² A Marriage of S. Catherine, on an altar in S. Domenico of Pesaro, is a proof of this. The group of the Virgin and Child giving the ring to S. Catherine is enclosed between SS. John Evangelist and Thomas Aquinas. This is a somewhat rough tempera piece completed after the death of Giovanni Santi in the general character of his and the Umbrian school.

A production of the same class is a life-size Virgin, Child, and donatrix, originally a church standard, in S. Girolamo of Urbino, inscribed: "1512 QUESTA F. F. LA MOGLIE DI M^o. G. BATISTA GONELLA." The whole of this picture is injured, and the blue of the Virgin's mantle has been scraped off.

many by Cosimo Rosselli. The Mantegnesque principles of Melozzo are apparent on the other hand in the heavy and weighty frame, in the upturned head, of S. Sebastian to the right of the central group. Yet this mode of foreshortening a face is evidently the suggestion to Raphael of many subsequent delineations of the same kind. S. Roch by S. Sebastian's side points to the plague boil on his thigh, but the hat, the tights and buskins are not more dignified than the strained attitude repeated from that of the Baptist at Cagli.

This piece is carried out on the new system of oil colour in the manner common to Palmezzano, ex. gr., of a low red but translucent impasto of much consistency, and of a high surface in the shadows. The viscous nature of the medium is betrayed in the abruptness of the passages from light to shadow.¹ The design is precise as before, but in blocks like that of Melozzo, form being realised by the meeting of outlines at angles, and assuming for this reason a broken aspect.

A less pleasing picture in S. Maria Nuova, at Fano, represents the Visitation, and though much injured and embrowned by age, reveals Santi's conscientious drawing and types with more study of nature and intention of beauty than successful realisation of it. Flatness and coldness of general tone, absence of atmosphere and more than the usual rigidity and hardness of outline, contribute to the comparative inferiority of this work which, however, is, like its companion at the hospital, authenticated by Santi's own signature.²

The examples of Cagli, Pesaro, and Fano already afford facilities for a general analysis of Santi's power and style. His colour is marked by the defects peculiar in Melozzo's frescoes, and conspicuous in all the production of Palmezzano. A dull leaden tone of equal flatness pervades his panel pieces which are painted at one gush and finished without glazes, but stippled, and therefore higher in surface, in shadow than in light.

It has been usual amongst a certain class of critics to assign some influence upon Santi in respect of technical methods to Justus of Ghent. We doubt this influence greatly, and one may submit, on the contrary, that this Fleming, who painted in a manner greatly inferior to that of the schools of Van Eyck and Antonello, was also much below Piero della Francesca. Yet even had Justus assisted Santi in the manner described, the honour accruing to him from this would be slight, inasmuch as Santi shared an unenviable defect with Melozzo and Palmezzano, and had no feeling for colour. He could fairly divide masses of light and shade, but he was no judge of true value of tone, and the total absence of atmosphere in his pictures proves that he was unable to aid the development of linear by aerial perspective.

The general quality of his figures is not perfect. They combine heaviness of frame and overweight of head with undue feebleness of limb. He galvanises them into attitudes intended to indicate motion, but producing the effect of an academic pose. Their extremities are large and coarse. Their types are almost as motionless as their action, and derive little charm from the total exposure of the iris of eyes, the partial openings of mouths and the balled proportion of noses. A vast forehead and small round chin are peculiar to the Virgin, whose face is, however, pleasingly set off by an elegant trim of hair with plaits and veils. A longing for grace and tenderness in females is in Santi the heirloom of Umbrian painters. Draperies of surplus amplitude imitate the forms peculiar to Melozzo, and assume folds reminiscent of those of Perugino, but, although correct and elegant, they require simplification. Perspective is applied with scientific correctness to the foreshortening of the human body and to the projection of shadows.

As a painter Santi thus balances defects with great and important qualities. He is not without originality. He is aware of the progress made by the sciences applied to the art of his time, and he is not slow in making that progress subservient to his purpose. He combines in his works germs of tenderness and grace, which verge upon affectation but which still reveal the presence of a heart and genuine feeling in him, and explain the development of the same quality in a higher measure in his son. He was well qualified for the duties of a teacher, by his earnestness, his patience, his carefulness and conscientiousness, and it may readily be credited that, if Raphael had not lost his parent in tender years, he would have required no other master. It was fortunate indeed for him that, having been admirably taught, and having inherited from his father those treasures of grace which flowed so copiously in his manhood, he fell into the hands of Perugino, an artist rejoicing in many qualities that were deficient in Santi—a man who treated his pupil's tender and kindly temper with forbearance, and who helped him forward with paternal care, until such time as Florence, the Athens of Italy, should be open to him, and expand before his eager eyes the varied masterpieces which it contained. It must not be forgotten, however, that even before setting foot within the walls of the city which had witnessed the triumphs of Cimabue, Giotto, Masaccio, Angelico, and Ghirlandaio, Raphael had already imbibed that tincture of Florentine art which Santi had gained through the examples or precepts of Uccello, Piero della Francesca, and Melozzo. The teaching of Santi was indeed of such paramount influence on the career of his son, that he more than once reproduced the paternal types and faces of children and angels with no other change apparent in them than that which naturally followed from the polish which he had gained, and the progress of the age. At the period of Raphael's birth in 1483, Santi's wife, Magia Ciarla, was, it may be conjectured, already mother of a son,¹ whose comely forms, if they but resembled those of his younger brother, might well inspire an affectionate father. In 1484, when Raphael was but a year old, Santi painted an altarpiece for the parish of Gradara, near Pesaro, in which the Infant Saviour on the Virgin's knee is surprisingly like one of his son's creations, not only in type and outline, but in action. One may therefore say that he was born in the midst of the implements and models which were to be the familiar accompaniments of his existence.

Gradara is ten miles distant from Pesaro, on the Adriatic coast. The picture which adorns the altar of its church is very badly injured by the starting of the panel joints and the abrasion of several parts; but its life-size figures are still attractive, and disclose more tender Umbrian feeling than do previous examples, and an advance towards the greater perfection of Raphael. Two cherubs support on their necks the pole of the tapestry which hangs behind the throne, and a third peeps over the centre of it, glancing at the Virgin seated below, and looking at the Saviour on her lap. He grasps a bird in his left hand,² and looks round at S. John the Baptist standing to the right, attended by S. Michael in scale armour, whilst S. Stephen and S. Sophia on the opposite side reverently look on. The natural liveliness of action in the handsome form of the Infant is not less engaging than the meek but graceful movement of the Virgin, whose round and polished forehead, prim mouth and chin, and drooping eyelid are equally pleasing and characteristic. The Saints in attendance partake of the general improvement, and are drawn with more than usual purity and elegance of line in hands, ankles, and feet. Even the Baptist, in whom Santi's usual defects are apparent, is more skilfully rendered than at Cagli. But the tone of the whole piece is still cold and grey in shadow.¹

Whilst Santi was thus perfecting his style and necessarily increasing his fame, family cares impended over his house. His father died on the 2nd of August, his son, Raphael's brother, on the 20th of September 1485—a double bereavement, hard for the feelings of a dutiful son and tender father. Then followed the formalities of a divided succession, from which Giovanni obtained as a share the paternal house and lands. But then, in January 1485/1486, the date of administration to Sante's will,² Giovanni set up his own shop, in which, from that time forward, he carried on business after the approved fashion, undertaking orders not only for pictures and for tinting and gilding of reliefs and figures, but for candelabra and other articles more specially appertaining to the business of a goldsmith.³

Traces of artistic labours in the house, in which we can now fancy Raphael the spoilt favourite of a fond mother, may still be found in one of the rooms in which Santi's daily work was apparently carried on. A fresco on the wall, much injured by time, but whose outlines are still visible, shows us the Virgin in profile, seated, with a book on a little desk before her, and pressing to her bosom the sleeping Infant, whose head reposes on its arms. Originally a beautiful conception, it is even now one of the sweetest and most endearing groups that Santi ever carried out.⁴ One might almost fancy that Magia Ciarla sat in the room with her infant son, and was thus drawn from life by Santi. The sentiment of our day asserts this indeed to be a fact, and thus transforms an amiable presumption into a concrete fact.

We may judge of Santi's social position, at this time in Urbino, from circumstantial evidence. When he married, he became connected with the family of Battista Ciarla, a comparatively wealthy merchant, whose relations in the city of his residence might be of great use to a struggling painter. So it proved, indeed; for Santi successively painted altarpieces for the chapel of Luca Zaccagna,⁵ Magia's brother by marriage, and for that of Gaspar Buffi, an intimate friend of Luca. Zaccagna, on his deathbed in March 1489, appointed Santi his executor, together with Buffi, the advocate Cini, and Count Ottaviano Ubaldini.¹ Santi was also on terms of friendship with Pier Antonio Paltroni, secretary and privy councillor to Federico di Montefeltro, from whom his father Sante had bought land in 1457, and in whose house Giovanni admits that he had often had occasion to read the details of the great Duke's career, Paltroni having written a copious narrative of it.² For this nobleman, too, Santi finished a picture in S. Francesco, representing the Archangel Michael, and scenes from the Passion, in a predella.³ The family of the Galli were Santi's patrons also, and we still admire the extant panels ordered by the Pianiani at Montefiorentino.

¹ On the base of the throne, which rests on a layer of rock, are the words: "GRADARIE SPECTANDA FUIT IMPENSA ET INDUSTRIA VIRI D. DOMINICI DE DOMENICIS VICARII ANNO D. MCCCCLXXXIII DIE X. APRILIS, ET PER DUOS PRIUS TEMPORE. D. JO. CANO. XPI. RECTORIS ECCLIE. SOPHIE. JOANNES SAN. URB. PINXIT." The distance is one of landscape and hills, and meadow in front. The sky is injured, parts are scaled out in all directions; and two vertical splits divide the forms of the Baptist and injure the opposite group of SS. Stephen and Sophia. The nonagon shield of S. Michael is admirably ornamented.

The altarpiece commissioned by Gaspar Buffi was finished shortly after the artist and his new patron had become joint executors of Zaccagna's will,⁴ and it is still preserved on the family altar in a chapel at S. Francesco of Urbino.⁵ Gaspar himself kneels by his wife's side on the right-hand foreground of the court, and their infant son in a suppliant attitude prays in front of them. The Virgin, to whom their prayers are directed, sits in a circular niche, with the Eternal in a glory of cherubs above her, whilst two angels at His sides hold the ribands that suspend a diadem over her head. At her sides SS. John the Baptist and Francis, Jerome and Sebastian, stand in attendance.

We realise to the fullest extent the aspect of the Buffi and their child, and we picture them to ourselves sitting for their likenesses before the conscientious Santi, who reproduces their features without flattery or idealism. But the fidelity of portraiture is not confined to them; and, whilst the S. Sebastian seems but a copy of a coarse and ill-conditioned nude, the Eternal's vulgar type fails to raise our thoughts from the contemplation of terrestrial things. Santi's strength is seriously taxed in the effort to delineate the flight of the angels holding the diadem above the Virgin's head, and their broken drapery incompletely suggests the idea of a breeze playing about them. Yet the forms, tucked up skirts, and close-puckered sleeves, are essentially characteristic; and a drawing of these angels in the collection of designs at the Berlin Museum is assigned to Raphael's youthful time. For the rest, the architecture is rich in ornament and drawn with perspective truth. The shadows are correctly projected, and the whole altarpiece is ably painted at a throw in the somewhat dim flat tones peculiar to the master.¹

⁴ The following record in the archives of S. Francesco of Urbino certify the date of this altarpiece. It is contained in a book with the press mark A, containing entries from 1286 to 1619, and reads as follows: "Altare S. Sebastiani imago lignea perpulcra ornatum mediocriter, fuit erectum a familia de Buffis anno 1489." Other records cited by PUNGILEONI, Elog. Stor. di Gio. Santi, p. 91, state the painter to have been Giovanni Santi, a fact conclusively proved by the picture itself.

It would be superfluous to describe the altarpiece which Santi completed at the same period for Carlo Olivo Pianiani in the convent of Montefiorentino, near Urbania (of old Castel-Durante). It bears the inscription :

CAROLUS OLIVIVS PLANIANI COMES DIVÆ VIRGINI AC RELIQUIS CELITIBUS
JOANNE SANCTIO PICTORE. DEDICAVIT M.CCCCLXXXVIII.

Santi never produced a more perfect example of his manner, one more firm and precise in drawing, or more truthful and grand in portraiture. A calm melancholy feeling dwells in the features of the mother of Christ, whose form, movement, and drooping eyelid are prefigurative of similar qualities in Raphael, whilst the Infant has a Peruginesque plumpness, and the angels charm by the beauty of their forms, and the infantine grace of their occupations. The reflections in the armour of S. Michael are given with truthful care, yet the colour of the whole piece is still as cold and unmellow as before.

A fine and animated picture of the same period is still in the brotherhood of S. Sebastian at Urbino,² much injured and repainted, however, but remarkable for the youthful elegance of the forms in the principal figure, whose glance is directed upwards towards an angel flying down to him with the crown of martyrdom. Much energy and force are in the action of the archers ; and, no doubt, the master's excellence in portraiture was to be marked in the nine male and female members of the brotherhood, who kneel on the right hand foreground.

Other pieces in and about Urbino, numerous enough of old, are less so now.

The Angel and Tobit, and a S. Roch on the sides of the high altar in S. Francesco are said by PASSAVANT (Raphael, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 30) to be wings of the Buffi altarpiece. They are painted in tempera on canvas above life-size, and partake of the manner of Santi's school. If they are by Timoteo Viti, as some critics are inclined to believe, they prove that he was a pupil or imitator of Raphael's father. It is curious, however, that the Angel and Tobit should be marked by character reminiscent of the Pollaiuoli. [Mr. Berenson gives both these works to Santi.]

The church of S. Bernardino has deprived itself quite lately of the painted hanging that adorned its pulpit. It represented Christ supported on the edge of His tomb by two angels, and was a picture of a small size, ably treated in the manner of Santi.¹

In the sacristy of the Duomo at Urbino, six Apostles assigned to Piero della Francesca disclose the manner of Santi, though some of the figures have been injured and abraded. The convent of S. Chiara in the same city also possesses a panel in Santi's manner representing half-lengths of the Virgin supporting the dead body of the Saviour, and a Christ carrying His Cross.²

An Annunciation, originally in S. M. Maddalena of Sinigaglia, is now in the Brera at Milan [No. 503], and is a genuine work inscribed with the master's name: "JOANNES SANTIS URB. P."

The Virgin and Child, with Saints, originally painted for the family of Matarozzi at Urbania, and now in the Berlin Museum (No. 139), may be classed with that of the Brera amongst the less pleasing works of Santi. A donor, however, kneeling in prayer in front recalls the Platina in Melozzo's fresco at Rome.³ Another unfavourable specimen of Santi's art is in the Spedale of Montefiore between S. Marino and Urbino, where a Virgin of Mercy is represented between SS. Paul, John, Francis and Sebastian. Two angels support the Virgin's cloak, beneath which are the male and female members of the hospital fraternity. But most of the figures are injured and repainted.

The presence of Santi at Montefiore at some period of his existence might be proved, if we could certainly assign to him a feeble fresco, quite in his manner, on the wall by the high altar of the parish church. This wall painting represents the Virgin giving suck to the Infant, and an angel on the right.⁴

The only remaining works of Santi to which we can point are three portraits.

One is that of a youth (bust) in profile, with long hair in a red dress with yellow sleeves, assigned to Raphael by Mr. Dennistoun to whom it once belonged,⁵ but displaying much of the manner of Melozzo and Santi, and probably by the latter; another—of a youth in profile in a red cap, dressed in red and wearing a jewelled collar, once the property of Vincenzo Piccini at Urbino, and now in the Colonna Gallery at Rome;⁶—a third, belonging to W. D. Lowe, Esq., exhibited at Manchester under the name of P. della Francesca [No. 48], representing also a youth in profile with a red cap and green vest. All these portraits, of Umbrian character, partake slightly of the style of Melozzo.

Santi died in 1494, after having in 1491 lost his first wife, and shortly after married a second. The widow's treatment of her stepson Raphael and of the relations of her husband's first wife form an interesting part of the early life of the greatest Italian painter.¹

CHAPTER IV

LUCA SIGNORELLI

LUCA SIGNORELLI¹ was born, as there is reason to believe, in 1441, at Cortona;² but his earliest impressions of art seem to have been obtained at Perugia, where he imbibed a tincture of the style peculiar to Bonfigli, Fiorenzo, and Pinturicchio.³

We may conceive it possible that a man of his talent should in the course of time have curbed the impetuosity of his nature and assumed the staid tenderness of the Umbrians; although it is not easy to believe that he would then have risen to fame. But his temper was not put to so hard a trial; and an early transfer into a wider field developed the full powers of his mind.

Cortona and Arezzo were both inhabited in the middle of the fifteenth century by branches of a family to which Luca was related. Their common ancestor Giorgio was known as a skilful potter. He handed down to his descendants a name which has become imperishable in connection with the history of Italian art.

Lazzaro Vasari, the son of the potter, inherited the skill of his father but carried on also the trade of a painter.⁴ His thrift was sufficient to give him a respectable station in Arezzo, and enable him to help his brothers at Cortona. His sister, who was married to Egidio di Ventura Signorelli of Cortona, was one of the partakers of his benevolence; and she was indebted to Lazzaro's acquaintance with Piero della Francesca for an apprenticeship for her son Luca in the atelier of that painter.⁵

That Signorelli owes his style principally to this great Umbro-

² The date of Signorelli's birth is not ascertained. But Vasari says he died aged eighty-two (VASARI, vol. vi., p. 147); and the death is all but proved to have occurred in 1523. Signorelli's full name is Luca d'Egidio di Ventura.

⁴ Vasari has written a short life of his great-grandfather, whom he describes as born in 1380 and deceased in 1452. The works of Lazzaro, who is said to have imitated Piero della Francesca, have all perished. See VASARI, vol. iv., pp. 67-8.

Florentine is not for a moment to be doubted. Under his tuition he paid more than usual attention to the study of anatomy, which at that time was carried on almost openly in the burial-grounds of great cities ; and though he probably did not fathom the depths, he introduced into the stiffly and geometrically correct forms of that master a greater liberty and force. He inaugurated a new phase in the science of Uccello and Piero della Francesca, and prepared the way for its perfection in Michael Angelo. Signorelli in fact learnt to display the structure and mechanism of nude in immediate action with a power unattained in his day, and even went so far at last as to overstep the bounds of nature, and substitute for it unreal and conventional calculations of probabilities. We judge of his daring play with the greatest difficulties of position that art can pretend to render, not merely by his pictures but by the remains of his original drawings from the naked model or from anatomical subjects, in which a successful effort is made to suggest the internal formation, as well as imitate the external appearance, of flesh, muscle, and bone. These drawings are still preserved in the Louvre, and might easily be confounded with similar ones by Michael Angelo ; whilst their carefulness and accuracy reveal a knowledge of the laws which Leonardo reduced to a system in his treatise. If indeed Signorelli recalls the first by his vigour and by his passion for overstepping the bounds of truth, he may remind us of Leonardo in the scientific path, since the rules which guided the latter were familiar to Piero della Francesca ; and a natural medium for the interchange of ideas between him and Leonardo is found in Luca Pacioli, the mathematician and friend of both.

The truth was what Signorelli thus early strove to attain ; but the truth in art as in the daily intercourse of men frequently and justly offends, unless taste or tact soften its asperities. At the school of Piero Signorelli learnt no more than to render the exactly true in nature ; he found no incitement, or if he did, he disdained, to realise anything more choice or noble than that which is apparent in any one example of humanity. He therefore remained deprived of one of the elements which produces unity and keeping in the works of such men as Domenico Ghirlandaio, Fra Bartolommeo, Raphael, or Andrea del Sarto. He became a painter of mere nude, of a nude excellent in its parts, powerful in bone and muscle, but unselect and academical.

Signorelli's genius and temper naturally led him to prefer large to small spaces. He is therefore great in the former—at Rome and Orvieto. He set much less value in consequence on charm of colour than upon the exhibition of feats in drawing. There is a roughness and asperity in the red lights and brown-red shadows of his frescoes which indicate contempt for the exquisite feeling for tone displayed by Piero. His hurtling decision is equally apparent in the division of masses of chiaroscuro. The lights and shadows are like a peal of bells, sharp, defined, and surprising rather than pleasant. These peculiarities are not confined to Signorelli's frescoes, but extend also to his panels, some of which, in the mixed system, are of a gloomy olive tinge full of character and power, whilst others finished at one painting are, if glazed at all, only slightly scumbled with opaque brown in the shadows. These are always fuller in substance than the rest, and prove that Luca had not Piero's sensitive fibre for tone. Though Signorelli thus throws out less characteristic traits of Piero's teaching in his pictures than in frescoes, these traits are not absolutely wanting in the former. A Nativity originally in Borgo S. Sepolcro, now in the hands of Mr. Barker in London,¹ has been described amongst the works of Piero, as exhibiting some of Signorelli's vulgarity in faces, and in the positive brown hue of its full-bodied colour. At the Brera gallery in Milan, a Flagellation by Signorelli is clearly impressed with the influence of Piero della Francesca in the conception, which is on the model of the same subject at Urbino,—in the style of architecture, in the types and action. The column to which the Saviour is bound, supports an idol.² A scourger, in the act of fastening one of the ligaments, is a nude conceived in the spirit of the master, and academically rendered with the energy of the pupil. Another, whose back is to the spectator, recalls the powerful creations of Michael Angelo. Pilate sits on the left in an intercolumniated distance enlivened with statues, friezes, and entablatures, on one of which are the words: "OPUS LUCE CORTONENSIS." The care with which the drawing is carried out, and the repetition of certain forms, already remarkable in Piero as reminiscent of Leonardo, are proofs of Luca's education under della Francesca; whilst the bold muscular movement, the Herculean frame and unselect shape of the Redeemer reveal how completely Signorelli thus early made his teacher's style subordinate to the evolution of his own.³

We have no means of ascertaining at what time the Flagellation was completed, nor the person or corporation for whom it was ordered. We only know that Signorelli painted in 1472⁴ at Arezzo, and in 1474 at Città di Castello;⁵ but he was then in the prime of life, thirty-three or thirty-five years of age, if the tradition of his birth be correct, and of matured experience; nor can we conceive that one of his temper, and taught by an artist who owed so much to Florence, should have hesitated to betake himself, as soon as his means allowed him, to the capital of Italy—the capital in so far at least as the arts were concerned.

He was no stranger, it would seem, to Lorenzo de' Medici, who is said to have accepted presents from him of pictures representing both mythological subjects then in fashion, and more sacred themes.¹

It was natural that a man of Signorelli's spirit should treat poetical incidents derived from the books of ancient Greece with peculiar pleasure, at the period when Greek literature was studied with so much interest; and that he should prize the occasions of doing so in proportion to their rarity. The attraction which such incidents might have for educated people was confined to the highest and wealthiest class; and we know of no one for whom Signorelli might hope to paint them, except a Lorenzo de' Medici or a Pandolfo Petrucci. Vasari states that Luca made Lorenzo a present of a canvas in which groups of naked gods were represented.² A photograph of a canvas, answering his description, will be found annexed to these pages. It was recently discovered at Florence, and now belongs to the Marquis Corsi.³ The subject seems to be the School of Pan, most poetically conceived and beautifully arranged. Pan sits on a rocky throne, with the leopard's skin on his shoulders, the pipes in his left hand, a staff in his right. The horns on his head are idealised in the prettiest manner. A finely posed Olympus stands in profile at his side, turning his back to the spectator and playing, whilst two shepherds on each hand listen with intense attention. The sounds are supposed to be wafted away by the reeds, which are held united by a man lying on the ground, and a nymph, erect near him. This nymph, who is probably no other than Echo, rests her hand on a cane to which a tablet is affixed, bearing the words "LUCA CORTONEN." Two other nymphs are in the distance of trees and rocks; and the car of the sun is just visible in the sky. It is almost the same subject as that painted by Signorelli on the walls of the Petrucci Palace at Siena—a masterpiece for beauty of forms, a sure proof of the artist's talent in drawing nudes, admirable for the select classicism of the Olympus, and charming for the variety of expressions embodied in the group.⁴

Signorelli's Madonnas also are not wanting in Florentine galleries; and one of them, a round of a Virgin and Child, with two prophets in monochrome medallions, in the upper angles of a circumscribing square,

has ceased to be the ornament of the Villa of Castello, and is in the Uffizi.¹ Of the same period and class, the Virgin and Child at the Pitti,² the Nativity in Mr. Barker's collection,³ the Holy Family in the Dresden Gallery,⁴ the Virgin and Child between the kneeling S. Jerome and a Benedictine in the Corsini Palace,⁵ Florence, and two rounds belonging to the Ginori family at Florence, all prove Signorelli's study of Botticelli and Filippino.⁶

The Madonna at the Uffizi is painted in a grand style; the nudes in the distance are admirable studies; and the prophets in the medallions recall the works of Michael Angelo. A noble gentleness marks the Virgin and Child at the Pitti. Mr. Barker's Nativity—a bold, clever picture—is in Signorelli's gloomy olive tone; a feature, repeated in the Holy Family at Dresden, in which the Florentine types of Botticelli and Filippino, in the Virgin and S. Joseph, are coupled with Umbrian masks in the two graceful angels. It is composed with much thought, and boldly executed alla prima, showing the bond which unites the master to P. della Francesca, Melozzo of Forlì, and Gio. Santi. The three remaining rounds are of the same character.

The Medicean was not the only princely family for which Signorelli laboured. He was employed by the Della Rovere, painted in the Sanctuary of Loreto, and competed in the Sixtine Chapel with Perugino and the best Florentines. It would be easier to determine which of these great undertakings was first completed, were the frescoes in S. Maria di Loreto in a better state of preservation. Local writers affirm that Giuliano della Rovere, who was afterwards Pope under the title of Julius II., was protector of the Sanctuary at Loreto in 1478,⁷ and that he caused the ² [No. 335, Pitti.] The Virgin holds the Infant on a cushion on her lap. He dictates to S. Catherine, who stands before Him writing in a book. This also is in good condition.

⁴ No. 21, Dresden Gallery. This round, originally in Pisa, belonged to Mr. Woodburn. The Virgin holds on her knee the naked Infant, who plays with the infant S. John. The latter looks at S. Joseph, who points to a cross in his (S. John's) hand. Distance—rocky. Above are two angels reading and singing. [Not by Signorelli.]

⁵ No. 18. The Virgin's blue dress injured.

⁷ See TORSSELLINO, and the Guida di Loreto, published at Ancona in 1824, quoted in RICCI, Memorie Stor. degli Artisti della Marca di Ancona, vol. i., p. 196.

marble pavement of the Holy Chapel to be laid at that time. Vasari says that Signorelli was liberally paid by Sixtus IV. for the frescoes.¹ He certainly deserved liberal treatment for the most chastened work he ever produced on wall. The triangles of the octagon ceiling contain eight angels in various attitudes playing instruments. The Four Doctors of the Church and the Four Evangelists fill the upper, the Twelve Apostles, in couples, six spaces of the lower course; and the two remaining fields comprise the Incredulity of S. Thomas, and the Conversion of S. Paul. A reminiscence of Fra Filippo's ceiling at Prato is evident in the Four Evangelists, and confirms the supposition that Signorelli had been at Florence, and tempered his Umbrian feeling with the more masculine elements of its art. His angels, which are least injured by dirt and smoke, are done with great carefulness and patience. But most of the apostles and the two subject pieces are dimmed to incomprehensibility.²

A single fresco at the Sistine is the work of Signorelli. One feels on looking at it that the painter knew he was competing with men great in the art of composition and in the science of light and shade. His conception and arrangement of incidents are grand and suitable. To right, Moses reads from a book. His rod is in his hand. He sits and tells of the Promised Land to the Hebrews of both sexes and all ages surrounding him. To the left he transfers the rod to Aaron. The people are gathered on a grassy slope, which rises as it recedes into rocky distances interspersed with trees. In the centre background the angel shows the Promised Land; and far off to the left, the body of the patriarch is buried. The grand choice of nude in some of the figures about the sitting Moses is striking, leaving an impression akin to that produced by Piero della Francesca in the frescoes of Arezzo. Great spirit is thrown into the draped figure to the right, leaning an elbow on a staff. There is vigour and Umbrian grace in the back views of the men in the tight costume of the period. The females are less successful than the males, heavy in type and stiffly angular in form, as might be expected from a pupil of Francesca, whilst the children are clumsy and aged in frame and head; but the group of women and children may be due to Don Bartolommeo della Gatta, who was at Rome with Signorelli and Perugino, and laboured as their assistant at the Sistine. The drawing is at once bold and broken, in contrast with carefulness of general handling and a patient application of gold in the dresses.³

second to Ghirlandaio in the great law of balance, in propriety and objectiveness ; but he compensates these failings by liveliness and action. He is grander and more dignified than Botticelli, and reminds us that his path was followed later by Michael Angelo. He stands in marked contrast to Perugino, whose softness and tenderness are the direct contrary of his energy and impetuosity. He is naturally much above Cosimo Rosselli. We believe that most of these painters met and laboured together at Rome.¹ Their rivalry was friendly ; and each of them probably had commissions from many Roman patrons. Of these, however, Signorelli's share has not been preserved. If he furnished altarpieces to wealthy cardinals, they are not forthcoming ;—if he did more than one fresco at the Sistine, his successors obliterated it ; and the journey of Moses and Zipporah, usually attributed to him, must be resigned to Perugino.² Signorelli's stay at Rome may have lasted from about 1478 to 1484. At the latter date he was already residing in Cortona.

A subscription had been made about that time for the erection of S. Maria del Calcinaio outside the town, and the promoters of the scheme were desirous of obtaining plans and models from competent hands. On application to Signorelli, who seems to have been diffident of his own powers, he suggested the name of Francesco di Giorgio. Francesco was at that time on duty for the Duke of Urbino at Gubbio ; Signorelli was sent there to meet him, and the matter was speedily settled to the satisfaction of all parties. S. M. del Calcinaio is one of the few edifices in Italy really planned by Francesco di Giorgio.³

To Signorelli's labours in the year 1484 we likewise owe the altarpiece in the cathedral of Perugia, representing the Virgin and Child enthroned under a garland of fruit and flowers in the Paduan fashion, between SS. Onofrio, John the Baptist, and an angel, Ercolano, Stephen and an

¹ [Vasari affirms that the general direction was in the hands of Botticelli. However that may be, a contract, dated the 27th October 1481, gives us the names of the artists employed here. There were three Florentines, Cosimo Rosselli, Botticelli, Ghirlandaio, and one Umbrian, Perugino. Each of the masters doubtless brought with him several pupils ; among them, however, we only know Piero di Cosimo, the pupil of Cosimo Rosselli, and Pinturicchio, the pupil of Perugino. The work had probably already been begun in the spring of 1481, the artists promising to complete it by the 15th March 1482. A document of January 1482 tells us that of the ten frescoes spoken of in the contract only four were finished, two hundred and fifty ducats being paid for each. To hasten the completion of the work a new artist was engaged, Luca Signorelli. The work was actually finished on August 15, 1483, when Sixtus IV. consecrated the chapel. Cf. STEINMANN, Die Sixtinische Kapelle (Leipzig).]

² [This fresco is by Pinturicchio, see postea.]

angel, whilst a nude seraph tunes a stringed instrument as he sits on the pediment of the throne.¹ In spite of the realism of the seraph and of the aged and bony S. Onofrio, the picture was no doubt a fine one originally, but its beauties are veiled by heavy repainting; and horizontal splits in the panel deprive it of value.²

Cortona was now Signorelli's home, and it may be assumed that he usually remained there, attending to the numerous commissions for altarpieces and church standards which poured in upon him. The Company of the Virgin at Città di Castello, for which he had painted a banner, caused the freedom of the town to be conferred on him in 1488,³ and many pieces still extant in the place testify to Luca's popularity.⁴ At Cortona his worth was fully appreciated; and he was elected to municipal honours in the same year, as well as on several different occasions till his death.⁵ The extent of his reputation may be conceived from the fact that he was one of those called upon to decide the competition for the models of the front of S. Maria del Fiore at Florence in 1491.⁶

Amongst the more distant places in which he is supposed in these days to have laboured is Volterra, where a Circumcision, ordered for the altar of a company in S. Francesco, is described by Vasari as a "marvel of beauty." Its original completeness was injured by Bazzi, who repainted the Infant Christ, and spoiled it; and this Vandalism is strongly reproved by the Aretine. Vasari, however, speaks of a fresco, and one is tempted to inquire whether his memory did not lead him into error. A panel of the Circumcision by Signorelli, in the Hamilton Palace, near Glasgow,⁷ deserves his praise, and would justify his reproaches, inasmuch as all the figures but one are well preserved; and the Infant Christ alone is repainted.⁸ The composition is one of Signorelli's best,

² MANNI, Vita di Luca Signorelli, ap. VASARI, Com., vol. vi., p. 144, alludes to a contract of Jan. 1485, by which Signorelli binds himself to paint a chapel in S. Agata of Spoleto. We cannot ascertain whether the date is calculated according to the old or to the new style, and whether to place it after or before the journey to Gubbio. At all events there is no trace of Signorelli's work in S. Agata.

well arranged, and full of energy. The life-size figures are bold in action, yet unstrained; the colour, strong and of an olive tinge, with brown shadows. Firmness and truth of drawing are combined with a judicious distribution of light and shade. The high-priest raises his eyes and stretches his hands to heaven with a benevolent glance, whilst a person of lower rank in front of him bends over the form of the Infant Christ, held by the Virgin on her lap. Her face is cast in Signorelli's well-known mould, and expresses kindly softness, whilst that of the operator is on the model of those of Piero della Francesca and Leonardo. A graceful female to the left of the high-priest touches the Virgin's shoulder, and offers to the spectator a form of Umbrian character. S. Joseph, on the same side, a grandiose apparition in full drapery, contemplates the ceremony and supports himself with the right hand on a short staff. Tender care is expressed in his looks. Behind him a female of sweet features, with an air recalling to mind a creation by Giovanni Santi, is accompanied by a turbaned male. To the right of the principal group, a man in converse enforces his speech by the touches of his fingers upon each other, explaining something with force to a young female in front, who pauses in the act of departing, and turns her head towards the Infant Christ. It would be difficult to find a better Umbro-Florentine work of Signorelli's good period than this.¹

But Volterra boasts of other portable works by him, one of which, an Annunciation, dated 1491, in the Cappella S. Carlo of the Duomo,² is reminiscent of a similar piece by Giovanni Santi in the Brera at Milan. The Virgin has been reading under a colonnade, and in her surprise at the appearance of the angel in the court, she has dropped her book, the Eternal in glory appearing as usual in the heavens to the left. The perspective is good, the colour powerful, and the handling masterly, but the types and character of the figures, and the cast of the drapery are more than usually Umbrian, and the picture is one of those in which Signorelli most displayed an amiable and kindly spirit.³

A tabernacle altarpiece in S. Francesco⁴ of the same city, dating

¹ The picture is signed on the base: "LUCAS CORTONENSIS PINXIT." The scene is laid within the niche of a temple with yellow ornament on a blue ground in the borders. A prophet in a medallion fills the angles of the niche. A riband, vase, and book are on the floor. The Annotators of VASARI, vol. vi., p. 138, say that MS. records by Ormanni in the library of Volterra mention the existence of a Circumcision by Luca de Cortona—on panel in S. Francesco, and the same subject on panel in the Company del Nome di Gesù. The panels forming the surface are laid transversely and have slightly bulged outwards.

³ The architecture is good and highly ornamented. On the nearest pillar of the colonnade is a scroll, containing the inscription: "LUCAS CORTONEŃ PINXIT MXDI." The head and hands of the Virgin have been retouched.

from the same year as the foregoing, represents the Virgin Enthroned amongst saints, with a predella of feigned bas-reliefs, unfortunately ruined. No earlier one by Luca so fully develops his grand boldness. The hardy energy of the Infant Saviour's gesture, as he raises an arm, which is seen from beneath, like the Redeemer's in Michael Angelo's ceiling at the Sixtine, is truly startling. The two saints nearest the spectator are very fine, and the angels have again the Umbrian affectation of grace. The draperies are massed with considerable breadth, and the colour is as usual full of texture and high in the shadows.¹

Luca's return and residence at Cortona, in 1493 and 1494, are certified by records of payments for two altarpieces at Città di Castello;² and a peculiar interest attaches to his movements in the latter year, because it has been supposed that he visited Urbino on the occasion of a contract for a banner to be delivered after a specified time to the brotherhood of S. Spirito in that place.³ Signorelli is evidently well known to Giovanni Santi, who calls him "il Cortonese Luca, d'ingegno e spirito pellegrino." Pungileoni inquires, whether it might not be likely that so distinguished an artist should have been of some influence on the career of the youthful Raphael, or have taught him something when at Urbino in 1494.⁴ But there is no proof whatever in the records which he adduces to justify the belief that Signorelli came to Urbino on the occasion in question; and Giovanni Santi, who died in August of that very year, was cognisant of his talents and fame long before. The banner of S. Spirito is still preserved in the edifice of that name in Urbino, representing on one side the Crucifixion with great animation in the principal and episodic scenes, and on the other a grey and not pleasing Descent of the Holy Spirit.

A Nativity and a Martyrdom of S. Sebastian ordered severally for S. Francesco and S. Domenico of Città di Castello mark the year 1496.⁵ The latter, still in the church⁶ for which it was commissioned, shows an exaggerated vigour in the crossbowmen like that which characterises the subject as painted by the Pollaiuoli in the National Gallery. The distance is equally full of figures and classic edifices ; but the execution generally is somewhat dry.¹

In 1497 Signorelli left Cortona, and commenced a progress abroad during which he produced some of his finest and grandest works. We shall have occasion to ascertain how the art of Siena continued its retrograde course during the fifteenth century. Its absorption into the Perugian school occurred a little later. In the meanwhile Signorelli, who sustained at least the Umbrian fibre of the old school, appeared at Siena, the precursor of the Pinturicchios and Bazzis, and found his way to the Olivetine convent of Chiusuri [Monte Oliveto], in one cloister of which he carried out part of a vast decorative series illustrating the life of S. Benedict.² To enjoy the fulness of Luca's power from the remnants of his wall paintings in this edifice is, however, difficult because of the injury which they have sustained.

Eleven spaces are filled with paintings on the cloister wall to the right of the entrance. The first is one of those which Bazzi completed in 1505,³ the last is by Riccio, whilst the penultimate is completely gone. There remain, therefore, eight frescoes by Signorelli, representing 1 (after that of Bazzi near the door), Totila's genuflexion before Benedict ;⁴ 2, the Shield-bearer's coming to Benedict in place of Totila (injured in parts) ; 3, the Temptation of the abstinent Monk (injured and renewed in the lower part) ; 4, the Conviction of two Brethren for breaking the fast-vow ; 5, the Resurrection of a Monk on whom Satan had pitched a stone (much blackened) ; 6, Benedict exorcising the Devil, who prevented the stone from moving ; 7, the Overthrow of the Idol (damaged) ; 8, the Fall of a house and crushing of a youth (much injured and retouched).

These frescoes date from 1497.⁵ They prove that Signorelli was still under the influence of his early education by Piero della Francesca. They embody all his energy and fancy. The drawing, pounced on very smooth surfaces from cartoons like Piero's, is clean. It defines not only the outlines of the forms, but the respective parts in light and in shade with geometric precision. The technical system is also perfectly clear, a local water-colour of a yellowish tinge for light, stippled with yellow red for mezzo tints, with red for shadows, always in one direction on the plan pursued by Leonardo in his drawings.

A prolonged stay in Siena, during 1498, resulted in Luca's completion of an altarpiece for the chapel of the Bicchi in S. Agostino, of which the wings alone, representing life-size figures of SS. Chiara, Mary Magdalen, and Jerome, Augustine, Catherine, and Antony of Padua, are in the Berlin Museum, and must be classed amongst the fine productions of the master.¹ His chief occupation at this time was, however, the adornment of the Palace of Pandolfo Petrucci. That wealthy individual, who in a long course of years had succeeded in usurping supreme power at Siena, had well nigh brought a new palace to completion; and one of the rooms in that edifice was covered with frescoes which Della Valle has described. One of them represented Midas angered at the discovery of his ass's ears.² The second was the School of Pan, almost similar in composition to the canvas of the same subject in possession of Marquis Corsi.³ In a third, the torments and triumph of Cupid were depicted.⁴ A fourth was devoted to Coriolanus listening to the prayers of his mother and wife.⁵ In the same room were a Flight of Æneas from Troy, a Ransom of Prisoners, and a Penelope or Lucretia at her loom, the latter by Pinturicchio.⁶ The Triumph of Cupid and the Coriolanus, transferred to canvas and injured, are now [1866] in Mr. Barker's Collection, and are grand compositions of figures quarter the life-size. The rest of Luca's frescoes have been lost, whilst the Flight of Æneas and the Ransom are still preserved in the Academy of Arts at Siena and display a mixture of the styles of Signorelli and Pinturicchio, with something of the character appertaining to the Bolognese, Ercole Grandi, or to Girolamo Genga.⁷ The latter is known to have been in Pandolfo's employ, and is even said to have laboured later with Signorelli at Orvieto and elsewhere, yet one cannot find his hand in the Cappella di S. Brizio, and if he did anything there, his attention must have been confined to ornaments.⁸

From Siena, Signorelli now proceeded to Orvieto, where the council of the cathedral, after waiting nine years for Perugia, and after trying

¹ [No. 79, Berlin Museum.] The date of this piece is given by TIZIO (in MS. Hist. Sen., ap. PUNGILEONI, Raph., ubi sup., p. 6), who says: "Lucas . . . in S. Augustino tabulam peregrinam pinxit anno abhinc (1513) decimo quinto." The centre of the altarpiece, as described by VASARI, vol. vi., p. 149, was a S. Christopher, the saint to whom the chapel of the Bicchi was dedicated, and according to Tizio the portraits of the Bicchi were also there. We only mention as a duty a Nativity in S. Domenico of Siena cited by TATA, Guida di Siena, 1822, p. 149, as by Signorelli. We shall note this piece in the life of Francesco di Giorgio. The Nativity, however, exhibits an animation and movement from which we might infer that some influence was wielded by Signorelli on the painter.

Pinturicchio, had finally resolved that Luca should decorate the chapel of S. Brizio.¹

It would be curious to ascertain what the painter's reflections may have been as he contemplated the unfinished masterpieces of Angelico on one of the ceilings of the chapel. The last great artist who embodied the essentially religious element had left the traces of a mighty talent behind. How was the equally mighty representative of new principles and of modern modes of thought, to reconcile his creations with those of his precursor? One can understand a debate in the Orvieto council, if the members discussed the relative merits of Pinturicchio and Signorelli. Would not the tender, perhaps affected, Perugian be better suited to continue the work of the mystic Dominican than the fiery follower of Piero della Francesca? But Signorelli prevailed. Pinturicchio, whose art is that of Perugino minus his best qualities, was not fit to compete with the gigantic power of one whose opus following on that of his teacher was necessary to the development of Italian painting;—who left at Orvieto his mark for all time. Not but that his frescoes there may in the course of centuries perish like so many others that have gone that way before, but they were in their path suggestive and grand; and had their influence on the growth of Michael Angelo.

Looking round him at Orvieto, Signorelli might see, not merely the comparatively small production of a ceiling by Angelico; his imagination might feed on the examples of great bygone sculptors. He could leisurely examine the bas-reliefs of the time of the Pisan revival, the Giottesque ones of Andrea Pisano. He might perhaps still see mosaics by Oreagna. He certainly followed the ideas of Dante in the conception of an Inferno. What Signorelli did in S. Brizio at Orvieto; how he adorned the walls, and with what taste he combined his pictures with the architecture which surrounds them, must, however, now be told.

The Cappella S. Brizio is a rectangle in two subdivisions, each subdivision having three lunettes and a groined ceiling. An entrance leads through the lower side. The upper naturally holds the altar. Each of the lunettes is one picture, vast in size. All the pictures are at a certain height, their lower borders resting on fictive marble skirtings, adorned in the centre with square panels enclosing portraits, and medallions as satellites, with scenes derived from Dante's Purgatorio, or subjects taken from mythology.

In the first lunette to the left of the entrance, Antichrist falls, head downwards, from heaven, pursued by the Archangel, sword in hand. An innumerable crowd peoples the world below. The heavenly wrath confounds a mass of mortals in every sort of action, on foot, on horseback. They are hurled to the ground or fall on their backs, faces, sides, in such variety of attitude as one can scarcely imagine. On the foreground to the left, stands Luca Signorelli, with Angelico, according to tradition, by his side; they look on whilst Antichrist on a pedestal, inspired by the Devil, preaches to a multitude who listen, commune, or distribute to each other the wealth which is the reward offered with full hands by the Tempter. In front of a splendid temple, occupying the right distance, episodes too numerous for description are depicted.¹

The next lunette on the same side represents Paradise. The happy of both sexes stand in ecstasy, attended by angels who deposit crowns on their heads, and point out to them the way to the more distant abodes of bliss, whilst others in flight play instruments or cast flowers in most graceful motion.²

On the wall pierced by the window, the embrasure of which contains two angels and two canonised bishops, an altar covers the lower part. To the left, the elect proceed upwards to heaven, guided by angels, and other celestial messengers, in a higher space, rush down with crowns, or float in ether, playing lutes and casting flowers.³ In contrast to this scene, the menacing Archangels, with S. Michael at their head, occupy the right of the pointed window above the altar. The fires of hell encompass a mob led by one holding a flag. Charon in his boat rows with his hideous wings. Groups await his pleasure for a passage of Acheron; and spirits assail the forms of the damned.⁴

Pursuing the course of the story, in the opposite side (right of the chapel, the infernal regions are on the lunette nearest the altar. The archangels,

³ A small window in the midst of these groups has in its embrasure an angel expelling Satan, and S. Michael weighing the souls.

⁴ In the sides of a little window in the midst of this group, the words “Ave Maria” are inscribed. In the skirting to the left of the altar, a vertical chain of two rectangular panels with a medallion between them, represent—1. Dante asleep with an Eagle above him. 2. Dante followed by Virgil and seeing the bas-relief of the Annunciation. 3. Dante’s meeting with Oderisio da Gubbio. In the same order on the skirting of the right side of the altar:—1. Unknown subject. 2. Perseus and Andromeda. 3. Marriage of Perseus and Andromeda.

on high to the right, winged, and in armour, stand by, as the ministers of Satan drive the sinners down, carry them on their backs, repel them panting and despairing, or strangle them with cords.¹

The next lunette near the door (right) is devoted to the Resurrection. Two angels, amidst clouds alive with cherubs, blow the last trump, their draperies and ribands flying in the wind. Beneath them, the people rise from their tombs, in the flesh or as skeletons. In the centre of a lower skirting, an arch confines the Dead Christ, resting His head on the Virgin's lap, and watched by a standing apostle on the right. A grieving figure is at His feet. The kneeling Magdalen, between Him and the spectator, kisses His lifeless hand; and in the rear, in the shape of a bas-relief on a tomb, the body of the Redeemer is carried by three bearers to the grave.²

At the side of the door is a continuation of the Destruction of the Wicked. Beneath on each hand are two portraits, one of them probably that of Signorelli, the other that of Niccola di Francesco, who ordered the frescoes. To the ceiling of Angelico, which is that of the subdivision nearest the altar, Signorelli added one section, left empty by the Dominican, depicting Michael-angelique figures sounding trumpets, and others carrying the emblems of the Passion. In the four sections of the second ceiling, Luca painted a choir of eight virgins, fifteen doctors of the Church, thirteen patriarchs, and seven martyrs.³

Nothing can be more hardy than the angel pursuing with his drawn sword the falling form of the demon. The innumerable figures in the episodes of Antichrist's miracles are distributed with a skill equal to that of Michael Angelo. The architecture is in the best classic style. The angels in the Paradise charm by nobleness and grace, those who guide the elect upwards to Paradise are also beautiful, and the very finest ever designed by the master. The archangels and the condemned, expelled from the sky, are grandiose and truly admirable. The animation and life in the lower scenes are as great as those in Michael Angelo's battle of Anghiari, the nudes like those of the Sixtine; and the foreshortenings are the perfection of those originally conceived by the daring of Uccello and Piero della Francesca. The struggles of the imps and souls are scientifically rendered with extraordinary truth and with an energy well suited to the subject, and the spaces filled by the parts are perfectly divided. The angels in the Resurrection remind one of the Hercules in the Sistine Chapel, whilst the groups below, though somewhat affected, are still effective. The grinning skeletons, varying the array of souls rising to the judgment, partake of the general vehemence ; they move as living things, and are wonderful as studies of action. The Christ in the Pietà, though muscular, is not depicted without feeling, but the relief figures carrying the Redeemer betray Luca's Umbrian nature, one of them indeed recalling those of Raphael in the various drawings of the same subject at Oxford and Florence, and suggesting that Sanzio had seen the masterpieces of Orvieto. The composition, like so many others by Signorelli, is Michaelangellesque.

Here then, on the classic ground trod before by so many Italian artists, Signorelli, at the age of threescore, was enabled to satisfy his instincts to the full by delineating scenes of a highly dramatic character. Had it been the fortune of Angelico to complete the chapel of S. Brizio, he would no doubt have painted the same subjects in the grand but kindly solemn spirit which pervades those in the ceilings—a spirit the very reverse of that which marks the colossal, and often vulgar, forms of the Cortonese. Both men were great in their path ; but they pursued different ways and aims ; the one wafting the spectator into an atmosphere of calm, the other with difficulty convincing him that he is not hovering over a field of battle. Unavoidable indeed is the reflection that Signorelli, whilst he challenges our admiration, does so by a medley of conflicting and not always pleasing impressions. The pleasure which he creates is not entirely unalloyed. Like Michael Angelo, he fascinates and crushes ; he extorts applause by his extraordinary vigour, and hardly leaves a moment for the analysis of the sensations which crowd together at sight of his masterpieces. Cold reason supervenes. We admit the daring conception, and its successful realisation, but we feel less sympathy than surprise. The athlete has taken away our breath by the performance of his feats ; he has not touched one of the softer fibres of our heart. But the character of Signorelli was eminently calculated to strike the mind and to rouse the attention of Michael Angelo ; nor is it a marvel that, having visited Orvieto, he should be pleased by the art of Luca, and consider some of his groups worthy of reproduction in the Last Judgment of the Sistine Chapel.¹ As for the rest, it would be repetition to enter further into the details of the style and execution of these frescoes, their characteristic features having been already generalised for the sake of presenting to the reader a compact sketch of Signorelli's manner.

His first stay at Orvieto did not exceed two years ; for though he painted in 1503 two fine bust portraits of himself and of Niccola di Francesco, with a boldness and freedom of hand seldom surpassed,¹ he had already (if we believe an inscription which we have not seen) returned in 1502 to Cortona and delivered to the church of S. Margherita a Dead Christ, wailed by the Maries and Apostles, with but slight variations like the fresco in the chapel of S. Brizio, with a predella representing the Sermon on the Mount, the Last Supper, the Kiss of Judas, the Capture, and the Flagellation.² He returned, however, to Orvieto in 1504, perhaps to finish some parts of the chapel in the Duomo, and a picture of S. Mary Magdalen of that date.³

From this time forward, Signorelli resided frequently in Siena, where Pinturicchio, Bazzi, and himself, assisted by Genga and others, competed with the Pacchiarottos, Pacchias, and their local guild-brethren. There was plenty to do for them all, in a city where such enterprising persons as the Piccolomini and the Petrucci contended with each other in display as well as in wealth and power. The cartoons which Signorelli completed there in 1506, for the pavement of the Duomo, were never put in hand;⁴ but they would occupy his leisure hours, and leave him time to compose, paint, and set together the numerous panels which form the great altarpiece of 1507 in S. Medardo at Arcevia. There are not many finer or more pleasing creations of his than this, although it has suffered so much from scaling and from dust. The central Virgin and Child are still Umbrian, but the five predella pieces, Annunciation, Nativity, Adoration, Flight into Egypt, and Massacre of the Innocents, have a peculiar charm on account of their grace and carefulness, and a Peruginesque feeling in the fine proportions and

² This picture is [now in the choir of the Duomo], having been transferred from its original place (noticed in VASARI, vol. vi., pp. 138-9). The Annotators of Vasari give the following inscription not visible to the authors of this work: "LUCAS ÆGIDIJ SIGNORELLI CORTONENSIS MDII." The composition is very animated, reminiscent of one by Botticelli. The drawing is free and bold, the colour sharp and red.

movement of draped or naked figures, which remind one of the youth of Raphael.¹

An affecting incident, which occurred about this period, contributes greatly to our knowledge of Signorelli's character. We have seen how energetic, how gloomy at times, he could be in his pictures. We now remark of what a stern and masculine stuff his mind was made. He was the father of a family respecting which but little is known. One son, who was his favourite, met his death suddenly and apparently by accident. Signorelli caused him to be stripped, "and with great constancy, without repining or tears, painted from his corpse, that he might at leisure contemplate, in the work of his own hand, the treasure which nature had given him, and envious fortune taken away."² The body of the boy was buried at Siena.³

In the meanwhile, Pinturicchio had finished the Piccolomini library, and gone to set up the altarpiece at Spello (April 1508). Signorelli had been to Cortona to fill an office in the municipal council for two months (July and August 1508).⁴ Just then, Julius II. determined to re-adorn the Vatican Stanze. He engaged Signorelli,⁵ Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Bazzi to perform this duty. They all went up to Rome about the same period, and began their labours. Most of them were old and tried hands, Signorelli and Perugino famous. They used to meet in the house of Bramante, and even dined there with Giambattista Caporali, who remembered the occasion,⁶ but they were all obliged to yield the palm to the youthful Raphael, whom Bramante, their host, introduced to the Pope; and they all had the mortification of receiving their dismissal, and of seeing part of their work taken down.⁷ Signorelli, Perugino, and Pinturicchio returned together to Siena, where the latter was presented in January with a son, whom the former held at the baptismal font,¹ and both closed their careers without any further incident of mark. Signorelli remained chiefly in and about Cortona, where several undated pieces prove the untiring industry with which he attended to the orders of his patrons. The Communion of the Apostles, commissioned for the Compagnia di Gesù at Cortona, was produced in 1512;—the altarpiece of Montone, now at Città di Castello,—a Virgin and Child for the bishop of Cortona, now in S. Domenico, and the Deposition from the Cross for La Fratta near Perugia, in 1515;² a Madonna and Saints for the Company of S. Girolamo at Arezzo, in 1520.³ Vasari states that the person who ordered the latter was an advocate named Niccolò Gamurrini, auditor of the Rota, whose portrait was painted by Signorelli in a kneeling attitude before the Virgin and Child. He was recommended by S. Nicholas, besides whom, SS. Donato, Stephen, Jerome, David, and two prophets occupied places around. When the brothers of the company carried the altarpiece on their shoulders from Cortona to Arezzo, they were accompanied by Signorelli, who lodged during his stay in the house of the Vasari. As this occurred, Giorgio, the historian, being then eight years of age, saw Luca, much stricken in years, but full of benevolence and amiability, and heard him tell his father not to check the child's propensity for the pursuit of art.⁴ The impression, which his own observation and the traditions of his family had left, was that Signorelli was of the best manners, sincere, and loving in his social intercourse, mild and kindly in conversation, and above all, courteous to those who wished for the product of his pencil. His teaching of disciples was easy. He lived well, and liked to appear in fine attire; and his good qualities caused him to be venerated abroad as well as at home.⁵ He continued to exercise the duties of his profession to the very last, and Vasari states that he was paralytic when he began a fresco of the Baptism of Christ in the chapel of Cardinal Passerini's palace near Cortona.⁶ That his hand was still firm, though slightly tremulous from age, in 1523 is proved by the receipt for payment of an altarpiece in the Pieve of Foiano, of which Gaye has preserved the facsimile.⁷ In 1524, Signorelli sat for the last time in the Magistracy of Cortona, and it is believed that his death took place either in that year or shortly after.

In the capella del Sacramento of the same collegiate church of S. Medardo is an altarpiece, in the centre of which is a Baptism of Christ inscribed on a scroll: "LUCAS SIGNORELLI DA CORTONA." Yet it looks like a feeble imitation of the master's style by a pupil. Four incidents fill each of two pilasters and are painted by a rude hand of the school of Alunno. The base of the altarpiece is by an artist of the seventeenth century.

The following is a detailed register of the authentic works indicated as having been furnished between 1512 and the date of Luca's death.

The Communion of the Apostles, originally in the Compagnia del Gesù, now in the Duomo of Cortona, is in oil and signed on a pilaster: "LUCAS SIGNORELLUS CORTHUNIENSIS PINGEBAT 1512." The Saviour, in a fine attitude, without any excess of weight in frame, gives the host to the disciples erect or kneeling in threes at each side. Judas, as Vasari says, puts the host into his scrip.¹

The Virgin, standing with the Child in her arms, crowned by two angels, and in the midst of four saints, is a picture of life-size figures in oil, for a long time at Montone, and now in possession of Signor Mancini at Città di Castello.² It is signed: "EGREGIUM QUOD CERNIS OPUS MAGISTER ALOYSIUS PHYSICUS EX GALLIA ET THOMASINA EJUS UXOR EX DEVOTIONE SUIS SUMPTIBUS PONI CURAVERUNT. LUCA SIGNORELLI DE CORTONA PICTORE INSIGNI FORMAS INDUCENTE. ANNO D . . . MDXV." Much injury from darkening of the shadows, from restoring and repainting, is apparent. The predella, with six scenes from the life of S. Cristina, is not to be found at present.

Signorelli's picture of 1515 is not mentioned by guide-books or authors generally, yet exists on the altar of S. Vincenzo in S. Domenico of Cortona, with the following inscription: "IO SERNINIUS EFS CORTONEŒS ICONAM ET ORNATUM P. P. FACIERI A. D. CIOIOXV. HÆREDES VERO D. ASDRUBALIS EJUS EX FVE AB. NEPOTIS P. S. INSTAURAN. CURAVERUNT. A. D. CIOIO.CXIX." This fine panel represents the Virgin, life size, holding the Infant Saviour, resting her feet on three cherubs between two angels, S. Peter Martyr, and another Dominican, the bust of Bishop Serninius, a good portrait, being visible in the right-hand corner. The panel is surrounded by a painted canvas framework. The draperies of the Virgin are scaled off.

The Descent from the Cross of 1515, commissioned for the church of the brotherhood of S. Croce at La Fratta near Perugia, is in Signorelli's usual style, but inferior as to grandeur of composition to that of the Duomo at Cortona; yet the conception is that which many subsequent painters repeated, as Daniel of Volterra in his picture lately in S. Trinità di Monte at Rome; Bazzi, in that of S. Francesco at Siena, Correggio, the Caracci, Rubens, and Van Dyck. Three scenes from the life of S. Helen in the predella are very graceful, but somewhat dryly painted.³

The altarpiece of 1520 (circa), the transfer of which to S. Girolamo of Arezzo gave occasion to Vasari to see Signorelli, is now, in good preservation, in the church of the nuns of S. Spirito, and is composed of life-size figures, in oil, in the master's broad and powerful style; but the colour is of a low key in tone, the half-tints red, and the shadows black.⁴

The picture of Foiano (1523) was a Virgin and Child with saints and angels, and a predella containing incidents from the life of S. Martin.⁵

The following list will comprise all the works of Signorelli seen by the authors in addition to those in the body of the narrative.

³ The expenses incurred and the date are preserved in original records printed in GUALANDI, vol. vi., pp. 36, 37-8.

⁵ [This work still exists in the Collegiata at Foiano.]

Cortona. Compagnia S. Niccolò.—High altar; with subjects on both sides, in oil. The body of Christ held up on the edge of the tomb by an angel, is exhibited by him to the adoration of several saints. S. Francis on the left, kneeling, shows the stigmata. S. Dominic, kneeling likewise, is at S. Francis' side, whilst, in rear of them, two saints stand. S. Jerome is on the right with three angels. The picture is a fine and chastened one in Signorelli's Umbrian manner, purely designed in comparison with other works. The flesh tones are yellowish, the high surface shadows strong and brown.

The Virgin and Child, between SS. Peter and Paul on the obverse, is a grand composition, reminiscent of Fra Bartolommeo, the Infant more pleasing and amiable than usual.

Some frescoes in this church have lately been recovered from whitewash, but are ruined by retouching. They represent a tabernacle enclosing a Virgin, Child, and saints; and are said, on the strength of old records, to have been painted by Signorelli without charge, because he was a member of the brotherhood of S. Niccolò.¹

*Cortona. Chiesa del Gesù.*²—Conception of the Virgin, with six figures at each side, Adam and Eve in the distance—a hard picture of cold general tone and dark shadows. The nude is feeble, and the handling dry. The Nativity, the Virgin adoring the Infant, S. Joseph on the opposite side, three angels above, singing, and the shepherds in background feeble. This and the following in the Chiesa del Gesù show indeed the extensive use of assistants' labour, and possibly the hand of Turpino Zaccagna.

Cortona. Chiesa del Gesù.—Panel, representing the Virgin and Child, between S. Francis and a bishop in friar's dress, reading, Bruno and a saint with a tree in his hand (a half-length of the Eternal in the upper part seems of a later date, and to be of the school). This is a dry, hard production, better on the whole than the two others in the Chiesa del Gesù; but the tone is low and dim, and some parts are scaled.

Cortona.—An Ascension of the Virgin, formerly in the Pieve of Cortona,³ is said to be in the hands of the heirs of Signor Luca Tommasi.⁴

Cortona.—Signor Carlo Tommasi has a small allegory of the Crowning of Plenty (five figures). In possession of the heirs of Signor Agostino Castellani in Cortona also is a half-length of S. Stephen, and a small Nativity; the latter in the better manner of Signorelli, the former careful, but less in the grand style.⁵

Borgo S. Sepolcro. Compagnia di S. Antonio Abate.—The church standard of this brotherhood by Signorelli represents on one side a Crucifixion, marked by the usual boldness of action and vigour of colour. The Saviour is not of a noble form, however, but somewhat mannered. The Virgin lies faint in the arms of the Maries. The distance is rich in episodes, Calvary and the Passion. S. Antony and S. Egidius are on the reverse side of the canvas, with the brethren of the company at their feet.⁶

Castiglione Fiorentino (of old Aretino).⁷ Cappella del Sacramento.—Here is a fresco of Christ taken from the Cross, in the broad manner, the composition a replicate of that in the picture in Cortona cathedral (11 figures):

⁷ VASARI, vol. vi., p. 139.

A piece has been added, apparently in the last century. Some of the high lights are gilt in the Umbrian fashion. The sky is renewed.

Città di Castello. Convent Church of S. Cecilia.—The Virgin holds the Infant, who crowns S. Cecilia on the left, behind whom are S. Francis and a bishop. The Virgin's face is turned to the right towards S. Chiara, behind whom are SS. Anthony and Louis of Toulouse. SS. Catherine and Margaret kneel in the foreground, whilst between them angels gather roses which have fallen from the Virgin's left hand. The composition is overcharged, and the tone generally brown and dim. But the panel is injured by flaying; the Virgin's mantle is repainted anew, and the whole upper angle to the left damaged.

The predella, in the interior of the convent, contains figures of SS. Margaret, John the Baptist, Bernardino, Jerome, Lucy, and the Archangel Michael.¹ In this convent are also two pictures of the school of Signorelli.

Città di Castello.—Signor Mancini owns a Nativity, much better than the altarpiece of Montone previously described, signed on the frieze of a round temple: "L. LUCE DE CORTONA P. C." This is a good picture, in which the influence of Piero della Francesca may be traced. The Virgin kneels in adoration before the Infant on the ground, with the shepherds on the left; and the attendant angels, in the eagerness with which they take part in the scene, recall the works of Filippino Lippi. A shepherd on a hill in the distance plays on a pipe, and a market is held near the temple in the background. The Annunciation to the pastors in the landscape completes the composition. This may be the piece noticed by Vasari in S. Francesco of Città di Castello.² It is well preserved, of a marked brown tone; and entitles Signorelli to be called the Caravaggio of his time.

An Annunciation in the hands of the same proprietor is not by Signorelli, but by Raphael of Città di Castello.

Florence. [Academy, No. 164].—from S. Trinità of Cortona—in Signorelli's grand manner—representing the Virgin and Child between the Archangels Michael and Gabriel, and the sitting SS. Augustine and Athanasius, with a Trinity in the upper space.

Florence. Academy [No. 164].—A predella, with the Last Supper, the Entrance into Jerusalem, and the Flagellation, boldly and freely handled. These scenes are not very pleasing. The neglect and colossal nature of the figures are peculiar to the master's latest creations.

Florence. Academy [No. 65].—Canvas, assigned to Andrea del Castagno. Christ Crucified, with a kneeling Magdalen, and a Deposition from the Cross in the distance. This, no doubt, was a church standard, by Signorelli.

Florence. Uffizi [No. 1291].—A well-preserved round of the Holy Family, all intent on the contents of a book read by the Virgin—in Signorelli's broad, forcible style.

Florence. Uffizi [No. 1298].—Originally in S. Lucia of Montepulciano. Predella, containing the Annunciation, Nativity, and Adoration of the Magi—a fine original.³

³ [A panel of the Virgin and Child—an undoubted work of Signorelli—still exists in this church (reproduced in the volume Val di Chiana, by F. BARGAGLI-PETRUCCHI; Bergamo, 1917).]

Florence. Galleria Lombardi (once belonging to the Albergotti family at Arezzo.)—A Virgin and Child, with four angels above the group—a feeble production, so much below the mark of the master that we might believe it executed by a pupil.

Florence. Galleria Torrigiani [No. 8].—Magnificent life-size portrait of a man in a red cap and vest, three-quarters to the left. It is described as a portrait of Signorelli himself, but seems to be that of a person of higher condition. It is very broadly modelled, a little grey in tone, and is one of Signorelli's Florentine creations. An antique arch adorns a distance to the right. In front of it are two nude figures, one of which leans on a staff. The red cap is a little restored.¹

Milan. Brera [No. 477].—Round (wood). The Virgin, Child, and angels, in Signorelli's softer mood, as illustrated in the altarpiece of Arcevia. Finely and carefully drawn, and copiously ornamented with gold.

Altenburg (in the Saxon Duchy of that name)—Town Museum [No. 138-142].—Bequeathed by the late Herr von Lindenau. Five parts of a predella by Signorelli (wood), representing—Christ on the Mount; the Flagellation; the Crucifixion; the Entombment; the Resurrection. This predella is said to have been originally at La Fratta, near Perugia. The subjects are slightly but rapidly handled, in oil. The figures generally are Herculean. The movement of the Christ in the Resurrection is bold, as in the later works of Michael Angelo, and the scourgers in the Flagellation are remarkable for the coarse energy of their action, and the vulgar development of muscular strength.

Same Gallery [No. 143-146].—Four small panels, in the form of pointed niches, about one foot high, containing each a saint—SS. Bernardino, Louis of France, and two females of the Franciscan Order. These are painted in oil, in the style of the foregoing, and were perhaps part of the same altarpiece.

Paris. Louvre [No. 1525].—Predella, representing the Virgin's Birth. This is one of the best examples of Signorelli. The composition is fine; the figures are dignified without mannerism.

Paris. Louvre [No. 1526].—Adoration of the Magi, rude; said to have been (see Catal. of ex-Campana Collection, anno 1859) commissioned in 1482 for S. Agostino of Città di Castello.²

Paris. Louvre [No. 1527].—Knee-piece (fragment), comprising seven life-size heads. Less rude than the foregoing. But both give a slight idea of Signorelli's talent. The reddish colour is poorly handled.

Paris. Louvre [No. 1528].—Virgin Reading, with the Child on her lap. This injured production looks as if it might have issued from Signorelli's shop. It is, however, feeble.

Vienna. Belvedere Gallery [No. 7].—Nativity, half-life size, transferred to canvas, and thereby somewhat injured. Although we trace the stamp of Signorelli in this piece, it lacks the master's own grandeur and power. The figures are somewhat paltry in drawing and execution.

London. Mr. Barker's Collection.—A small and injured but genuine S. George and the Dragon, in Signorelli's Michaelangellesque style.³

² [Mr. Berenson refuses this to Signorelli.]

³ [This was in 1894 in Sir W. Farrer's Collection in London.]

Same Collection.—Two pilasters, on one of which are SS. Bernard, Onofrio, and Dorothy; on the other, SS. Bernard and Jerome, and the Angel and Tobit. Fine genuine works.

London. Lord Taunton (ex-Stoke Park).—Martyrdom of S. Catherine; a good example, full of life and animation, and with but a few and slight retouches.

Scotland. Glenlyon (seat of Captain Stirling).—Small panel of about twenty-nine figures, representing the Pharisees' feast; the Magdalen approaching the Saviour with the ointment, on the right; Martha, Mary, and curious bystanders, at the entrance. It is spirited, and of Signorelli's fine time; well composed, full of variety, animation and nature, and, with the exception of a repainted figure at the end of the left wing of the table, in fair preservation. [Now in Dublin Gallery.]

Pollokshaws.—Collection of Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell, M.P. No. 90 at the Manchester Exhibition. A genuine Pieta by Signorelli.

Liverpool Institution [No. 26].—Panel. Virgin seated, with the Infant Christ in her arms—distance a landscape—assigned to Cima da Conegliano, but by Signorelli, though not one of his best, and damaged.

St. Petersburg. Collection of H.I.H. the Grand Duchess Marie, widow of the Duke of Leuchtenberg (round, wood, figures half life-size.) Nativity. The Virgin kneels, attended by an angel, near the Infant on the ground. S. Joseph descends some steps. The character is Signorelli's, the composition and execution below his. This is a school work.

The following noticed by Vasari are not forthcoming at this time:—Arezzo—Standard for the Company of S. Catherine (VASARI, vi. 137); standard of the Company of the S. Trinità (ib.); altarpiece of S. Margarita (ib. 144); frescoes and an altarpiece in S. Agostino (ib.); altarpiece in Cappella degli Accolti at S. Signorelli was clearly not a man fitted to give an impulse to a school. His own skill was such that he merely required the simplest aid from his assistants; and most of those whose works have been preserved proved themselves unworthy of being remembered. Maso Papacello, Francesco Signorelli, Turpino Zaccagna, and others, may therefore be comprised in the following short notices.

Vasari does not mention Papacello as a pupil of Signorelli. On the contrary, he calls him a disciple of Giulio Romano and Benedetto (error for Giambattista) Caporali.¹ But Papacello's remaining panels betray the influence of Signorelli. His real name is Tommaso Barnabei. The earliest frescoes with which he is connected are those of Giulio Romano at Rome, after the death of Raphael, and before the Mantuan period.² In these, it is natural that the assistant's hand should not be discerned. We next see Papacello, about 1523-4, helping Giambattista Caporali at the villa of Cardinal Passerini, near Cortona,³—but in a subordinate capacity, and leaving no trace of his own style. In 1524, we first find a genuine production from his hand—a Conception, in S. Maria del Calcinaio, near Cortona—in which there is a reminiscence of Signorelli, combined with raw chalky tones and leaden shadows.⁴ Two other pictures of the same class—an Adoration of the Magi, and Annunciation, dated 1527—are in the same church, and suffice to characterise the low rate of Papacello's talent.⁵ He finally settled at Perugia. Mariotti notices frescoes commissioned of him at Cesi, in the diocese of Spoleto, by the brethren of the church of S. Maria.⁶ Vasari alludes to others in the fortress of Perugia;⁷ and we learn from the will of Giambattista Caporali, dated July 27, 1553, that Maso was witness to that instrument.¹ In the same year, a Trinity with Saints by him, was placed on an altar in S. Francesco of Perugia (now missing),² and in 1559 he died.³

Papacello's was a kindred spirit, as regards manner and execution, to that of Francesco Signorelli, a nephew of Luca,⁴ who may have helped him to some extent in the Chiesa del Gesù at Cortona. His nearest approach to the manner of his uncle is in a somewhat damaged round of the Virgin, Child, and saints in the Palazzo del Comune at Cortona, and in an Incredulity of S. Thomas (injured and feeble) in the choir of the Duomo. In the Monastery church of the Trinità at Cortona, a picture is preserved of which it is doubtful whether it be by Francesco or by Don Bartolommeo della Gatta. The subject is, S. Michael weighing the souls, and S. Benedict at the side of a tomb, behind which the Virgin sits enthroned, in prayer, and surrounded by angels. The long lean figures are coloured with cold tones shadowed in bluish green. A Conception in the choir of S. Francesco at Gubbio, in the style of the foregoing, bears the signature: "FRANCISCUS DE SIGNORELLIS DE CORTONA PINGEBAT." The drawing is defective, the draperies are festooned, the colour is dull and black in shadow; and the arrangement of the personages betrays an absence of perspective science. We may give to Francesco a church standard in the sacristy of the brotherhood of S. Giovanni Decollato at Città di Castello, under the name of Pinturicchio, painted on both sides, and representing on one, S. John the Baptist, and episodes of his life in a distance, on the other the Baptism of Christ.⁵ In the same character as the above, a Tiberius Gracchus, on a pedestal, killing a dragon with a lance, and incidental episodes in a landscape, No. 49, Gallery of Prince Esterhazy at Vienna—assigned to Pinturicchio.

A Virgin and Child between S. Sebastian and S. Roch, in S. M. del Calcinaiò, near Cortona, is said by local authorities to have been by Antonio, a son of Luca Signorelli, but it is now not forthcoming.⁶

Another workman of the school is one whose coarse Madonna and saints in the sacristy of S. Girolamo al Seminario in Città di Castello is signed: "HOC OPUS FECIT JOHES BTA 1492." A predella contains S. Jerome drawing the thorn from the lion's paw, S. Jerome in prayer, and the Adoration of the Shepherds.⁷

Turpino Zaccagna, the last of these subordinates,⁸ is the author of a Burial and Ascension of the Virgin in the choir of the Duomo at Cortona, which, like one by Francesco Signorelli, is dark in outlines and shadow, and unprepossessing in every sense.

The list of inferior school pieces may be closed as follows:—

four shepherds repainted. The predella, which probably once belonged to another picture, represents scenes from the life of S. Benedict. The handling is the same as that of the Nativity.

Cortona. S. Francesco, Choir.—Virgin and Child between SS. Antony, Michael, Bernardino, and Bonaventura—longitudinally split in three places; also from Signorelli's shop, and better than the immediately foregoing.

Cortona. Spedale.—A Circumcision in the apartments of the Rettore (nineteen figures), with some of the heads retouched, seems to have been by an assistant in Signorelli's atelier. A predella, with scenes from the legend of S. Antony of Padua, in the same place, is better.

Pacciano (province of Orvieto, ex-convent of S. Antonio).—The most striking example of school-work is an altarpiece in the choir of the church at this place, representing the Virgin enthroned with the Child, between SS. Michael, Lawrence, Antony the Abbot, and Sebastian, erect; and SS. Francis and Antony of Padua kneeling. Eight angels surround the Virgin. On the pilasters are the words: "LUCAS SIGNORELLIS DE CORTONA PINGEBAT." The predella, which is now alone on the altar, comprises, amongst others, figures of SS. Bernardino and Antony. Were it not for the signature, the name of Signorelli would be out of the question. The types and forms, as well as the handling, coarse and feeble, are of the same kind as in the Papacello's of S. M. del Calcinaio near Cortona.¹

Milan. Brera, Galleria Oggiono.—Predella, representing scenes from the life of S. Cristina. (The same as those in the lost predella of the Madonna and saints, belonging to Signor Mancini at Città di Castello.) We note the spirit of Signorelli without his power.

Ireland. Marquis of Lothian.—Panel, arched at top, representing the life-size SS. Peter and Stephen—mannered drawing, defective forms, and heavy extremities. This is a rude tempera of Signorelli's school. It is well preserved.

Oxford. University Gallery.—The following, presented by the Hon. W. Fox Strangways, are assigned to Luca Signorelli. Salutation, a small panel, by some Umbrian follower of Gentile da Fabriano. S. Paul, by the Ferrarese Marco Zoppo, a half-length. Holy Family, round, feeble production of a painter later than Lorenzo di Credi, the colour and handling reminiscent of that of Pier' di Cosimo.

A few remarks, in conclusion, may be necessary to characterise two Nativities which claim, on account of their inscriptions, to be works of Luca Signorelli.

Genoa. Al Terragio (belonging to Dottore Ettore Costa).—The Virgin adores the Child. She is accompanied by Joseph, and attended by four angels. In the distance, the shepherds receive the message from heaven. On a cartellino, fast to a pilaster, are the words "LUCE OPUS." Originally in oil on wood, and not free from restoring.

Milan. Professor Molteni.—This also is a Nativity, with the Virgin, Child, S. Joseph, and an angel, on wood in oil, and inscribed "1501 LUCE OPUS."

Signorelli generally signs "Luca Cortonensis" or "Coritius." The name is given without indication of country on the two panels under examination. They are Umbrian, with a stamp of art related to that of Signorelli's disciples, distantly reminiscent of Signorelli himself in the character of the Infant Christ, in the architecture and landscape. But the technical handling and colour are different from those of the master; his power and style are alike wanting. They date from the year 1501, at which period Signorelli was in his greatest vigour. They seem the creation of a third or fourth-rate craftsman, who unfortunately bears the name of Luca, and is an Umbrian in manner, but who lacks even the share of grandeur which may be discerned in the least favoured of the assistants in Signorelli's atelier.

BARTOLOMMEO DELLA GATTA, PECORI, SOGGI

SIGNORELLI, we have said, was not gifted with the peculiar talent of a teacher, though he exercised a vast influence over painters of his own and succeeding times. Amongst contemporaries there is none on whom he more surely impressed his style than on Don Bartolommeo della Gatta.

This monk was older than Signorelli by many years, and had entered the Camaldolese convent of the Angeli at Florence in the first half of the fifteenth century.¹ He learnt miniature there, and attended to religious duties with satisfaction to the community and advantage to himself. His vellums were considered valuable; and a missal, into which he introduced scenes from the Passion, was found of sufficient beauty to warrant its presentation to Sixtus IV.² A small abbey served by very few monks belonged to the Camaldolese of Arezzo. It was called Badia di S. Clemente, and was poorly endowed. Its walls were bare, and the choir was not enlivened by the sounds of an organ. Della Gatta was made abbot of this small fraternity and justified the choice by covering the empty spaces with frescoes, and by the invention of an organ of pasteboard, which yielded the truest and softest of tones. Not content with adorning the interior of his home, he found occasion to eke out the poor sustenance of his brother monks by taking commissions for altarpieces, and thus showed himself a benefactor of his Order.³

It is not possible to assign dates to these events, nor are there means of ascertaining how Della Gatta made the acquaintance of Signorelli and Perugino, though he might have met them at Arezzo, if it be true that they were both assistants to Piero della Francesca. It is enough to state that he did not owe his education in art to either of them. Time has disposed of all his miniatures; though some are ascribed to him of which the authenticity is a matter of dispute;¹ but panels exist at Arezzo, from which we judge that, previous to visiting Rome, he had acquired a style of his own, in which patience and carefulness are distinguishing characteristics. He is said to have begun painting on a large scale during the years which followed the outbreak of the plague at Arezzo (1468);² and this is correct in so far that we possess two out of three panels representing the invocation of the plague saint, S. Roch, commissioned for religious houses in Arezzo; and that one of them, originally in the Brotherhood of Mercy and now in the Town Hall,³ bears the date of 1479. It presents to our view the square of the city, on which the tile-coloured house of the Brotherhood of Mercy is erected. Three gravediggers at the foot of the doorsteps stand on the parti-coloured marbles of the pavement. They have just returned from burying some plague-stricken corpses. S. Roch is on the foreground, a thin slender figure in a gentle attitude, looking up bareheaded to heaven and his hands joined in prayer. A long staff rests on the inner bend of his arm and supports his hat. He wears yellow buskins, a green tunic, and ashen green mantle. The Virgin appears above the house between two angels in white vestments and resting on a cloud supported by cherubs' heads. There is very little relief in the flat red tone, which pervades the dry surface of colour on the panel. There is gentleness in the aspect of the Virgin and saint, an eel-like quickness of motion in the angels—reminiscent of the Lippi. The figures are slender; the drawing is a little mannered, but the execution is very careful, and proves that Don Bartolommeo was not as yet far advanced in his pictorial career.⁴

The second of these pieces represents the saint in a kneeling posture, looking up, and the Eternal floating in the heavens supported by angels who throw plague-darts. It is apparently that which Vasari describes in S. Piero of Arezzo, being adorned in the distance with a view of that

² VASARI, vol. v., p. 45.

³ [Now in the Pinacoteca.]

⁴ This picture is noticed by VASARI, vol. v., p. 46. It is on wood; and the principal figure has the size of life. At the feet of S. Roch one reads: "TEMPORE . SPECTABILUM . VIRORUM . RECTORUM . GUIDI ANTONII DE CAMAJANIS . SER BAPTISTE CATENACI DE CATENACHIS . TOMASI RINALDI DE COZARIS . SER PAULI NICOLAI DE GALLIS . JOHANNIS VINCENTII DE JUDICIBUS , SER BAPTISTE JOHANNIS COLIS . SER FINI BERNARDI DE AZZIS ZACHARIE . SER JOHANNIS BAPTISTE DE LAMBERTIS . MCCCCLXXVIII."

city. It conveys no other impression of Don Bartolommeo's talent than the previous one, and seems to date from the same period.¹

A third production of this time and quite in the abbot's manner, may be found in a damaged lunette fresco of the Vision of S. Bernard above the outer portal of S. Bernardo of Arezzo.²

These, we should say, are all works of Don Bartolommeo before his Roman journey, examples of a time when the habits of the miniaturist had not been cast aside, when the monk was free as yet from contact with Signorelli, and when he exerted himself to delineate forms of a delicate, slender, and not ungraceful appearance, without much relief by light and shade. They show a painter of a gentle turn, full of application and of patience, clever in details and in landscape, but without great powers, and essentially devoid of feeling as a colourist. A man of his sort was evidently fitted to act under masters of superior attainments. He would be ready to follow the instructions of any one who might wish to employ him, and he might afford invaluable assistance to Signorelli and Perugino by his fitness for working out, with their orders, the minutiae of landscape and of ornament. There is no reason indeed to doubt that Don Bartolommeo helped them in the Sistine Chapel. The absence of his pictures at Arezzo between 1479 to 1486 indicates the period of his stay at Rome. Vasari says "that he served at the Sistine in company with Signorelli and Perugino"³ . . . and that he began something in the rooms of the Vatican."⁴ Of the latter nothing remains, but Della Gatta's hand is apparent in Signorelli's fresco, and in Perugino's of the Delivery of the Keys. In the former we should attribute to him a group of females and children in various postures in front of the sitting Moses, because they are too angular in drawing, unrefined in action, and coarse in features for Signorelli, whilst the aged air and heavy inexpressive heads of the children are often repeated by the abbot. He may have helped Signorelli to better purpose in the landscape, gilding, and embroideries of his fresco. In such minor parts alone can we consider him to have aided Perugino.

¹ This is also in the Town Hall of Arezzo. [Now in Pinacoteca.] The saint is of life-size and wears a light blue tunic and yellow socks. His form is bony and raw. The commentators of Vasari do not believe this to have been the original in S. Piero of Arezzo; which they cite as having been transported to Campriano, near Arezzo. They add that the figure of S. Roch has been repainted and turned into a S. Martin. If this be true, we must believe that the third S. Roch seen by Vasari in the Pieve of Arezzo at the altar of the Lippi is that described in the text. We must consequently assume that the panels of S. Piero and of the Pieve were replicas.

Della Gatta returned an altered man to Arezzo. His picture of 1486 in the Pieve di S. Giuliano at Castiglione Fiorentino proves that he had learnt to follow Luca's style, and also that he had studied the works of the Florentines and Umbrians who were in Sixtus IV.'s service at Rome.

The life-sized Virgin, enthroned, is guarded by angels and seraphs. The Infant Christ lies in her joined hands. At her sides S. Peter and S. Julian, S. Paul and S. Michael attend. A most careful handling distinguishes the whole piece; and the ornaments are so finished that they court the closest examination; the raw and reddish lights, the dark grey shadows are both hatched in one direction as in engravings, and are parted by a sharp line of demarcation. A tenuous contour defines the parts with great precision, producing bony and angular forms. The coarse and, in some instances, affected personages are clothed in draperies of hard and broken folds. The Virgin's head is an overcharged imitation of those common to Signorelli, Botticelli, and Filippino Lippi. The limbs and extremities display a study and rendering of anatomy that betray the influence of Luca. Two children at the foot of the throne holding flowers rival in vulgarity those in the History of Moses at the Sistine.

In the predella, four scenes from the life of S. Julian are fairly composed of slender and animated figures, the small size of which no doubt conceals some usual deficiencies.¹

Looking at this production as a whole, one sees that the original source from which its peculiarities are derived is that of Piero della Francesca; but it is evident also that Della Gatta, instead of improving, has sunk irrevocably into the common; that he has exchanged the gentleness of the first period for some of the vehemence of Signorelli, without gaining anything in strength.

Other panels in the Pieve of S. Giuliano at Castel Fiorentino illustrate this change, and give a further insight into Don Bartolommeo's character. In the sacristy,² a female of noble family is represented with an infant in arms, kneeling before an erect Archangel Michael, who tramples on the dragon. Grotesque and affected as the saint appears, his shape and air still remind one of Signorelli, whilst the head of the lady is Peruginesque in form.¹ But the handling of this and of two other pictures in the same edifice already points to the decline of Don Bartolommeo's powers.²

At times he more exclusively reproduces the exaggerated force of his self-elected model Luca, as one sees in the S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, which stands on an altar in the right transept of S. Francesco of Castiglione Fiorentino, and in a wasted S. Jerome penitent, a fresco now in the chapter-house of the episcopal palace at Arezzo. In both he has chosen a rugged landscape as the scene of the action, studying from nature, one should think, a nook in the rocky and wooded wilderness, which still exists in the neighbourhood of the monasteries of Vallombrosa and La Verna. The figures, however, only reveal the intention of violent and rapid motion. They are hard and wooden, low and grey in flesh tone, and shaded abruptly with olive brown.³

But it is useless to pretend to give a perfect sketch of Don Bartolommeo's career, which closes in 1491 at Arezzo.⁴ One picture in addition to those already mentioned may be assigned to him. It is an Assumption on the high altar of S. Domenico at Cortona, very much

² 1. In sacristy a Virgin of Mercy. 2. In the church, on the second altar to the right as you enter, a Virgin and Child and angels, and in front SS. Stephen and Bartholomew. The first of these is much damaged, the second is all repainted, but is still reminiscent of Don B. and shows a mixture of Peruginesque elements, with the more usual ones of his later style.

In the fresco, which has been injured by time and repainting, and perhaps by its transfer from the Gozzari Chapel, in which it originally stood, to the chapter-house, two small episodes are given in the distance. The saint is long, lean, and bony, and praised beyond measure by VASARI, vol. v., p. 46. The colour is dulled to a chocolate tinge.

⁴ Vasari gives the date of Della Gatta's death 1461. The printer seems to have turned the third cipher upside down. (See VASARI, vol. v., p. 53).

[Mr. Berenson ascribes to Della Gatta the following works not named in the text:—

ROME.	Coll. Villamarina. Madonna and Child.
BUDA-PESTH.	Gallery. No. 88. Madonna and Child ?.
LE MANS.	Gallery. No. 18. Madonna ?.

injured by retouching, and perhaps finished by two hands.¹ The greater number of the frescoes noticed by Vasari have perished or disappeared, and although some things may be found, and have indeed been described in these pages, recalling Signorelli, yet in the manner of the abbot, their value is hardly more than nominal.²

It would be unjust, however, to Della Gatta, to keep silence respecting the painters of Arezzo, who partly owed their education to his care, not because they reflect any lustre on his name, or tend to raise it in the estimation of posterity, but because they have left mementoes of his teaching, and thus have furnished pages to the history of Vasari.

Domenico Pecori was doubtless seldom heard of outside Arezzo. His pictures, as still shown there, are a fourth-rate mixture of a manner taken through Della Gatta from Signorelli and Perugino.³ Looking at his Adoration of the Virgin in the sacristy of the Pieve, and considering the pretty way in which the Infant Christ is held on the Virgin's lap, as she looks down from a glory of cherubs to four saints in a portico, one fancies that he studied under the abbot of S. Clemente before his journey to Rome.⁴ A Virgin of Mercy in S. Maria della Pieve is remarkable for confused composition and the monotony of its pallid colour. Dry and defective drawing and want of relief repel the spectator, who sees the younger Spinelli's faults carried on to the sixteenth century.⁵

¹ The Apostles about the tomb look up to heaven, towards which the Virgin is taken in a double glory of cherubs and of angels playing instruments. Four of the latter, with viols and harps, kneel at her sides in graceful action. In the lower foreground, a Dominican nun and a Dominican friar are on their knees in prayer. The upper part of the picture is better than the lower. It is arranged and handled in the spirit of Della Gatta's early pieces in the Town Hall and at S. Bernardo of Arezzo, and reminiscent of them in the types, the drawing, and the drapery. It is, however, a later work, with something of Piero della Francesca and Signorelli's manner, and in so far recalls the Virgin and Child of Castiglione Aretino. The lower part exhibits the hardness and rigidity of vehement action of the later S. Francis and S. Jerome. No painter is better entitled to the authorship than Della Gatta and his assistants—yet we must remember that much injury has been done by repainting. A large piece in the upper curve of the glory is new.

⁵ The Eternal, between two angels, launches His arrows, which are supposed to be intercepted by the Virgin's mantle. Under its folds, as they are looped back by two angels, kneel the males to the right under the guard of a canonised bishop with a dragon at his feet, the females to the left under that of S. Mark. The panel

It is no wonder that the designs of such a man, when transferred to the glass windows of the chapel in the episcopal palace should be abused, and that Stagio, Pecori's partner, should afterwards have preferred the talents of William of Marseilles.¹ Nor is it matter for surprise that Pecori should seek assistance from a draughtsman of more experience than himself in the Circumcision of S. Agostino. The mere fact that an artist engaged on a subject involving architectural detail should employ another to line out the perspective of an interior, is indeed no proof of his want of ability; but this ambitious work of Pecori contains a large assemblage of people placed at random on a sloping plane in advance of an altar, on which the Infant lies and behind which Simeon stands. No attempt is made to compensate the defects of linear perspective by atmosphere. Chiaroscuro is all but absent. The paltry personages that should animate the scene are drawn with wiry outlines, betraying insufficient study of the nude; and their affected airs remind one of the Peruginesque style in the inferior productions of Tiberio d'Assisi. The flesh is of a grey-brown colour with slight high surface shadows; and tasteless ornament covers the arches and panelled ceiling of the Temple, in which the ceremony is performed.²

The person who is said to have done the perspective for Pecori is Niccolò Soggi, his friend and contemporary,³ the same who afterwards painted for him a Virgin of Mercy attached to a baldachin belonging to the brotherhood of Arezzo. This baldachin was burnt in S. Francesco during a sacred play in which Paradise was represented. The lights set fire to the hangings, and a friar who sat as the Eternal was burnt to death together with sixty-six of the congregation.⁴

One is led naturally to inquire whether Soggi, who afforded such frequent assistance to Pecori, was not the person to whom the latter owed the Peruginesque in his manner; for Vasari states that Soggi was Perugino's pupil at Florence.⁵ Without entering at any length into this question, it is sufficient to remark that Soggi has a local Aretine stamp and something of the Umbrian of Perugino, but that his talent does not justify Vasari in saying that, "after Raphael no one was more studious or diligent than he."⁶ Soggi is indeed but little superior to Pecori, and only preserves the humble cento of Signorelli and Perugino handed down by Don Bartolommeo della Gatta. His life is of use, however, in conjunction with Pecori's, because it contains authentic dates and certified facts, and we thus become acquainted with the time when both laboured. He was born at Arezzo in 1480,¹ but was taken at an early age to Florence, where he studied in the Medici Garden.² After giving some proofs of his skill there, he was sent by his father (c. 1512) to Rome, under the patronage of the Cardinal di Monte, for whom he furnished arms and pictures with varying success.³ He was for a long time secure of the prelates' interest, and accompanied him to Arezzo, settling there and doing much for the churches and companies of the town.⁴ The same interest no doubt insured him commissions (1522) from Baldo Magini, a chamberlain of Pope Julius II., who had undertaken works of some importance in the church of the Madonna delle Carceri at Prato. There he had the audacity to measure himself against Andrea del Sarto, offering to wager any sum he could beat him at any picture. Andrea contemptuously retorted:—he could back his boy Puligo to do better.⁵ The favour of Baldo Magini was, however, proof against these taunts, and Soggi remained at Prato until he had finished an altarpiece⁶ and a portrait of his patron. On his return to Florence he encountered a lively opposition from the friends of Andrea del Sarto.⁷ The quality which had recommended him to Pecori at Arezzo made him useful for a time in the capital, and he traced the perspective of an Annunciation for Giovanni Francesco Rustici;⁸ but he could not long withstand the rivalry of numerous and better masters than himself, and after 1527 he lived chiefly at Arezzo, where he painted frescoes in the Campagna della Nunziata,⁹ in the convent of the Murate¹⁰ in S. Benedetto,¹¹ besides canvases and panels for other places; and the comedy of the Intronati, performed at Arezzo in 1534 before Alexander de' Medici, was given with his decorations.¹ His fortunes seriously declined as he grew older, and he travelled to Milan about 1546, anticipating sustenance or employment from his own pupil Giuntalodi. His hopes were necessarily frustrated, because Giuntalodi, who would never have made a fortune out of the art communicated to him by Soggi, was then established as an architect, and refused to do more than assist his old master with a small sum of money.² Soggi therefore resumed his wanderings, went to Rome again at the elevation of Julius III. in 1550, received commissions from the Pope, and returned the following year to Arezzo to die and receive a decent burial in S. Domenico.³

Amongst the pictures completed during Soggi's first stay in Arezzo, the Nativity, originally at the Madonna delle Lagrime, now in the SS. Annunziata at Arezzo, may be singled out as the most praised by Vasari.⁴ It is dated 1522, and represents the Infant Christ leaning on a cushion in the centre of the foreground between the kneeling Virgin and S. Joseph, whilst three angels sing from a long scroll in the sky. Two shepherds, whose heads seem to be portraits, stand to the left and behind the Virgin, and a third bows, with his arms crossed and one knee on the ground, in an attitude of great humility. The most remarkable feature is an effect of light like those of Hondthorst, with a low red monotonous colour unrelieved by strong shadow. The Umbrian character in the angels and kneeling shepherd does not extend to the other figures, of which the types and angular forms, as well as the straight and broken drapery, seem inspired from the older manner of Piero della Francesca. Careful and patient handling is naturally allied to want of atmosphere.⁵

A nearer relation to Perugino may be discerned in the damaged remnants of a fresco of the Virgin, Child, and saints in S. Francesco of Arezzo; but the local style of Della Gatta and Pecori is still apparent in the mechanical drawing of the long and ungraceful figures.⁶

In the Duomo at Prato, Soggi was spurred to greater exertion. He painted the likeness of Baldo Magini, erect under an arch, with more natural colour and better relief than usual. He produced something broader and better in every sense than at Arezzo,¹ but, admitting this, it is still improbable that he should be the author of an Annunciation dated 1523 (or 6) in the Hospital of S. Bonifacio at Florence. It suggests the name of Sogliani rather than that of Soggi,² whereas the Virgin and Child between two saints and angels at the Pitti does betray Perugian character (ex. gr. of Manni) in the angels, and a relation to the style of Pecori.³

⁵ This picture is mentioned by VASARI, vol. x., p. 212, and vol. ix., p. 74. It bears an inscription as follows: "FRANCS: D. RICCIARDIS P. C. A. MDXXII." A recent cleaning has injured the surface.

⁶ Bits of the outline of the Virgin and Child, together with the contours of a kneeling Baptist and an erect friar on the left, and three angels singing from a long scroll, in the sky, the saints on the right, are obliterated. VASARI (vol. x., p. 211) notices this work, which seems to have been prepared as usual with verde, and hatched, and to have been subsequently varnished.

The following list classifies under one head some unimportant pieces at Arezzo, which bear the impress of Soggi and of Pecori:—

Arezzo. S. Domenico (chapel to the rear of the choir).—S. Mary Magdalen between two females of the Dominican Order in a landscape—distance—wood—much injured. The figures are paltry, and reminiscent of those in the Virgin and Saints by Pecori in the sacristy of the Pieve.

Same Church.—Lunette, above outer portal. Virgin and Child and seraphs, S. Dominic and another saint. Same class as the foregoing.

Arezzo. S. Michele (cloister of old Badia S. Fiore, and now a public school).—The lunettes above the doors contain frescoes: 1. Virgin and Child and two angels; 2. Two Saints; 3. The Saviour Blessing. These and other bits are executed with some Peruginesque feeling; the manner being local, and akin to that of Pecori and Soggi. We know of the latter that he painted in this place a Christ on the Mount, which has perished (VASARI, vol. x., p. 215).

Arezzo. Duomo.—A number of altarpieces hang in a passage leading from the Duomo to the episcopal palace. Amongst them is one of many figures (saints and angels), commissioned it is said, on Vasari's authority (VASARI, vol. v., p. 52), by one Donato Marinelli, and finished, with the assistance of Capanna of Siena, by Pecori. This may truly be the picture described by Vasari, who restored the altar on which it stood (see note 5 to VASARI, vol. v., p. 52); but there is no proof of its genuineness.

Arezzo. S. Agostino.—An altarpiece of the Virgin and Child Enthroned, in a niche in this church, might be considered more in Pecori's manner, as, ex. gr., in the ornaments; but the surface is much repainted. A bishop, and a S. M. Magdalen in the choir, repainted likewise, seem to have been part of this picture.

The following works by Pecori are said to exist:—Campriano, outside Arezzo—Virgin and Child; SS. Sebastian and Fabian, described by Vasari,

Vasari justly doubts the genuineness of a Virgin and Child between SS. Peter and Jerome, formerly on the high altar of the Child of the Cappuccini, now in S. Piero Martire at Prato. It is a very rough production. (VASARI, vol. x., pp. 213-14.)

³ [Pitti Gallery, No. 77.] The figures are paltry, the Child heavy, with a large head. The general tone is reddish, which may, however, be due to restoring.

To one acquainted with the civil commotions which marked the decline of the Sieneſe republic during the fifteenth century, the abſence of eminence in profeſſors of painting will appear neither ſtrange nor unexpected. Repeated changes, accompanied by violence, a conſtant renewal of governments in which the ambition of a few men invariably ſought ſatisfaction at the expenſe of the maſſes, were neceſſarily productive of debility and languor. The hiſtorian of Siena conſequently follows the fortunes of poor limners who laboured under the double diſadvantage of hereditary errors, and a ſocial diſlocation unfavourable to their purſuits.¹ Yet their weakneſs did not preclude the exerciſe of a wiſeſpread influence; and the cloſe relation of Taddeo Bartoli to the chiefs of the Gubbian ſchool was maintained after him by Domenico di Bartolo. It is difficult, indeed, to name a maſter, a picture, in the northernmoſt parts of the land bordering the Adriatic, that is not impreſſed with Sieneſe defects or peculiarities. The Boccati of Camerino, Matteo da Gualdo, even Bonfigli of Perugia, diſplay them; and the only exception is to be found in the great Umbro-Florentines, Piero della Franceſca, Signorelli, Giovanni Santi, and Melozzo, whoſe equal Siena did not boaſt of at the time, and was not deſtined to boaſt of in the ſequel.

The period filled by Domenico, Vecchietta, Sassetta, and their

Yet theſe “diſeaſed forms” had an influence on the development of Italian art. [This is unjuſt. The ſchool of Siena had not the energy or the realiſm of the ſchool of Florence, and it continually repeated itſelf, but it ſucceeded in its aim, which was beauty of line and compoſition, a decorative beauty and beauty of colour. It is abſurd to talk of “diſeaſed forms” in connection with the work of ſuch men as Sassetta, Vecchietta, Neroccio, Benvenuto di Giovanni, Sano di Pietro, and Matteo da Siena. Mr. Berenſon tells us that “the art of Siena exhausted itſelf in preſenting the ideals and feelings of the Middle Ages with an intensity and a beauty not ſurpaſſed even by their ſpiritual kindred, thoſe ſculptors of Northern France who, in our weaker moments, almoſt win us away from Greece.” Crowe and Cavalcaſelle were blind to the lovelineſs of Sieneſe painting in the fifteenth century. Critics like Meſſrs. Berenſon, Perkins, Douglas, and a dozen others have done much to reveal the real worth of the ſchool.]

satellites was one of retrogression, preparatory to the final absorption of the Sienese into the Perugian school. It is a period interesting chiefly to those who seek to fathom the causes or note the results of a transfusion of elements from an expiring and worn-out body artistic into another nascent and growing. That the Sienese school did not produce a class equivalent to that which in Florence comprised Brunelleschi, Ghiberti, Donato, and Paolo Uccello, that it remained without a Mantegna, or Piero della Francesca, was, no doubt, fatal to its further existence. For the religious spirit of the older time had passed away, there as elsewhere; and men, whose aim might have been the combination of scientific and pictorial principles, could alone have succeeded in imparting a new life to an enfeebled and decaying frame.

The painters who illustrate this last phase of Sienese art are numerous and prolific. At their head stands Domenico Bartoli Ghezzi of Asciano, with Vecchietta, Francesco di Giorgio, Benvenuto di Giovanni, Girolamo di Benvenuto, Matteo da Siena, and Cozzarelli in support. They held a position in Siena resembling that of the Florentines from Brunelleschi to Ghirlandaio's time; but, unlike them, they contentedly and leisurely followed ancient models of Sienese composition, as if repelled by the mere suggestion of innovation. They did not attempt to infuse any new character into their ill-favoured impersonations. Their figures embodied errors similar to those of Taddeo Bartoli, without exhibiting the energy or earnestness which occasionally raised him above those less gifted than himself. They were, as colourists, inferior to the earlier men of their school, null in the science of light and shade.¹

By their side stood another branch, with Sassetta as root, Sano di Pietro as leader, and a ruck of men of less mark behind them.² These clung not merely to the old system of composition, form, and drapery, but to the old methods of tempera, modelling their style, according to their ability, on the antiquated one of Ugolino and Segna.

Domenico di Bartoli was born at Asciano in the early part of the fifteenth century, and was free of the Guild of Siena in 1428.³ The sphere of his activity is limited by that date and 1444, after which time his name has not been discovered in records. His productions justify in part the criticisms of Vasari, who assigns them to one taught in the school of Taddeo Bartoli.⁴ His manner is Umbro-Sienese, deficient in

order and balance, in repose and purpose, unadorned with any of the charms of perspective, unattractive because of the weakness and rigidity of figures attired in tasteless dress, because of the rare presence of pleasing types, and the monotony consequent on a shadowless reddish brown tone of dim texture. In this respect, his earliest and his latest efforts are consistently the same. In a panel, of 1433, at the Gallery of Siena,¹ inscribed with the name of "DOMINICUS" alone, in which the Virgin sits on the ground amidst angels, and holds the Infant on her knee, the principal group hardly differs from that of a mother with her child in the less sacred subject of the Marriage of a Foundling at the Spedale. In both pieces, the heads overweigh the slender necks and frames; a meaningless grimace overspreads the faces; but in the former a lustrous reddish tone colours the entire surface of the panel.

The Sieneſe themſelves ſeemed to attach leſs value to the pictorial works of this time than to thoſe of architecture or ſculpture. Domenico di Bartolo, though caſually employed, was little known or conſidered by his contemporaries, and never roſe to great notoriety. A ſhort time after the Emperor Sigismund had viſited Siena, on the way to his coronation at Rome, the council of the Duomo propoſed to found a memorial of the event. The pavement of coloured marble in the cathedral, which had been in progreſs ſince 1369, ſtill remained unfinished, and a ſuggeſtion that "the Cæſar's Maſteſty" ſhould be repreſented there, in company of his chief miniſters, met with approval. Unhappily, the features of the Kaiſer had not been authentically preſerved, and though fancy portraits of miniſters might appear a tolerable liberty, an ideal of the Emperor, who but two years before had triumphantly ſhown himſelf to the Sieneſe, might have been ridiculed. The council of the Duomo was informed in this emergency that "one Domenico" (di Bartolo) was owner of "a ſtatue or deſign" in which a reſemblance to the face of the Cæſar's Maſteſty might be traced, and accordingly purchaſed it, together with the incongruous addition of a S. John and a font, ordering the artiſt at the ſame time (1434) to prepare a ſketch for the group of the Emperor.² This commiſſion led to others; and, at intervals between 1435 and 1439, Domenico painted the whole ſacriſty of the Duomo with ſcenes from the lives of SS. Anſano, Vittorio, and Savino,³ and in 1437 an altarpiece for S. Agostino of Asciano.⁴ By a curious coincidence, a picture hangs to this day in the church of this name, which might claim to be that contracted for by Domenico.¹ The Virgin is enthroned between four standing saints, and above, the Eternal gives His benediction, whilst the Virgin and Angel Annunciate fill spaces at His sides. Scenes from the life of S. Catherine are enclosed in the small frames of a predella, in the centre of which the Saviour is crucified. The broken and angular draperies are full of superfluous folds. The Virgin sits on her throne with the languid grace of the Umbrian school. The Angel Annunciate moves with the liveliness to which we become accustomed in Vecchietta, and there is an effort at foreshortening in the Eternal. The colour, of an uncommon lustre, seems to disclose a change in the old system of tempera.² It is a work of a better class than the authentic Virgin and Saints of 1438 at Perugia;³ and some difficulties arise in the attempt to ascribe both to one hand.⁴ The Perugian altarpiece, with the usual profusion of triangular gables, and a predella in five parts, is inscribed with the painter's name, dated 1438, and is usually invisible in consequence of the papal clausura, which isolates from the world the nuns of the convent of Sta. Giuliana. As compositions, the predella scenes, illustrating the life and martyrdom of the Baptist, are in better balance than the principal group of the Virgin, Child, and kneeling patroness; but the lean coarseness of males, and affected daintiness and tasteless dress of females; the wiry serpentine locks of the Benedict, or the frizzled hair of the Giuliana; the broken draperies generally, are not more natural or attractive than the low-toned flatness of the ruddy raw colour. Yet, such a picture as this in such a place repays attention.⁵ It is the production of a pure Sienese

² The panels at Asciano are not unlike those by Vecchietta forming the presses in the Spedale at Siena. (See postea.)

in an Umbrian city, destined to be the cradle of a reviving art. It offers occasion for comparison with other creations of the time; and proves that Giovanni Boccati, whose panel of 1447 is hard by, was educated on the same principles, and struggled with similar defects. The Sienese school was, no doubt, superior generally to that of Umbria and the Marches up to this time. Still, it is not easy to determine whether Domenico shed an influence on the Boccati, or whether the converse proposition would hold good.¹ Gentile da Fabriano had already interposed both at Siena and in Umbria. If, however, Siena now ceased to wield supremacy over the neighbouring country, the effect was as yet hardly perceptible; and this is equally true at Camerino, east of the Apennine, and at Foligno, west of that chain, where local art was modified by the presence of Benozzo Gozzoli.

But Domenico's Perugian Madonna seems not a solitary Sienese example of its time at a distance from Siena. The Priory of S. Giovanni Evangelista at Borgo S. Sepolero, the inmates of which have parted with the "Baptism" of Piero della Francesca,² still shelters the remains of an altarpiece, of which that episode was the centre, reminiscent of the Virgin and saints at S. Agostino of Asciano. An improvement upon the style of that piece may be conceded, but the SS. Peter and Paul combine the feebleness of figure, overweight of head, and peculiar draperies, which have been described as characteristic of Domenico. The Angel and Virgin Annunciate are stamped in his mould likewise; and Vecchietta's creations are recalled to mind in each case. A predella, comprising the Crucifixion and four scenes from the life of the Baptist, exhibit the essential liveliness and animation, the vehemence and grimace of the Sienese school. Certain types assume a family likeness to those of Piero della Francesca, whose Umbrian tendency they might explain and illustrate. The drawing is minute and precise, but the colour resembles that of the Asciano pictures.³ Were it even recorded FERI DOMINA ANTONIA FILIA FRANCISCI DE DOMO BUCHOLIS, ABBATISSA ISTIUS MONASTERII IN HANNO MCCCCXXXVIII DE MENSIS MAIL." The colour is abraded and dimmed by time. Since the foregoing was written the altarpiece has found a place in the Pinacoteca [Sala VI. No. 1.].

² This Baptism is painted in tempera. See antea, "Piero della Francesca." The observations made as to Piero's use of oil medium are, however, correct and apply to other pieces produced by him on the new system.

that this was the fruit of Domenico's labour, his stay at Borgo S. Sepolcro would still be uncertain. Yet a ruined fresco in a tabernacle at the corner of the Via di Mezzo seems to prove the presence at least of the artist who painted the greater part of the panels in S. Giovanni Evangelista.¹

Domenico devoted five consecutive years (1435-40) to the lost decorations of the sacristy in the Siena Duomo,² completing in the interval the orders for Asciano and Perugia. No knowledge is attainable respecting his occupations during 1440-2. In the middle of 1444, he had finished seven subjects on the walls of the Pellegrinaio in the Spedale di S. M. della Scala at Siena: a Sick Ward; Alms-giving; Marriage of the Foundlings of the establishment; the Pope's Indulgence for enlarging the Hospital; the Building of the Annexes, and a Virgin of Mercy.³ A passing interest may be created by some of these injured pieces, in an archæological sense, because the hospital, as represented in the fifteenth century, has undergone no change since then; but no single fresco can be selected in which the most conspicuous defects are not apparent. The rudest handling, a dull tempera on a rough wall, confused groups of heavy figures, alike rigid and angular in shape and outline, tasteless costume, extravagantly laden with relief ornament, absence of aerial or linear perspective in edifices either ill-copied from nature, or invented by a singular and unnatural fancy, form a total of unattractive features difficult to rival at this time. This was the latest example⁴ of Domenico di Bartolo.⁵ But he was not the sole person employed at the Pelle-

Herodias boasts a springy and slender form. One sees in fact a certain association of pictorial and sculptural qualities in her—an association already suggested by the SS. Paul and Peter, which resemble statues by Vecchietta. [The altarpiece, now in the Duomo Borgo S. Sepolcro, is by Matteo di Giovanni. Cf. MARY LOGAN in Rassegna d'Arte, April 1905, and H. J. WAGNER, op. cit.]

² Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 172.

³ All these pieces except the Virgin of Mercy are preserved.

⁵ [MR. PERKINS, in Rassegna d'Arte Senese, has added the following works to the meagre list of Domenico's paintings:—

MR. BERENSON and MR. PERKINS both ascribe to Domenico the beautiful Madonna in the church of the Rifugio in Siena (cf. Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iv., fasc. i.).

Mr. Berenson further ascribes to the master a Madonna and Child of 1437 in Mr. Johnson's Collection at Philadelphia; and a figure of S. Catherine of Siena, near the Coronation of Sano mentioned above; and a Madonna in the Coll. of Sir K. M. Mackenzie.

grinaio,¹ and a S. Agostino Novello, giving the dress to the brothers of the hospital, is by Priamo, brother of the sculptor Giacomo della Quercia.²

This artist had been left heir to Giacomo by a will, dated the third of October 1438, but the charges of the succession seemed likely to exceed its profits. Giacomo had been unable to complete the funeral monument of the Vari in S. Petronio at Bologna; and the superintendents required Priamo, or any substitute he might name, to finish it. Giacomo had subjected himself to heavy fines by staying at Bologna beyond the time allowed him by the authorities of Siena; and Priamo was called upon to pay them. Cino di Bartolo, assistant to Giacomo at Bologna, had applied to his own use the property of his master; and the dispute between Priamo and him had been submitted to umpires. In the midst of all this Priamo was reduced to beggary; and his income-paper of 1453 is but a doleful petition for consideration in favour of a miserable impoverished debtor.

An altarpiece, ordered of him in 1442 by the fraternity of S. Michele at Volterra, remained publicly exposed in its original situation till 1827,

[By Domenico is a very interesting, though damaged, fresco of the Virgin of Mercy in the Infermeria di S. Pietro of the Spedale of Siena; and a monochrome fresco of the Beato Sorori in the Infermeria di S. Pio (Berenson and Olcott).]

Very close to Domenico, and possibly an early work by him, is a panel of the Virgin, Child, and Angels, No. 207 of Siena Gallery (cf. LUCY OLCOTT, A Guide to Siena; Torrini, Siena, 1903).

It is perhaps needless to point out that the authors are very far from understanding the value of Domenico's work.]

Frankfort, Staedel Gallery, No. 4, assigned to Domenico Bartoli, represents Christ going to Golgotha, the Crucifixion, and Deposition, and is by a later Sienese after the time of Neroccio. [Mr. Perkins ascribes this to Girolamo di Benvenuto, to whom it is now officially attributed.]

No. 110 in this gallery, Adoration of the Shepherds, is classed "unknown," and is really by Domenico, as well as No. 150, a S. Dominic. [Neither Mr. Berenson nor Mr. Perkins accepts these works as by Domenico.] In M. Ramboux's Gallery at Cologne, a Virgin and Child (No. 171) is given to Domenico. Also No. 167.

Edinburgh. National Gallery of Scotland. No. 445. Altarpiece in courses with SS. Michael and John Baptist, a bishop and Virgin martyr in the two principal compartments, the Virgin and Angel Annunciate in two medallions above, and a Virgin and Evangelist in two pinnacles. The whole confined by pilasters with six saints in each. This piece is assigned to Andrea del Castagno and his pupils, but is a poor work of the schools of Domenico di Bartolo and Vecchietta, injured by restoring. It was originally in a convent at Pratovecchio, and was purchased from the Lombardi Collection.

² DELLA VALLE, Lettere Senese, vol. ii., p. 197, speaks of Luciano da Velletri as an assistant of Domenico in the Pellegrinaio, but he is alone in that statement, and no extant productions are assigned to him.

but has since disappeared.¹ It cost originally the small sum of 40 lire, or ten Sienese florins; and was, no doubt, not more worthy of attention than the fresco of the same year at the Pellegrinaio of Siena, where Priamo rudely carried out a composition of the very poorest conception.²

Giacomo della Quercia, whose bequests were attended with such melancholy results to his less talented brother, is one of a class which fills a considerable place in Sienese annals, but of which it is only necessary, in a history of painting, to say that its sculpture, in spite of apparent ability, invariably disclosed a fanciful and false conventionalism.³ Giacomo's life fills half a century. He was born in 1371, and died in 1438, after a bright career marked by great industry. His practice fell afterwards principally into the hands of Sano di Matteo and Antonio Federighi, the rivals of Bernardo Rossellino in the employ of the Piccolomini, to whom Siena and Pienza owed so much of their architectural improvements. In Agostino's⁴ plastic creations, low classicism is strongly intermingled with a disagreeable swagger; and the mannerism of Giacomo della Quercia in action and drapery descends to him unimproved and unimprovable.

² Giacomo della Quercia died Oct. 20, 1438, having made (Oct. 3) a will, leaving his property, a minus quantity, to Priamo. Yet Priamo, with little forethought, married, before the year expired, Bartolommea di Antonio (Doc. Sen., p. 78-9). Cino di Bartolo, assistant to Giacomo della Quercia at Bologna, had taken possession of his master's property there, and was at once claimed by the Sienese authorities (ibid., vol. ii., p. 181), whilst at the same time Priamo wrote (Dec. 1, 1438) to the superintendents of S. Petronio, demanding the rest of the sum due to his brother for the erection of the Vari monument. To the Signoria the superintendents replied (Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 181), surrendering Cino, but asking that he or Priamo should be allowed to finish the Vari monument. To Priamo they answered, apparently, offering to pay him, if he came or sent some one to complete the work on hand (Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 184). Priamo (ibid.) declared his readiness to go to Bologna (Feb. 11, 1439, o.s.) with Cino, but ultimately sent Cino alone thither (Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 185), whose quarrels had in the meanwhile been submitted to an umpire (ibid., vol. ii., p. 189). It seems obvious that the Sienese authorities desired to keep Priamo until he had settled the fines due by his dead brother; for we find him in April 1440 (o.s.) presenting a petition for the revision of the sentence in accordance with which these fines were to be paid (ibid., vol. ii., p. 191). The Volterra picture and the Pellegrinaio frescoes were both completed in 1442 (ibid., vol. ii., pp. 278-9, and p. 283), and in Aug. of the same year Antonio Petri de Briosso was accepted by the superintendents of S. Petronio to finish the work which Priamo was clearly unable to undertake (ibid., vol. ii., pp. 209-10). Priamo's income-paper of 1453 is published (ibid., vol. ii., p. 283).

Of Cino di Bartolo the records only notice that he was the son of Bartolo, a goldsmith of Siena (Doc. Sen., vol. i., p. 284), that he was first employed by Giacomo della Quercia in 1428 at S. Petronio of Bologna (ibid., vol. ii., p. 150), and that his death took place in 1475 (ibid., vol. i., p. 284).

³ [It is in statements such as this that we realise the limitations both of judgment and of taste of the authors. Jacopo della Quercia was one of the greatest artists of Italy. "His true grandeur," says Burckhardt, "is in bas-relief, where he displays a marvellous style." Priamo, it is true, is without talent.¹

⁴ [The writers evidently mean "Antonio."]

Partner in these defects, but more versatile in his pursuits, Lorenzo di Pietro kept a goldsmith's shop, and practised with varying success as an architect, sculptor, and painter. He was of the same age as Domenico di Bartolo, and a contemporary of Sano di Pietro; and he was nicknamed Vecchietta, perhaps because of the tottering frames and aged faces repeated with consistent pertinacity in every specimen of his skill in every branch. He was born in 1412,¹ and free of his guild in 1428;² but no records allude to him before 1439, when he delivered to the authorities of the Siena Duomo a panel of the Annunciation, produced by the joint labour of himself and Sano di Pietro.³ His frescoes in the Spedale at Siena, and a statue of Christ "risorto" on the high altar of the Siena Duomo were finished almost at the same period, the first in 1441,⁴ the second in 1442.⁵ He was thus early devoted to the sister arts, which he carried on simultaneously. We cannot, however, as yet discuss his power as a sculptor, because the Christ is not in existence; but the frescoes of the Spedale are in part standing, and though we miss three scenes from the story of Tobit, and a Crucified Saviour between the Virgin and S. John, in the hospital chapel,⁶ a companion subject to the series afterwards completed by Domenico still fills the arch above the door of the Pellegrinaio, and bears the inscription "LAURENSIUS DE SENIS." A kneeling figure, no doubt intended for that of the founder of the hospital, occupies an advantageous position in the centre of a triple-arched space, of which the vaulting retreats with some show of perspective. Near him, a ladder leads upwards to the presence of the Virgin, who awaits the hospital children climbing towards her. Another phase of the foundation's benevolence is the distribution of alms to the right of the kneeling patron, and a third incident is delineated on his left. To say that Vecchietta is better than Domenico in his last days, is curt but sufficient praise. The false classicism of the Roman architecture, with its bas-reliefs and friezes in monochrome, the capitals of the columns overladen with detail, is not more calculated to satisfy a polished taste than the copious ornamentation of the dresses with their tinted model wax-borders. Faulty arrangement of figures, false perspective, feeble frames, bewigged and aged heads, all repel the observer; whilst the colour, dimmed by time, it is true, yet still preserved, is flat and unrelieved. No mitigating circumstances alter the force of this necessary verdict, which condemns with equal justice the earlier as well as the later pictures of Vecchietta. The relic press in the Spedale, of which he painted the doors inside and out in 1445 with twenty-five different subjects, only serves to illustrate the decline of Siennese art since Duccio.¹ Were the frescoes of the sacristy in the same building yet extant, they would, doubtless, tell no other tale.² The decoration of four ceilings and part of the tribune of the Baptistery of S. Giovanni at Siena, which date from 1449-50, exhibit no change in the practice of previous years;³ and panels or frescoes alike disclose absence of ærial and linear perspective, flatness of tone, poor composition, lean, withered, and ill-proportioned figures of unselect shape, moving with a broken and fantastic action, involved draperies, trivial, vulgar, or grimacing heads, so incompletely modelled on nature that eyes take a triangular shape, and noses, in three-quarter faces, are flattened down to profile; yet the contours and the technical finish are careful to a fault.

The mere employment of Vecchietta in numerous undertakings at Siena would not be surprising, if it were granted that his talent might ¹ [Now in the Gallery of Siena, Nos. 204, 205.] Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 369. DELLA VALLE, Lett. Sen., vol. iii., p. 57, assigns these doors to Matteo di Giovanni. The outer side contains three courses of panels, the uppermost of which are:—1. The Crucified Saviour between the Virgin and Evangelist; 2, the Resurrection of Christ, both between 3, the Angel, and 4, the Virgin Annunciate, each of the latter attended by 5 and 6, a Seraph. Twelve panels in the next two courses contain (from left to right) SS. Ansano, Ambrogio Sansedoni (Beato), Bernardino, Agostino Novello (Beato giving the dress), Galerani (Beato), Savino, Victor, Catherino of Siena, unknown, Galgano, and Crescenzo.

The inner side of the press-doors comprises (in a double course from left to right):—1. Christ before Pilate. 2. The Scourging. 3. The Last Supper. 4. Christ Washing the Feet of His Disciples. 5. Christ Crowned with Thorns. 6. Christ carrying His Cross. 7. The Kiss of Judas. 8. Christ before Caiaphas. The inner panels are inferior to the outer, and perhaps by pupils.

² Since the text was written, the frescoes of the sacristy have been cleared of whitewash. They represent ten scenes from the New and Old Testament. Christ, Evangelists, and Saints in the ceiling. In a corner of one of the walls one reads: "URBANO EQUITE D. EXCELLENTISSIMO HUIUS SANCT . . . DOMUS PRÆFECTO. LAURENTIUS PETRI FILIUS SENENSIS HOC SACRARUM UNDIQUE VERSUM PICTURIS HONESTAVIT M.CCCOKLVIII."

³ Two of these ceilings are by Michele Lambertini [more probably by a pupil of Vecchietta (LUCY OLCOTT)], four by Vecchietta. In the central one by the entrance, are SS. James, Philip, John Evang., and Matthew. In the next central one, by the tribune, are:—the Last Judgment; Christ in Glory; the Limbo, and a symbolical picture of the Communion. Right of this, as one stands in the centre of the church and looks towards the tribune, are:—the Baptism of Christ; the Saviour and Virgin in Glory; Remission of Sins (damaged); and the Resurrection of Christ. To the left, if one keeps the same position—the Flagellation; then an empty space; Christ in Glory; and the Annunciation. The frescoes in the tribunes are by other hands—that of the semi-dome (central tribune) representing the Crucified Saviour, the Sleeping Apostles, and the Burial of Christ, attributed to one Gasparre d'Agostino, an artist following the manner of Giovanni d'Asciano, who laboured (1451-55) in a style reminiscent of that which we shall find in Giovanni di Paolo (postea), but more rational than his. The colour is fair; the figures are long and lean, and in vehement action. To this Gasparre a small S. Bernardino Preaching, which hangs in the sacristy of the Siena Duomo, is assigned. [This panel and a companion piece are evident works of Sano, and are cited as such by LANGTON DOUGLAS (History of Siena) and LUCY OLCOTT (Guide to Siena).] There is a record of Gasparre's design for part of the pavement in the Duomo (1451) in MILANESI'S Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 269, and he is noticed by the annotators of VASARI in a commentary to the Life of Gentile da Fabriano (vol. iv., p. 163).

be considered cheap and prolific, like that of Neri di Bicci at Florence. But Lorenzo, in spite of the poverty apparent in his works, held a high place in the estimation of his townsmen. He and Sano di Pietro were the chosen umpires of the municipality for the valuation of the frescoes on the Porta Romana when Sassetta died, leaving his work unfinished, in 1452.¹ Vecchietta complains, however, in an income-paper of 1453, that, although proprietor of small parcels of land and houses in Siena and its vicinity, his ailing health and the infirmity of his wife contributed much to his discomfort and indebtedness, "and if fortune were to plague him long, as it had hitherto done, he should be forced to sell his movables for bread";² but we may partially mistrust the statements of a man desirous to move the stern feelings of the tax-gatherer, and Vecchietta continued for many subsequent years to carve stone and bronze, and wield the brush. Amongst the altarpieces furnished in those days, we notice the Madonna and Saints of 1447, in the Gallery of the Uffizi, and the Ascension of the Virgin, with four holy attendants, on one of the altars of the Duomo of Pienza. The former has been injured by partial retouching, but contains in its pilasters some slender and fairly thrown personages, after the manner of Domenico di Bartolo,³ whilst the latter, one of the best examples of Vecchietta, seems to date from the same time, and comprises, amongst the heavenly choir accompanying the Virgin, some not ungraceful angels.⁴

Vecchietta's productions were now so highly valued at Siena, that, in March 1460, the supreme government took upon itself to address Messer Goro Loli Piccolomini with the prayer that he might recommend the "singular talent" of Lorenzo di Pietro to Pius II., as the most fitted to superintend the rebuilding of the Papal lodge at Siena.⁵ Pius, however, had perhaps less confidence in the artist's powers than the lords of Siena. Perhaps he did not believe that the author of the Pienza altarpiece could turn out a great architect. Certain it is that he preferred Agostino di Federigo.⁶ This contempt of his claims irritated or discouraged Vecchietta; and he formed the resolution to abandon his country for ever ; whilst at the same time the members of the Sienese council apparently felt that they had been slighted by the Piccolomini. We may conjecture, at least, that such was the course of events, because Agostino di Federigo, who had hitherto been employed to carve the statues in the Loggia della Mercanzia,¹ was relieved of all further duty there ; and the two remaining ones were allotted to Vecchietta (April 1460), "in order that he might have something to keep him busy in Siena, which he was tempted, nay had determined, to leave."² He was consoled further by orders for frescoes in the Public Palace, and we still possess that of S. Catherine, at the side of the entrance leading from the great hall to the chapel ;³ and part of a large Virgin of Mercy, lately recovered from whitewash, in a room called "Sala dell' ajuto Bilanciere." S. Bernardino, and S. Martin on horseback, sharing his cloak with the beggar, stand in the spandrels of an arched recess, in the centre of which the Virgin holds the Infant Saviour, and angels support the cloak which covers the people of Siena. SS. Savino, Jerome, Peter, Catherine, Lawrence, Ansano, attend to the right and left. Seraphs, sixteen in number, sing in the space between SS. Martin and Bernardino, and two messengers of heaven suspend the crown over the Virgin. Her head and dress and other parts of the fresco are renewed, the nimbuses are stamped and cut out with the exquisite care which marks those of Simone Martini, but the defects of Vecchietta are perfectly apparent, in spite of a family likeness in some parts to Sassetta or Sano di Pietro.

³ The Uffizi altarpiece [No. 47] is in a modern frame, and an inscription, repainted (it is said on the old one), runs as follows: "OPUS LAURENTI PETRI SENENSIS, 1457. QUESTA TAVOLA L'HA FATTA FARE GIACOMO D'ANDREUCCIO SETAJUOLO PER SUA DIVOZIONE." The figures are life-size. To the right of the Virgin and Child are SS. Andrew and Lawrence and the kneeling Dominic to the left, SS. Bartholomew, James, and a kneeling king. Four small saints are in the pilasters. Some heads, that of S. Lawrence for instance, are new.

⁴ The Pienza altarpiece, a gable, represents the Ascension, with SS. Pius, Agatha (part of her blue dress scraped off), Calixtus, and Catherine. It is signed: "OPUS LAURENTII PETRI SCULPTORIS DE SENIS." The colour is light and flat, and much gold or painted ornament is lavished in every part. The figures are three-fourths life-size.

In 1462, Lorenzo had completed the statues of the Loggia della Mercanzia, both of which present to the spectator the disproportioned and decrepit forms conspicuous already at an earlier time. Nor does Vecchietta fail to lay stress on the versatility of his own talents, and whilst he signs himself in the Pienza picture "sculptor," he inscribes his carved work with the words : "OPUS LAURENTII PICTORIS SENENSIS."⁴ A recumbent image of Mariano Soccino (1467) at the Uffizi,⁵ SS. Catherine, Bernardino, Paul, and Sebastian,⁶ in silver for the Siena cathedral, were produced at intervals up to 1478. Two years previous to this date, Vecchietta, who at last had struck a vein of prosperity, proposed to furnish a bronze Christ and a picture of the Virgin, Child, and Saints to the Spedale di S. M. della Scala, if the superintendents of that edifice should give him a chapel, and consecrate it with his name. Upon that consideration also he consented to leave all his property after his second wife's death to the foundation.¹ The proposal was accepted; and Vecchietta's best casting now adorns the high altar of the hospital.² Its broken action and coarse, bony forms are not better than of old; nor is the altarpiece, which now hangs at the Siena Gallery, entitled to any additional praise.³ Both pieces are dated 1479, and are the last efforts of the artist, who died in the middle of the following year.⁴

² It is signed: "LAURENTII PETRI PICTORIS AL. VECCHIETTA DE SENIS. MCCCLXXVI (1476) P. SUA DEVOTIONE FECIT HOC OPUS." The tabernacle in which it stood was transferred in 1506 to the Duomo, where it now stands, by Pandolfo Petrucci (VASARI, notes to p. 210, vol. iv.) A sketch of the tabernacle, on panel, by Vecchietta, is in the Siena Gallery.

³ [No. 210.] It represents the Virgin and Child, between the erect SS. Peter and Paul, the kneeling Cosma and Damian, with the inscription: "OPUS LAURENTII PETRI ALIAS VECCHIETTA OB SUAM DEVOTIONEM." [It is dated 1465.] An altarpiece in San Niccolò di Valdorcina, signed with Vecchietta's name, is noticed by the Annotators of VASARI, vol. ii., p. 212. [This work is now in the Museum at Pienza, and is one of Vecchietta's most important paintings. It has only recently been removed from the church of the Spedaleto, near Pienza.]

Old Siena guides speak also of terra-cottas by him (ibid.). The following numbers are assigned to him in the Ramboux Collection at Cologne, Nos. 124-8, 164-5; but little value can be assigned to the pieces so catalogued.

A Virgin and Child, enthroned amongst angels between SS. Catherine and Bartholomew, bears the name of Vecchietta in the Museum of Carlsruhe. It is numbered 164, and is of the older period after Lippi and Barna.

The narrative of his career would be incomplete without an allusion to an occupation with which he varied his usual labours. Between 1467 and 1470, he was entrusted with the fabrication of models for the fortresses of Sarteano, Orbetello, Montacuto, and Talamone;¹ and his employment in this direction only ceased when Francesco di Giorgio abandoned all other pursuits for those of engineering and fortification.

The life of this ingenious and celebrated man would be out of place here; and it will not be necessary to do more than look back at the fruits of his early industry, and fix the limits of his acquirements as a painter. He was but twenty-four² when the superintendence of the conduits of the Fonte Gaia in Siena was given to him; but he kept a shop with Neroccio di Bartolommeo de' Landi, until the partnership was dissolved in 1475.³ He seems to have combined most of the Sienese characteristics of his time with a fancy akin to that of Botticelli, and a fashion of drapery like that of the Pollaiuoli. He inherited defects already conspicuous in Vecchietta, such as slender, withered, and angular figures, the action of which is rendered in an awkward and often pompously affected manner. He may therefore have learnt the elements from that master. The strange conceits in his composition are surprising and unpleasant. Superabundance of ornament in dresses and buildings is another of his failings. His tone is cold, unrelieved, flat, and grey in shadow; but he exhibits some slight progress in the application of perspective to form. A disagreeable colour overspreads an injured Nativity, originally at Monte Oliveto, near the Porta Tufi, at Siena, graced with his name, and now in the Gallery.⁴ The strangeness of his fancy is illustrated by a Coronation of the Virgin in the same Museum, where the higher and lower spheres of a heavenly host are united by two angels resting on a cluster of three cherubs' heads.⁵ His style may be further studied in seven or eight panels, unauthenticated by signatures, in the collection of his native city; in a Nativity at S. Domenico of Siena, and in a predella at the Uffizi of Florence.⁶

Francesco di Giorgio is connected with such brilliant successes in the laying out of fortresses, and the invention of methods for the attack and reduction of such works, that his talents became widely known throughout Italy.¹ In this novel and important field he preceded by a few years, and was only surpassed by, Leonardo da Vinci, and it is on record that they both met in 1490 at Pavia, whither they had been sent by Gian Galeazzo to report on the plan of the new cathedral. Francesco di Giorgio's proposals for vaulting the cupola of the Milan Duomo were conceived at the same period, and, after they had been accepted by the "deputies" of the Fabbrica, they were realised in 1493 by the Lombard, Giovanni Antonio da Gessato.² In 1484, Francesco di Giorgio, passing through Gubbio, was visited by Luca Signorelli, who induced him to design the church of S. Maria del Calcinaio, near Cortona;³ and in 1491 he competed with the best of his countrymen by sending to Florence a model for the front of S. Maria del Fiore.⁴ Francesco's fame as an architect thus reposes on a firm and reasonable basis; yet he did not habitually superintend the erection of edifices; and the historians of Italy causelessly heap honours or shame on his head as they attribute to his inventive genius buildings carried out by others, on principles that are at times correct, at others false and vicious.⁵

The extent of Francesco di Giorgio's ability in carving may be correctly defined by reference to the bronze angels in the Siena Duomo, which he cast and chiselled in 1497.⁶ They are hard, dry, and inelegant, of paltry type and form, and draped in vestments of broken folds.⁷

The name of Signorelli has been given to this piece. Its lunette belongs to another picture, and is like a work of Matteo da Siena—[quite evidently by Matteo]—whilst the predella shows the hand of Fungai.—Florence—Uffizi. [No. 1304.] The three predella scenes here show F. d. G.'s defects less than usual, the size of the panels being small. We note the neatness of the drawing. The colour is, however, still flat and cold. The subjects are from the legend of S. Benedict. [The figures are by Neroccio.]

When Francesco parted from Neroccio di Bartolommeo de' Landi in 1475, Vecchietta and Sano di Pietro were chosen to settle their differences by arbitration, and whilst Francesco almost entirely abandoned sculpture and painting, Neroccio continued the exclusive exercise of those two branches of his profession. Neroccio was younger by about eight years than his partner.¹ As a young beginner, he alternately applied himself to carrying out orders for altarpieces, and to the modelling of figures in terra-cotta.² His remaining pictures have found a final resting-place in the Gallery of Siena. A Virgin and Child, between SS. Michael and Bernardino, in that collection, bears his name and the date of 1476, and was probably done for Bernardino Nini of Siena.³ Its style

MR. PERKINS was the first to recognise as by Francesco, a fine miniature representing an allegorical figure of Chastity and scenes from the Labours of Hercules in a book Albertus Magnus: De Animalibus belonging to the Convent of the Osservanza at Siena (see Rassegna d'Arte, October 1904). This leads us to suppose that Francesco must also have been an accomplished miniaturist, in addition to his various other callings.]

varies little from that of Vecchieta or Francesco di Giorgio, except that the affected attitudes are perhaps more absolutely unnatural in their bend than theirs, and appear to caricature more markedly the action of plastic works of the olden time. Light washy colours are confined by dry outlines; and the human form, taken as a model for delineation, is coarse and vulgar.¹ A better preserved piece in the same Gallery is the Virgin and Child between saints, unauthenticated by date or signature, cold in tone, but of great softness, and laboriously finished.²

Neroccio designed the Hellespontic Sibyl in the pavement of the Siena Duomo (1483),³ and carved the statue of Tommaso del Testa Piccolomini on the monument to that worthy above the door of the campanile in the cathedral.⁴ He died in 1500.⁵ Of humble aims, and moderate ability, he held a secure, if not a brilliant position in his native city; such an one as Francesco di Giorgio might perhaps have risen to, had not his engineering talent carried him far ahead of his less versatile colleague.⁶ His custom was of another kind than that of many of his countrymen, in so far that it was purely local. But at Siena those who were able to declare that they made an honourable and sufficient livelihood exclusively within its walls, might be considered exceptionally favoured; and a contemporary of Francesco di Giorgio, Benvenuto di Giovanni di Meo del Guasta, takes occasion to express his regret that work being scarce, and profit scarcer, he should be forced to remove outside the circuit of Siena.

This complaint is set forth in an income-paper of 1488,¹ but seems, as regards Benvenuto, to have been true of the greater part of his career; for, though he is described in a record of 1455 as permanently employed at the Baptistery of S. Giovanni² at Siena, his first extant picture (1466) is at Volterra. He is admitted by common consent as the author of a Flagellation, and Christ Carrying His Cross, a couple of dimmed frescoes in the central apsis of the Baptistery, and two scenes from the life of S. Antony, injured wall paintings in the side apsis of the same edifice.³ These alleged fruits of his labours are so like the productions of Lorenzo di Pietro in the ceilings, that they might be taken for his, or at least for those of his assistants. Benvenuto may have acted in that capacity, but his engagement at the Baptistery dates four years after the commission of Vecchietta. On the other hand, the Annunciation in the convent church of S. Girolamo at Volterra offers some traits reminiscent of Neroccio, in the angular and lean figures, the reedy frames of which bend affectedly under the weight of large but narrow heads themselves inclined on slender necks. Trite drapery, cutting outlines, cold and flat tones in flesh tints, strong contrasts in the general key of harmony, and neatness of execution, increase the resemblance. But Benvenuto does not merely reflect the peculiarities of Vecchietta or Neroccio. He reminds us of the Perugian Benedetto Bonfigli; and we thus trace the contact of the Umbrian school with the older one of Siena, which, through Benvenuto runs in a clear and uninterrupted descent from Simone, Lippo, Barna, Giovanni d'Asciano, and Ceccharelli.¹ Nor is this Annunciation at Volterra an isolated one. Its counterpart by the same hand is in the sacristy of SS. Piero e Paolo at Buonconvento.²

The hard dry spareness of a tempera which almost places Benvenuto in direct connection with Carlo Crivelli, is marked in a Madonna and Saints at S. Domenico,³ eight years earlier in date than a darkened and damaged Ascension of Christ in the Academy of Siena.⁴ The most reasonable of Benvenuto's relics, however, is the end of a cataletto or bier, commissioned of him and his son Girolamo by the Compagnia della Madonna in the Hospital of S. Maria della Scala (1500-1). Its diminutive size, no doubt, conceals many of the usual failings, but the procession of S. Catherine leading the Pope and clergy to Rome is enlivened with many figures, the draperies of which betray less than the usual lack of style, whilst the colour, though still sharply contrasted, is not without power.⁵

⁵ [Now in Gallery of Spedale, No. 18.]

Three small pictures in the Sienese Academy are by Benvenuto.¹ A fresco of the Virgin's Assumption in the Oratory of S. Sebastian, Borgo di Montalboli, outside Asciano;² the same subject in the choir; two panels, originally at its sides in S. M. de' Servi at Borgo S. Sepolcro, are also worthy of examination.³

² The Assumption. The Virgin is accompanied by long motionless angels, with the Saviour above between prophets; S. Thomas between SS. Sebastian and Agatha kneeling below, and the Angel and Virgin Annunciate in spandrels of an arch—a rude and hastily handled work, with slender and inanimate figures; and a bad example of the school of the Benvenuti.

I give a list of such of Benvenuto's works as have not been mentioned above:—

The latter are striking instances of the relationship between the Sienese and Umbrians at Borgo San Sepolcro. Passavant has attributed them to Piero della Francesca,¹ but they ought not to be so considered; for they bear the stamp of the hand of Benvenuto, and are indeed an advance on his previous works. The central Assumption is in a form which now found numerous copyists in Siena. The Eternal, foreshortened, looks down from a prismatic glory, surrounded by seraphs and attended by prophets. The Virgin rises towards Him, encircled by cherubs, accompanied by angels, who move not as of old in flight, but on clouds. The Apostles below peer into the tomb. SS. John the Baptist and Dominic, Paul and Lucy, with the Virgin and the Angel Annunciate in medallions above them, fill the sides in the sacristy. Whilst the Apostles in the central panel rival in stark stiffness those in pictures of the school of Murano, they are dressed in garments of broken folds like those of the Flemings. The Angel and Virgin Annunciate recall similar creations by Giovanni Santi, and reproduce to some extent his character, type, and mode of action. The remaining figures are long, lean, and bony,—the SS. Paul and Lucy, indeed, not without a claim to attention for fairness of proportion and for some progress towards the higher talent of Matteo of Siena.

That Benvenuto had ample time to profit by the changes which were rapidly occurring in his country at the close of the fifteenth and opening of the sixteenth centuries, is apparent. He lived till 1517, in which year he is recorded to have furnished the baldaquin of the Siena Duomo on the occasion of Leo X.'s visit to that city.¹ There never was a class, however, so little prone to alter as that of Siena's artists, and we must pass from Benvenuto to his son Girolamo, in order to find improvement. Yet Girolamo, born as late as 1470, and the contemporary of Pinturicchio, Bazzi, Girolamo Genga, and Pacchia, painted in 1508 a Virgin "of the Snow," in the essentials not unlike the productions of his father, though perhaps more pleasing to the eye. Numerous and cornered folds deprive the draperies of nature; and the colouring exaggerates the quality of warmth.² An injured fresco of the Virgin, amidst singing and playing angels, in a lunette above the high altar of the church of the Madonna of Fontegiusta, is a later creation, dating from 1515, in which Girolamo had enlarged his manner.³ A S. Chiara with a kneeling pilgrim, in the convent church of the Osservanza outside Siena; two or three small pictures in the Academy, are all that remains of this short-lived artist, who died in 1524.⁴

Before proceeding further, however, we must revert to men of the earlier period, of another stamp in many ways than that of the branch headed by Domenico di Bartolo.

Stefano di Giovanni, more commonly known as Sassetta, was a child of the fourteenth century, whose art so strikingly resembled that of a bygone time, that guides of respectable quality attribute his Crucifix in

The pictures at the Siena Gallery are [Nos. 342, 369, 370, 372, 373, 383, 395, 414.] A S. Jerome in M. Ramboux's Collection at Cologne is catalogued under Girolamo's name, No. 169.

S. M. de' Servi at Siena to Ugolino.¹ He differs from Domenico di Bartolo and others of his kindred, not merely because he preserves unimpaired the technical system of tempera, but because he imitated the formal arrangement, the patient minuteness of outline, and the soft curves of draperies which distinguish Ugolino and Segna. The link which connects him with that age is the Crucifix of the Servi, to which we may add the Saviour on the Cross in Golgotha, already noticed at the Gallery of Siena,² and a Calvary at the Louvre.³ In coarseness and thinness of shape, in overweight of head, his figures are no better than those of his contemporaries, whose flatness of tone he imitates. We should for this reason hesitate to declare that his example had no influence on the later Vecchietta. The only piece positively connected with his name is the fresco of the Porta Romana at Siena,⁴ which he left unfinished at his death; but that specimen is so characteristic that it serves as a model of his peculiarities, and shows that he, and no other, produced the Birth of the Virgin in the sacristy of the Duomo at Asciano, the Madonna and Saints of 1436 in a chapel at the convent church of the Osservanza, outside Siena, and a similar one in the sacristy of S. Domenico of Cortona.⁵ The monumental form, the roofed or gabled fronts of these altarpieces are purely Sienese; the subjects are handled in Sassetta's style. At Asciano some grace makes amends for the comparative weakness of the figures, or the flatness which results from variegated tints unrelieved by light or shadow and copious use of ornament. It is almost touching to see how Stefano clings to old compositions in episodes of which the originals by Lorenzetti are copied successively by Andrea Vanni, Bartolo di Fredi, and him.⁶ A tender air still pleases in the plump, small-featured Virgin at the Osservanza; and extraordinary softness pervades the rosy flesh, shadowed with the usual verde.⁷ At

³ [See antea, vol. ii., p. 19.]

⁴ [See note infra.]

⁵ [Now in the Gesù in Cortona.]

⁶ Lorenzetti's original of 1342 is in the Siena Opera del Duomo. Vanni's adaptation [No. 116 in the Siena Gallery: this is by Paolo di Gio. Fei. See supra, vol. ii., p. 73, note 10.] Fredi's in S. Agostino at S. Gimignano. The central panel of Sassetta's altarpiece represents the nurses busy with the Child; the right side, S. Anna in bed washing her hands; the left side Joachim receiving the news of the birth. Above the latter, is her death, whilst on the opposite panel flanking a central one devoted to the Virgin giving the breast to Christ, is the funeral of Mary, the whole on gold ground.

Cortona, the saints are slender as before, but stork-like in the gravity and awkwardness of their motion.¹ Each of these three Sassettas is marked by painful minuteness of operation, a tendency to overweight of heads, festooned drapery, angular eyes, and superabundance of gold. They reveal the source from which Sano di Pietro obtained his education.²

Some interest attaches also to the life of Sassetta from the knowledge that Sienese art is traceable through him in a direct manner to the home of Piero della Francesca. Della Valle quotes the contract of Stefano di Giovanni with the Minorites of Siena for a S. Francis in Majesty at S. Francesco of Borgo S. Sepolero. The picture has passed into the hands of Messrs. Lombardi at Florence.³ Poverty, Chastity, Obedience, hovering above the glorified founder's head, are not without grace or natural motion, but the attendant saints alone would prove that the Byzantine element had not vanished from Siena in the fifteenth century.⁴

The Coronation of the Virgin on the Roman Gate is an old form of that subject, lacking neither religious feeling nor simplicity in its conception, but almost deprived of both in the execution. Lean puppets, with necks almost as long as their waists, wriggle rather than move in attitudes and costume alike grotesque. Grimace distorts the faces. Festoons, bedecked with borders, surcharge the skirts, and remind us of the time when Cimabue arose to set aside similar imperfections; and Sassetta appears dimly to us as the last of a religious class exhausted by sameness and repetition.⁵ Yet, there is no depth so low but that we

² M. Ramboux's catalogue, at Cologne, assigns to Sassetta the following panels, Nos. 149-53.

³ DELLA VALLE, Lettere Senese, vol. iii., p. 44. The signature on the picture runs thus: "CRISTOFORUS FRANCISCI FEI ANDREAS JOHANNIS TANIS OPERARIUS A. MCCCCXXXIII." [The principal panels of this altarpiece are now in the possession of Mr. Bernhard Berenson, at Settignano, the remainder being in the Gallery at Chantilly, and in the collections of M. Chalandon of Paris and Comte de Martel at Cheverny.] DELLA VALLE further notices a Crucifix in the refectory of S. Martino at Siena, ordered of Sassetta in 1433 (op. cit., vol. iii., p. 44). [This Crucifix is no longer traceable.]

We may also mention here again the Berlin Museum panel, No. 1122, assigned to Domenico di Bartolo, see note to p. 104, with reference to its upper part being more like a production of Sassetta than one by any other Sienese that we know.

find a lower, and Pietro di Giovanni Pucci is to be reckoned amongst the followers of Stefano di Giovanni.¹

The whole fresco on the outside of the gate is in a recess the vaulting of which still contains a few of the angels originally painted there. The remaining notices of Sassetta's life are short:—1427. BORGHESI E BANCHI, Nuovi Documenti (Siena, 1898), p. 119 et seq. The authors say that the agreement was made with the Minorites of Siena. This is not so. The agreement was made at Borgo.]

For an appreciation of Sassetta, whom the authors treat far too casually, consult BERENSON, A Siennese Painter of the Franciscan Legend (Dent, 1909) first published in Burlington Magazine, 1903; and for a list of his works see IDEM, Central Italian Painters (1909), p. 244 et seq. MR. LANGTON DOUGLAS in Burlington Magazine, vol. i. (1903), p. 296, in an article called A Forgotten Painter, traces carefully what we may know of Sassetta's life and engagements. Cf. IDEM, A History of Siena (1902), p. 386 et seq. See also F. MASON PERKINS, in Rassegna d'Arte (Milan), for May 1904, Sept. 1904, Feb. 1906, March 1907; Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iv., fasc. 2-3; and Burlington Magazine, Aug. 1904.

I give here a list of pictures by Sassetta, ascribed to him by Mr. Berenson, Miss Olcott, Mr. Douglas, and Mr. Perkins, omitting those already mentioned at Asciano Cortona, and the Osservanza of Siena as well as the fresco of the Porta Romana, Siena, which is only partly his and has been frequently repainted:—

¹ [This is quite unjust to Pietro, as well as to Sassetta. He adds to the ugly [!] types of Sassetta rigidity and hard outlines, and he substitutes to his master's transparence of colour a disagreeable opaqueness. His extant works are: a life-size S. A similar figure, in the choir of the church of the Osservanza, signed: "OPUS PETRI JOHANNIS SENIS MCCCCXXXVIII.";—a third in S. in 1406,¹ buried in 1481,² his life offers no very great variety of incident. He worked for most of the public bodies and religious institutions of Siena, and there are not less than forty-seven panels by him in the Gallery of that city.

His style oscillates between that of Vecchietta and that of Sassetta, but he took most from the latter, rivalling the carefulness, improving the types and expression, of his predecessor. His frescoes are as like arras as those of Simone or Lippo Memmi. They are variegated, richly adorned, but almost shadowless. Round heads, deficient in the frontal projections, are heavy for frames that diminish feebly to the feet. Easy curves of meandering folds form the comparative attraction of draperies; and in panels, the colour is fused, transparent, and careful; nor is it possible to find, even in Simone, more exquisite tracery or more finely cut coigns for the stamping of nimbuses. An agreeable tenderness in the delineation of females sometimes redeems the more vulgar errors into which Sano commonly falls; and he fairly succeeds in such religious subjects as a Paradise, or a Coronation of the Virgin, and gives some greater charm to the form of an angel than to that of an attendant saint. It has been usual to call him the Angelico of Siena, and this may be true, if the name be meant only to suggest a contrast between his productions and the coarser ones of some of his contemporaries. An early Virgin and Saints, ordered for the convent of S. Girolamo of Siena in 1444, shows him to have been active at that time in the production of the partitioned altarpieces characteristic of the taste of his countrymen.³ A fresco of the Coronation in the ground floor of the Palazzo Pubblico is of the following year; and the most important of all Sano's labours.⁴ Some grace in the movement of the bowing Virgin is allied

⁴ A long inscription at the base of this fresco exists, and is given with tolerable correctness by DELLA VALLE, Lett. Sen., vol. ii., note to p. 230. It concludes: "OPUS SANI PETRI SENIS M^oCCCCXLV." The two principal figures are in front of a vast throne, at the back of which are numerous angels. Seraphs, prophets, and to a feeling immediately akin to that of Sassetta. Finer and better preserved, however, is the Madonna, SS. Jerome and Bernardino in a chapel to the left of the portal of the convent church dell' Osservanza.¹ Another careful work is a S. Bernardino in the sacristy of the Duomo at Siena. The most successful of the pieces in the Gallery is the Ascension of the Virgin of 1479;² and there are many interesting specimens of his manner in the sacristy of S. Francesco at Gualdo,³ in the collegiate church of S. Quirico near Siena,⁴ in the Duomo at Pienza,⁵ in SS. Pietro e Paolo of Buonconvento,⁶ in many other places of the Sienese territory, and in most public and private collections in England and on the Continent.⁷

In 1428, at which date Sano was already free of his guild, his model was taken for the font in the Baptistery of S. Giovanni at Siena.⁸ He acted as umpire for Sassetta in 1433,⁹ and as Vecchietta's assistant in 1439.¹⁰ In 1452, he valued, and is said to have finished subsequently, saints attend at the sides. Cherubs and other inmates of Paradise play in the spandrels of the arch forming the recess; and the whole scene is guarded, as it were, by a large S. Catherine (repainted in the seventeenth century) and S. Bernardino.

the frescoes of the Roman Gate.¹ He was not unacquainted with Francesco di Giorgio or Neroccio.² He was, in fact, an industrious mediocre man, the number of whose productions must have gone far to make the lives of other and less rapid painters dubious and uncomfortable.³

Amongst a mass of still less distinguished individuals who were his contemporaries and sometimes his aids, Giovanni di Paolo, called Del Poggio, and Giovanni di Pietro, deserve but a passing glance. The first of these was already in practice in 1423,⁴ and on the roll of Sienese art in 1428.⁵ His death followed closely on that of Sano, in whose service he laboured in 1447.⁶ His strange fancy in composition, and his epileptic vehemence and awkwardness in the delineation of action, are betrayed in a Last Judgment of 1453 at the Sienese Academy,⁷ and in many other panels abroad, such as those in M. Ramboux's collection at Cologne.⁸ He was a miniaturist, as his style might lead one to believe,

¹ Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 274. There is proof that the frescoes were unfinished in 1459 (Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 307), yet DELLA VALLE affirms that Sano's name and the date 1429 are on them (Lett. Sen., vol. ii., p. 229). The Annot. of VASARI state that Sano finished the work in 1460 (vol. vi., p. 183). But no one could now trace his hand there. [Documentary evidence proves Sano's part in the fresco over Porta Romana, Siena. It has been many times repainted.]

² Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 356.

See as to miniatures by Sano, Doc. Sen., vol. ii., pp. 382-3, 385; and VASARI, Com., vol. vi., pp. 224, 236, 238, 240, 242, 348-9. [Sassetta and Sano di Pietro are the two most charming of the fifteenth-century painters of Siena. They were both conservatives intent on preserving and expressing early intention of Sienese art. Sano is an uneven master, sometimes producing work of an extraordinary charm and delicacy, sometimes merely a mediocrity. He may be seen at his best in the signed work in the Siena Gallery, Nos. 246, 232, 241, 253, 255, 259, 260.]

⁶ Doc. Sen., vol. i., p. 375.

⁸ In this collection, one finds by him, panels as follows: Nos. 113-121, 123, 129. [Nothing by Giovanni di Paolo is now at Cologne.] In the sacristy of the church of Castiglione Fiorentino, is a picture in separate parts—subject, the Virgin and Child, SS. Catherine (recalling Gentile da Fabriano), female saint, and S. Michael (much injured). On the panel containing the Virgin, one reads: "OPUS JOHANNIS DE SENIS A. D. MCCCCLVII (1457)." [Now in Pinacoteca.]

A panel (small) by Giovanni di Paolo is (under the name of Gentile da Fabriano) in possession of Mr. Farrer in London—subjects the Annunciation and the Expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise. [Now in the Coll. of Mr. Robert Benson.] In the same style is an Adoration of the Magi, from the Northwick Collection and now belonging to Mr. Fuller Maitland. [Now in the Von Kauffmann Collection at Berlin ?.]

and he derived his manner apparently from that of Taddeo Bartoli's adoptive child Gregorio of Lucca; yet, it is possible to agree with Ricci,¹ that he was at the school of Gentile da Fabriano.² He may also be conjectured with reason to have taught another miniaturist whose vellums adorn the choral books of the cathedrals at Siena and Pienza; and by whom a Virgin, Child, and Saints was preserved in latter years by Signor Toscanelli at Pisa.³ As for Giovanni di Pietro, it will be

¹ Memorie, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 163. This may be the place to notice anew a S. George and Dragon assigned to Salvanello (note to p. 180, vol. i. of the present work) in S. Cristoforo of Siena. This picture is reminiscent of Pisanello and Gentile da Fabriano, yet seems Sienese. It might be by Giovanni di Paolo, if it be admitted that he studied under Gentile da Fabriano. [The S. George is by Sano. Cf. Lucy OLCOTT, Rassegna d'Arte (Milano), Sept. 1904.]

We may mention also in connection with the name of Giovanni di Paolo, an Annunciation, half-lengths of SS. Peter and Paul, Christ Crucified between the Virgin and Evangelist, gables of an altarpiece the sides of which, representing S. John the Baptist and S. Bernardino, are attached to a central Virgin already mentioned under Lorenzetti. These pieces are all in S. Pietro Ovale at Siena. The Annunciation is a copy of one by Simone handled in Giovanni di Paolo's manner. [This much-discussed work was formerly given by MR. PERKINS and MR. BERENSON to Andrea Vanni's later years (see Burlington Magazine, Aug. 1903); but MR. PERKINS, I believe, has for some time past looked upon it as an early work of Matteo di Giovanni, to whom he has ascribed the remaining panels of the altarpiece (see Burlington Magazine, 1904, and Rassegna d'Arte, Sept. 1904). MR. BERENSON still lists the picture as by Vanni (Central Italian Painters, 1909, p. 262); MR. DOUGLAS gives it to Sassetta (see his History of Siena, and Burlington Magazine, May 1903). See supra, vol. ii., p. 109, note 1.] In the same sacristy is a large Crucifix in the old style, with the Pelican, and "graffiti" of angels at the sides, also in the style of Giovanni di Paolo. Between the Crucifixion and the forementioned Annunciation, an Assumption in Asciano might be named. It has already been alluded to in the life of Dom. di Bartolo. A book-cover of 1444, is in the ninth Press of the Museo Cristiano at Rome, representing the Annunciation, apparently by Giovanni di Paolo. There are four pieces in the Lindenau Collection at Altenburg properly assigned to our artist—No. 76, Madonna; Nos. 77, 78, Crucifixions; and No. 79, "Noli me Tangere."

² [Giovanni di Paolo is evidently a pupil of Paolo di Giovanni Fei and a follower of Sassetta. MR. BERENSON and MR. PERKINS have published a long list of works by this changeable but often deeply imaginative and original artist. The Siena Gallery possesses numerous examples of his art, but for the greater part they are not to be classed among his finer works, the best of them being a Madonna and Child, No. 206, and a series of predella pieces, Nos. 172-4-5-6. He is to be seen at his best in such panels as those representing the Life of the Baptist in the Collection of M. Aynard at Lyons (cf. PERKINS, Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iii., fasc. 3-4); in the delightful Paradise formerly in the Palmieri-Nuti Coll. at Siena, and now in the Metropolitan Museum at New York; in the Annunciation belonging to Mr. Robert Benson, of London; in the Expulsion from Eden in M. Benoit's Collection at Paris; in the Assumption at San Severino in the Marches, &c. Giovanni was also an able miniaturist. Miniatures by his hand are to be seen in the Biblioteca Comunale of Siena, and in the Collection of Mr. Henry Yates Thompson, of London. A long list of Giovanni's works is to be found in MR. BERENSON's Central Italian Painters, 1909, pp. 176-181, to which the reader is referred.]

sufficient to call attention to his Virgin of Mercy in the choir of S. M. de' Servi at Siena. As an independent artist he scarcely deserves notice; but he was the "companion" of a master of some renown; and his humble aid was of service to Matteo di Giovanni di Bartolo.¹ Rational and staid in dealing with quiet religious scenes, Matteo was the best Sienese painter of his time. In this sense only he might claim to be called the Ghirlandaio of the rival republic. But when he ventured to diverge from the path in which he could hope to avoid the more glaring faults of his comrades; when, tired of delineating Virgins and angels, in which tenderness found its natural place, he chose subjects requiring dramatic power; he betrayed his education in ill-balanced and overcharged composition, in confused groups, and in violent, yet unnatural action. If he sometimes resembled Vecchietta and Benvenuto, because he gave little pliancy to the human shape, and little style to drapery; if grimace often resulted from his attempt to realise expression; he frequently displayed a softness and feeling characteristic of Sano di Pietro, whose manner he may be said to have assumed and improved by modernising it. He certainly shows that the progress of Italian art had not remained unheeded or unstudied on his part; yet when we compare Matteo with Domenico Ghirlandaio, or the Sienese of the fifteenth century with their contemporaries at Florence, it becomes plain that scientific principles were not substituted soon enough in Siena to the religious sentiment which gave originality and power to Duccio and some of his successors. But to say that Matteo, as chief of his class, was far behind the Florentines, is insufficient. The low level kept by his countrymen at the close of the period at which we have arrived, was such that, whilst the Umbrians whom they had at first governed, fell off from their allegiance, the Perugians successively rivalled, distanced, and overcame them. Siena thus persistently rejected the examples of Florence from the earliest to the latest age, and when, in a sinking state, are in Doc. Sen., vol. ii., pp. 379-80-2, 385-6), and in Com. to VASARI, vol. vi., pp. 221, 223, 227, 229, 237, 344-5. [Pellegrino di Mariano was evidently a pupil of Sassetta. Signor Toscanelli's picture is no longer to be traced. Two very pleasingly painted panels by Pellegrino are Nos. 216, 218, of the Gallery of Siena, both of them being predella pictures. MR. PERKINS further ascribes to him a little Virgin and Child (No. 158) and a Crucifixion in the same Gallery (cf. Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iv., fasc. 2-3), as well as five panels, Press S, Nos. IV.-VIII., representing the Nativity of the Virgin, her Presentation, her Marriage, the Visitation, and the Adoration of the Magi, in the Christian Museum of the Vatican (Rassegna d'Arte (Milan), Aug. 1906).]

she acknowledged a supremacy, inevitable as well as beneficial, she swore fealty to Perugia, retaining the humble position of vassal, content in the exercise of talents second to those of the great Vannucci, and as far below those of Padua in the scientific branch, as they were below those of Venice in the gift of colour. Matteo, however, was but half a Sienese, being the son of a tinman of Borgo S. Sepolero, and perhaps a native of the town the name of which derived lustre from Piero della Francesca.¹ He is supposed to have seen the light not later than 1435;² and this belief is based with some security on an income-paper of 1453, in which Matteo describes himself as a stranger, with Giovanni di Pietro for his assistant, at a hired lodging in the Palazzo Forteguerri.³ Their joint labour was expended in 1457 on a chapel dedicated to S. Bernardino in the Siena Duomo.⁴ But Matteo's fame and affluence increased at a later time; and his best works are of the close of the century. His oldest authentic picture, indeed, is an enthroned Virgin attended by numerous angels, long in S. Maria de' Servi at Siena,⁵ but now in the Gallery. His signature, with the date of 1470, is still legible there;⁶ but it is not upon this injured panel⁷ that we can found our judgment of Matteo's style; and the Madonna della Neve, which he finished for the Brotherhood of that name in 1477, is preferable for the symmetry of proportion, choice of type, and natural air of figures better draped than usual, and coloured in dark and flat but well-fused tones. The idea of a Virgin "of the Snow" is of respectable antiquity in legendary Church lore; having been first suggested in the fourth century, when the patrician John and the Pope Liberius were simultaneously directed by the vision of Mary to a spot on which the church of S. Maria Maggiore in Rome was to be erected, a spot easy to be recognised by the coat of snow that was found upon it. The incidents of this legend, once the subject of Gaddo Gaddi's mosaics in S. M. Maggiore at Rome, were represented by Matteo in the predella of the altarpiece under notice, separated from it later, and seen by Della Valle in the Casa Sozzini at Siena, but since withdrawn from ken.¹

A few years after (1479), when the enthroned S. Barbara, with her attendant saints, was completed for the Dominicans of Siena, Matteo might still be distinguished for giving comeliness to female saints, an unstrained deportment to ministering angels, and richness to the adornment of vestments.² Yet he still lacked power, and his careful colour remained as before unrelieved by shadow. A Madonna amongst saints, in a chapel of the church for which the S. Barbara was depicted, offers similar qualities allied to greater precision of hand.³

But, if we pass from these quiet holy scenes to others, in which movement is required, there Matteo is at fault. He repeated the Massacre of the Innocents several times; once in the altarpiece of a chapel at S. Agostino of Siena, dated 1482;⁴ again in S. Maria de' Servi of Siena in 1491;⁵ a third time in a picture at the Naples Museum.⁶ In all these he combined incidents in a confused and unsatisfactory manner. The action is unnatural; the idea grotesque; the expression grimace. Architecture, studied from old models, is applied without knowledge of perspective; and the absence of systematic acquirements in this respect

¹ DELLA VALLE, Lett. Sen., vol. iii., p. 58. The altarpiece [now (1909) with its predella] is still in its original place, in good preservation, and inscribed: "OPUS MATEI DE SENIS MCCCCLXXVII." The figures are life-size. Sixteen angels are about the enthroned Virgin and Child, some with flowers, others with snowballs, one of which the Infant Saviour grasps. The attendant saints, kneeling and standing, are SS. Peter, Paul, Lawrence, and Catherine, the two latter not without feeling in pose or expression.

² See the order for this work in Nov. 1478 in Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 364. This altarpiece represents S. Barbara (life-size), amongst angels (two of whom crown her) between SS. Mary Magdalen and Catherine of Alexandria. It is in S. Domenico; its lunette, the Adoration of the Magi, on a picture by Benvenuto (see antea). The S. Barbara is inscribed: "OPUS MATEI DE SENIS MCCCCLXXVIII."

is perhaps the cause why Herod appears to exceed in stature the nearer figures of soldiers and of women. Anachronisms of costume are not compensated by taste, nor is the dry bone of form animated into any sort of life.¹

It is a relief, indeed, to pass from these unsuccessful efforts at rendering instant motion to such religious themes as that of the Adoration of the Virgin in the Siena Gallery,² or the Madonnas of the Palazzo Pubblico³ and Palazzo Tolomei in the same city,⁴ or of the Duomo at Pienza.⁵ There is hardly a church or a brotherhood in the Sienese country that may not boast of a panel by Matteo;⁶ nor is it difficult to study him abroad; for there are works of his in England.⁷ Two pieces in the version of this theme exists in the Gallery of Aix-en-Provence, No. 138, and was formerly given by some critics to Matteo, but Mr. PERKINS asserts that this work is by Benvenuto di Giovanni (cf. Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iii. fasc. 3-4). Mr. Berenson, in his latest list, agrees with Mr. Perkins in this attribution.]

² [No. 283.] This is one of Matteo's best panels in the Gallery of his native place, the nudes being careful and of Umbrian softness in movement and outline. The action is comparatively good and free, the colour a little grey and flayed. The piece may be found engraved in Rosini. The remaining pictures in the Gallery of Siena are four Madonnas with saints severally numbered [280, 399, 400, 432.] [One of Matteo's most captivating pictures is a Madonna and Child with two Angels in the church of Percena, near Buonconvento. It was first published by Miss OLCOTT in the Rassegna d'Arte (Milano), for May 1904. Another very fine work by the master is in the collection of Mr. F. Mason Perkins at Assisi—a Madonna and Child with two Saints. A characteristic Madonna by Matteo was in the collection of the late Mr. Henry Willett of Brighton. In Mr. Berenson's collection at Settignano there is also a good example of the painter (cf. F. MASON PERKINS in Rassegna d'Arte Senese, an. iii., fasc. 2).]

Museum of Berlin seem, on the other hand, less due to Matteo than to Guidoccio Cozzarelli.¹

Of this inferior person, however, it will be unnecessary to say much, except that he was a painter of altarpieces and miniatures. His style makes a feeble approach to that of Matteo. A genuine Madonna and Saints of 1486 is in M. Ramboux's Gallery at Cologne, besides which the Siena Academy² comprises a large but not very interesting number of his compositions.³

² He is the author of the Libyan Sibyl in the pavement of the Siena Duomo (1483), Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 379, and see for his miniatures, Doc. Sen., vol. ii., pp. 382-6, and VASARI, vol. vi., p. 184 and following. The picture alluded to in the text is No. 148 in the Ramboux Collection, signed: "OPUS GUIDOCCIUS JOAN. . . . M.CCCCLXXXVI." Further in the same Gallery, No. 158-9. In the Siena Academy [No. 367] (Virgin and Saints) is inscribed: "GUIDOCIUS PINXIT A. D. MCCCCLXXXII. DECEMBRIS." In Archivio are book-covers assigned to him. No. [378] in Gallery, a S. Francis [296-7], a S. Sebastian and a Virgin [No. 337], also a Virgin [No. 445], a S. Catherine. An Adoration of the Magi in the Royal Palace at Stockholm [No. 214, wood, tempera], split in four places, catalogued under the name of Ghirlandaio, is really by Guidoccio. The surface is much damaged and in part totally scaled. It is a feeble and rude work even for Guidoccio; figures about a quarter of life-size. [This piece is now transferred to the New Museum.] A Virgin and Child between S. Antony of Padua and another saint in the Gallery of Count Paul Stroganoff at S. Petersburg (wood, tempera, half-lengths on gold ground, a third of life-size) assigned to Matteo da Siena, is handled in the feebler manner of Guidoccio.

Works by Cozzarelli are plentiful, and many of them still pass under Matteo's name, as is the case with the Madonna and Angels of 1484 in the Palazzo Pubblico at Siena, ascribed by the authors to Matteo, but recognised by Mr. Berenson and by MISS OLCOTT (Guide to Siena) as a creation of Guidoccio. A very fine series of panels by Guidoccio, doubtless painted under Matteo's direct supervision, is the long predella in the church of the Misericordia at Buonconvento. Mr. Berenson and Mr. Perkins have attributed a large number of panels to this unequal, though at times attractive, follower of Matteo. For a list of these see MR. BERENSON'S Central Italian Painters (1909), pp. 158-61. One of Cozzarelli's larger altarpieces is a Baptism of Christ in the Franciscan monastery at Sinalunga. His most important work, according to Mr. Perkins, is to be found in the church of S. Michele at Paganico in Southern Tuscany.]

OTTAVIANO NELLI

IF, retrospectively, we cast a glance upon the field over which the influence of Sienese art was felt, we shall perceive that its expanse in the fourteenth century was considerable, and that its centre was Siena. During the subsequent period, in which some choice talents illustrated Cortona and Borgo S. Sepolero by introducing Florentine blood into the Umbrian stock, the point of radiation was displaced. We trace an imaginary line from Gubbio over the Apennine to S. Severino and Camerino, recrossing the hills to Foligno and Gualdo. The spiral thus drawn centres in Perugia. Along that line the Umbrian school developed itself on the old Sienese basis; and, with hardly any dependence on Florence, silently and slowly grew. On the track of Palmerucci and Nuzi, Ottaviano Martini, and Gentile da Fabriano inherited and kept alive the traditions of Oderisio. Impassive, and averse from change like their contemporaries of Siena, following the vein of thought and technical method opened and bequeathed to them by their precursors, they continued to neglect the scientific innovations originated in Florence, and still imagined that perfection consisted in bright contrast of colours, copiousness and delicacy of ornament, minuteness of design and tender fusion of flesh tints. Composition, perspective form, or relief by light and shade, were as nothing compared to the aim of delineating a languid tenderness or affected grace. We shall endeavour to follow Ottaviano, Gentile, Alunno, and others of less note, whose art was the prelude to the excellence of Vanucci's. Ottaviano, son of the Gubbian Martino Nelli, whose name has already found a place in this history, was in the full swing of his career in the rise of the fifteenth century, and has left us an example of his skill at that time in a wall painting of the Virgin amidst saints (called del Belvedere), now under glass in S. Maria Nuova of Gubbio. A gay variegated miniature, in which bright mixtures of secondary and tertiary colours form a chequered but unshaded pattern; airy unsubstantial figures in dresses of cobweb texture, thrown with flowers, fringed out into leafy borders; a simple combination of saints and angels of different sizes cast symmetrically on a blue diaper ground—such is the masterpiece of Nelli; a masterpiece in which some heads, as those of Antony the Abbot and his attendant companion, are not without calm repose, in which the Virgin and Child gaze primly and prettily enough; and the whole is finished with an industry recoiling from no detail.¹ Four years before the date of this work (1403-4) Ottaviano had been busy at Perugia, on the armorial bearings of no less distinguished an employer than Gian-Galeazzo, Duke of Milan.² At S. M. Nuova, his patrons were the Pinoli, whose portraits are in kneeling profile at the sides of the picture. A fair repute, not only as a master, but as a citizen, seems to have been conceded to Ottaviano; and the registers of the Gubbian municipality prove that Nelli had been elected consul in 1410.³ Whether it be true or not that he then finished the Virgin of Succour in S. Agostino of Gubbio, the canvas itself does not decide; because on its restoration in 1600 by Pierangelo Basili,⁴ eight new personages were introduced; and the whole piece was deprived of its original character;⁵ but a wall tempera of the Madonna with saints, angels, and small souls from purgatory on the sides of the church, though a feeble effort, bears the impress of Ottaviano's school;⁶ whilst the choir of the holy edifice is covered with scenes chosen from the legend of S. Augustine,⁷ in most of which, and particularly in a "Death

VIANUS MARTIS EUGUBINUS PINXIT ANO DNI MC . . . IIL." (may be 1404). The fusion of the tones shows that this was not a fresco, but a tempera on the wall. The outlines are excessively fine, the hands defective, the limbs puny. The lower part of the Virgin's dress is injured and retouched, and the gilding of the hems gone.
The head of the patron to the right is damaged, and the brown mantle of S. Antony is over-painted. A chromo-lithograph of a large portion of the picture is in the collection of the Arundel Society, with a life of the artist by Mr. Layard.

⁴ BUONFATTI, ubi sup., p. 9. The piece is on canvas.

⁵ The same subject in a panel at S. Francesco of Montefalco has been given to Ottaviano, but reminds us of similar ones common to Umbria in the sixteenth century, ex. gr. one of 1506, seen by the authors at Rome, in the ex-Campana Collection, by Giovanni di Monte Rubiano. It (the Montefalco Madonna) has, besides the Umbrian character, an inscription as follows: "GRISEYDA S. BASTIANI F. P. PRO ALIABUS DICTI S. BASTIANI TARQUINI PERITEI ET FRANCESCHINI. A. D. M.D.X."

⁶ One of the souls from purgatory is recommended by an angel to the Virgin.

⁷ In the apsis bend, the subjects are:—1. Vision of S. Monica. 2. S. Augustine at Carthage. 3. Meeting of S. A. and S. Ambrose. 4. Baptism of S. A. Sides:
1. Augustine's return to Teggaste. 2. Consecration of S. A. 3. His Consecration as Bishop of Hippona. 4. Death of S. Monica. 5. Dispute of S. A. with Felix.
6. Death of S. A. 7. Transfer of his body to Pavia, and miracles. In this last fresco many parts are restored and much of the gold ornament is new. One of the monks in the second row of those carrying the body (profile) is new. A broader but more hasty execution characterises the ceiling, part of the lunettes, and the vaulting of the entrance arch—[a large fresco of the Last Judgment has recently been uncovered above the entrance arch]—and, as Buonfatti observes, these parts resemble in style and handling the work of Jacopo Bedi, who, in 1458, furnished some extant paintings in S. Secondo Cemetery at Gubbio.

of S. Monica," the pencil of Nelli's scholars may be discerned. This series bears no date, but may be considered as of a later time than the Madonna of S. M. Nuova, whilst it betrays less practice than that of Foligno, of which the date (1424) is precisely ascertained. In both places, the Siense character is predominant in the figures and their arrangement; and the composition is reminiscent of those with which Taddeo Bartoli flooded the country generally.¹ The traditional belief, that Gentile da Fabriano assisted Ottaviano in the choir of S. Agostino, rests on very insufficient grounds; for Gentile would scarcely have been subordinate to Nelli after the first years of the century. There is, however, one fresco in S. M. della Piaggiola, outside Gubbio, of the Virgin and Child adored by two angels, where, in spite of serious injuries attributable to various causes, a more vigorous handling and better proportions are to be found than in the Madonna of S. Maria Nuova. It has been assigned to Ottaviano,² and might indicate the presence of Gentile. In any case, this production, if truly by Nelli, would be his most successful effort. That Ottaviano had changed his residence from Gubbio to Urbino in 1420 is proved by contemporary records. His long intercourse with that capital and with the rulers of the duchy is illustrated by fragmentary evidence; by a memorandum of his connection with the Brotherhood of S. Croce (1428-32),³ and by a letter in his own hand, addressed to Catherine Colonna, wife of Guid' Antonio di Montefeltro (1434), referring to the pictorial decoration of the church of S. Erasmo, about three miles from Gubbio.⁴ Time has robbed us of all marks of his passage at Urbino,⁵ and the frescoes of S. Erasmo, if ever they were carried out, have ceased to exist; but Ottaviano had in 1424 been entrusted by Corrado de' Trinci with a commission to adorn the chapel of his palace in Foligno, and the series of episodes derived from the legend of the Virgin, with which he filled the walls, still attests the mediocrity of his powers.⁶ Were it not, indeed, that these dim and ill-conceived paintings are authenticated by his name, and are thus of interest as characterising one who has a place in Umbrian art, they might be passed over without comment. The Virgin or angels, when, in accordance with the necessities of the subjects they recur, still distantly recall the tenderness which the Gubbians invariably sought to convey : but Ottaviano plainly believed that the reproduction of incidents, so often delineated, required no further stretch of imagination or ingenuity ; and he merely repeated the time-honoured arrangements of the Sienese school, in a spirit distantly reminiscent of that of Taddeo Bartoli. The bright harmony of unrelieved colours which may please the beholder at S. Maria of Gubbio, in the absence of other qualities, having disappeared giving a Palm to the Virgin. The lower part of the wall containing the Presentation in the Temple, Nativity and Adoration of the Magi, is filled by a vast Crucifixion. In the ceiling are (facing each other in four triangular compartments), Joachim and Anna Presenting the Doves to the Priest, the Appearance of the Angel to Joachim, the Meeting of Joachim and Anna, and the Birth of the Virgin. Each subject is divided from the other by gilt wax borders in relief, the nimbus high in relief, and gilt likewise. On a border above the crucifixion one reads a part of an inscription preserved by historians as follows : "HOC OPUS FECIT FIERI MAGNIFICUS ET POTENS DNS CORADUS UGULINI DE TRINCIS FULGINEIS MCCCCXXIII DIE XXV FEB. FINXIT. M. OCTAVIANUS MARTINI DE GUBBIO." The last syllable of "Ottavianus" only now remains. The Palace of the Trinci is now the Palazzo del Governo.

In a room leading to the Cappella Trinci, some paintings have been recently saved from whitewash. They represent :—1. In an interior, about an altar capped with a cross, nine figures in prayer kneeling. 2. Right of this, two figures meeting and embracing (all the lower part wanting and the fresco much injured). 3. To the right again, the birth of a child, as one judges from the remains. On another wall is the following : the wolf and other indistinct subjects, to the right of which, an execution and soldiers with shields, in great part abraded. Beneath, are inscriptions which Signor Guardabassi (Mariano) was able to read :—

PER PIETA SON' POSTI PRESSO AL FIUME
ROMULO E REMO ALLA FORTUNA DATI,
DOVE PIU GIORNI SONO E NUTRICATI
DONNA LUPA PER HUMAN' COSTUME.

It is supposed that the first subject is the Spozalizio, the second the Birth of Romulus and Remus, and the third Amulius condemning Rea. These paintings are partly gone, and what remains is much damaged ; they are of Umbrian character and in the style of Ottaviano Nelli—less defective indeed than those of Nelli in the Trinci chapel.

The whole Palazzo del Governo seems to have been decorated of old. In the upper part of it, divided by a false floor from the lower, the walls, which seem to have been those of a large hall, are painted. In a series of imitated niches one sees colossal fragments of figures of old Romans. One reads the names of Mutius Scævola, Caius Marius, Publius Decius, Claudius Nero, consul, Fabius, Augustus, Tiberius, &c. Fifteen in all remain. In scraping the wall below the false floor, the legs of these figures were recently found. Beneath them are inscribed lines respecting which Prof. Adamo Rossi of Perugia says, that the style of the verses is that of Petrarch. Above each figure one reads the name of "Sixtus IIII Pon. max., Sixtus IIII an. VI. Sixto Papa quarto," and other words, the meaning of which it is not easy to decipher.

The character of these paintings is neither Florentine, nor Sienese, but Umbrian of the Gubbian and Fabrianese school. One notes a system of enlarged miniature without definite shadows, and warm tones. The papacy of Sixtus IV. would indicate a very late date for this work ; there is ground for supposing that his name has been added to earlier productions. Future investigation may determine this, especially if a better light is thrown on pieces which it is now very difficult to see.

in the course of years, the skeleton of lean and defective forms alone remains. There is no movement in frames laid out without knowledge of anatomy; nothing but grimace in faces of a poor and sometimes even ignoble type; but coarseness in hands or feet. The draperies are at once broken and ill-cast.

Such a talent, as this of Nelli, was ill-calculated to create admiration even in the local craftsmen of a petty place like Foligno; nor is it possible that it should have affected to any extent the career of Niccolò da Foligno.

But not alone in Foligno, in Assisi the same level had been attained; and to the right of the entrance, on the outer wall of SS. Antonio e Jacopo, a church in which Pietro d'Antonio and Matteo of Gualdo were afterwards employed, remnants of a Virgin and Child adored by groups of faithful under the patronage of SS. Antony and James, and of a Virgin and Angel Annunciate, offer to the spectator traces of the manner of Nelli at the Palace of the Trinci.¹

In the eighteenth century, a number of wall pieces by Ottaviano perished in the changes made to the church of S. Piero of Gubbio. Amongst these were the subjects adorning the chapel of Agnolo dei Carnevali, the payments for which in 1439 are still preserved.² Nelli did not long survive; and nothing is known of him after 1444.³

To dwell at any length on the minor Gubbians, who were his contemporaries or followers, would be of slight interest. His brother Tomasuccio is the author of a S. Vincent,⁴ and subordinate incidents in S. Domenico of Gubbio, where better proportion, fairer outlines, and a

A public record with reference to the transfer of a tenement in 1444 includes Ottaviano's name. See BUONFATTI, ubi sup., p. 24. He died leaving all his property to Marte di Pompeo, adopted in 1442, after all hope of children from his wife Baldina di Bartolello had been abandoned.

more chastened fancy in the choice of dress indicate a nearer connection with Gentile da Fabriano than is to be found in Nelli.¹

Jacopo Bedi, who (1458) decorated the Cappella Panfili in the cemetery of S. Secondo, rudely continued Ottaviano's style, without attempting to rival his carefulness or gay key of tones.²

Equally feeble, but more true to the older models of Taddeo Bartoli, Giovanni Pintali exhibits himself in an Ascension and Coronation of the Virgin on the walls of the Spedaletto of Gubbio ;³ and shares the mediocrity of Domenico di Cecco di Baldi.⁴ A little later, Bernardino di Nanni fills a gap in Gubbian annals, but is ill-represented by injured or renewed fragments in a chapel below the Portico del Mercato, and in the old Palazzo Municipale, at S. Croce, S. Maria Nuova, and S. Secondo.⁵

² Four Doctors of the Church in a ceiling, and Four Evangelists in monochrome in the lunettes, the whole more feebly handled than the series of S. Augustine in S. Agostino. The architecture and ornament are bad, the draperies mechanically lined, the colour red. On a card: "IN NOMINE DNI AMEN. ANNO DNI MILLESIMO QUATROCENTESIMO QUINQUAGESIMO OCTAVO. TEMPORE DNI PII PAPAE SECUNDI ANNO PRIMO SUI PONTIFICATUS DIE SEPTIMA MENSIS SEPTEMBRIS. JACOPUS PINXIT." A Virgin by him in S. M. dei Bianchi, at Gubbio, is gone (BUONFATTI, ubi sup., pp. 14, 25).

⁴ The articles of apprenticeship of this painter to Ottaviano, dated 1441, are preserved in BUONFATTI, ubi sup., p. 27. A Pietà of 1446 in S. Maria della Piaggiola, a Virgin and Saints in S. Donato, are poor remnants of his manner. A Virgin and Child in S. Lucia of Gubbio is of an earlier time and has been noted in the Umbrian school (see antea, vol. ii.). Domenico died in 1488. BUONFATTI, ubi sup., p. 15.

A standard in oil belonging to the company of S. Croce, at Gubbio, is assigned to him. It represents S. Ubaldo and S. Peter Martyr at each side of a Cross, above which are angels, and S. M. Magdalen at foot, whilst the members of the company are in the foreground at each side. This is a work of the sixteenth century, Umbrian in character and reminiscent of the manner of Sinibaldo Ibi, who was at Gubbio in 1509. It may be by Orlandi, who assisted Ibi in Gubbio in that year, and who is recorded at that time in a register of the administration of the brotherhood of S. M. di Laici (notices of SIGNOR BUONFATTI, and see postea, Ibi and Orlando.)

The Virgin and Child on an altar to the left of the entrance to S. Secondo is different from the other works assigned to Bernardino, the style, of the fifteenth century, with broken draperies. A Virgin and Child to the right of Ottaviano's fresco in S. M. Nuova, in part damaged, resembles a work of Domenico di Cecco. SS. Ubaldo and John the Baptist attending at the Virgin's side, above the Porta Maggiore of the Palazzo Municipale, are altogether repainted.

CHAPTER VIII

GENTILE DA FABRIANO, LORENZO DA S. SEVERINO,
GIO. BOCCATI, MATTEO DA GUALDO, MEZZASTRIS,
NICCOLÒ DA FOLIGNO, AND OTHERS

THE fame of Gubbio, greatly increased in the fourteenth century by the honourable mention of Oderisio in Dante's Divina Commedia, was dimmed in the fifteenth by the lustre which Gentile shed upon his native town of Fabriano.

It chanced that, during a chequered and active life, this artist laboured in the same places and for the same patrons as Vittore Pisano. Vittore had first devoted his energies exclusively to painting; but towards the close of his days he displayed such extraordinary skill in casting and chiselling medallion portraits that he was eagerly sought by most of the Italian princes and chieftains of his time. At their courts he met, conversed with, and gained the friendship of, the most eminent men of the period in literature and poesy. His talents were celebrated in sonnets, or recorded in more serious prose; and, to the delight of his countrymen, his name is to be found in works of acknowledged merit, where those of his contemporaries are entirely neglected. Amongst the cities which Vittore visited, Venice and Rome are the most important. The ducal palace in the first, the church of S. Giovanni Laterano in the second, were both adorned by his frescoes. In both, Gentile da Fabriano left examples of his manner. Praise of Gentile was doubtless often on the lips of Pisano, and thus it became familiar to Facio and Biondo of Forlì.

We shall not say that he did not deserve the honour which he obtained at their hands; and whilst we refuse to admit any superiority in him over the Florentines, we may concede that he worthily closed an epoch in the pictorial development of Umbria. It is not to be denied that Gentile da Fabriano concentrated the better qualities of the Gubbians, and that he brought their peculiar art to a combination as complete as it was capable of attaining; but his masterpieces are only remarkable for their longing softness, their affectation of grace, their laborious fusion, and for a profuse ornamentation inherited from the Umbrian and Siennese schools.

Gentile di Niccolò di Giovanni Massi of Fabriano, for so a contemporary record teaches us to call him,¹ was probably born at Fabriano between 1360 and 1370, and taught by Allegretto Nuzi.² In the prime of his manhood, when Ottaviano Nelli produced the Madonna of the Belvedere, he may have derived some useful lessons from one whose style seems naturally linked to his and to Nuzi's; but he quickly distanced the Gubbian as he settled into the possession of a manner often contrasted with that of Fra Giovanni of Fiesole; and his fame speedily extended beyond the limits of Umbria proper. We shall not discuss the arguments of Vasari and his antagonists, who affirm in turn that Gentile was the pupil and the master of Angelico.³ It would be difficult to find two men more totally divergent in aim than the Florentine friar and the painter of Fabriano. Both were noted for tenderness and finish, for the care with which they prepared and used their materials, but the results were completely at variance with each other; and the angelic candour of the creations due to the one has no relation whatever to the smorfia and affectation of those produced by the other. Gentile and Fra Giovanni may have met at Florence, where they dwelt at the same time; but we think that Gentile did not go there to teach; and in so far, Vasari is nearer the truth, perhaps, than his opponents.⁴

The uninterrupted connection of Sieneſe and Umbrians may be conſidered to have had its effect on Gentile's ſtyle;⁵ nor is it extraordinary that he ſhould have exhibited a certain relationship to Taddeo Bartoli when we remember how frequently that artiſt was employed in Umbrian cities, or ſent his pictures there on commiſſion. It is unneceſſary in conſequence to aſſume that Gentile ſhould have made an early viſit to Siena. A diſtinct Sieneſe character is plainly to be diſcerned in the only fragment of wall paintings that we poſſeſs at Orvieto; and the older Coronation of the Virgin at Val Romita, the predella of which ſtill remains at Fabriano, whiſt its centre and ſides have found their way into the

Brera at Milan, is powerfully stamped with a similar impress; ¹ a circle of eight angels exhaling their joy as they play about the rays of a sun at the base of the picture, recalling similar passages in Taddeo Bartoli's illustrations to the "Creed" in the Opera of the Siena Cathedral. In these figures, as well as in the principal group which is capped by the Eternal resting a hand on the shoulders of Mary and of Christ, we see the faults common to most of the men of these regions. Short and ill-grown personages, without charm in their features or action, are wrapped in long and twining draperies, revealing nothing of the frames they clothe. Rustic size and coarseness of extremities are accompanied by incorrect design. No atmosphere permeates the space, and shadow is all but absent; but the engraved outlines and ornament are finished with the utmost care. SS. Francis, Jerome, Magdalen, and Dominic at the sides, stand on a meadow of which the grass and flowers remain untrampled by their feet; and the predella scenes, of which four remain at Fabriano, are equally imperfect.

There is every reason to believe that Gentile's first progress out of Umbria was in a northerly direction. His first patron was Pandolfo Malatesta, Lord of Brescia and Bergamo, who in the early part of the fifteenth century gave him a large salary to decorate a chapel.² From thence he proceeded to Venice, where he spent some years adorning the great hall of the Ducal Palace with one of the episodes derived from the Legend of Barbarossa, the battle between that Emperor and the Venetians, and furnishing altarpieces to S. Giuliano and S. Felice.³ Emulating Uccello in the choice of a realistic subject, he succeeded, says Facio, in representing the terrors of a hurricane with such reality as to strike terror into the spectator.⁴

If we may credit records lately discovered, and made public, the walls of the Ducal Palace at Venice, on which there were still some vacant spaces in 1411, had been finally covered with subjects in 1422; ⁵

and we may infer that Gentile as well as Pisano had both been engaged in the edifice previous to the latter date. Gentile's battle-piece had already shown symptoms of decay in Facio's time,¹ and gradually disappeared altogether; nor have other causes been wanting to deprive us of the examples which he left in Venice.

A solitary Virgin and Child in the Venice Academy bears Gentile's name, but is altered by heavy over-painting.² An Adoration of the Magi, originally belonging to the noble family of Zen, and subsequently forming part of the Craglietto Gallery,³ seems to have found a final resting-place in the Berlin Museum, where it is catalogued very properly under the name of Antonio Vivarini.⁴ It affords conclusive evidence, at least, of the influence which Gentile wielded in the Venetian school.

If we are thus unable to cite anything in Venice that may with certainty be assigned to Gentile da Fabriano, we are more fortunately situated as to certain incidents connected with his life.

Amongst the youths who had devoted themselves to the career of art, and who were destined to become known as men of talent, was Jacopo Bellini, who entered the atelier of Gentile as his apprentice. A charming familiarity soon united the two men; and the master sat to his pupil for a likeness which came later into the Bembo Collection.⁵

They afterwards lived together in Florence, and when Jacopo married, the master held the first of the children at the font.

The year in which Gentile settled at Florence¹ is approximately ascertained by the register of the Guild of Barber-Surgeons, in which he matriculated in November 21, 1422.² But his fame survived his departure from Venice; and all he did was so eagerly sought there that the demand was supplied even from Fabriano. Marc Antonio Pasqualino, whose father had been Gentile's sitter, thus obtained two portraits;³ and we can only deplore that they should have shared the fate of so many others collected with trouble and cost in the galleries and churches of Venice.

From his shop in the Popolo S. Trinità at Florence, Gentile doubtless sent forth much that is undiscoverable at the present day. In 1423, he completed an order for the church of his adopted parish; and the Adoration of the Magi is now the ornament of the Florentine Academy of Arts.⁴ He enriched the foreground of the composition by the introduction of a copious retinue of followers, grooms, and huntsmen, accompanied by dogs and monkeys, filling the distance with well-arranged episodes and groups. The Saviour, the Virgin, and the Angel Annunciate appear in the medallions of the gables, whilst the predella comprises the Nativity, the Flight into Egypt, and the Presentation in the Temple. Grace in the shape of the females attendant on the Virgin, ease in the motion of the King whose spurs a page removes, are combined with individuality in heads, which seem portrayed from nature; the harmonies of colour are Umbrian in their gaiety, but there is no ærial perspective, and gilt-relief ornament is luxuriously applied. The profile of a female to the left of the Virgin recalls the types of the old Sienese period, whilst the turbaned king seems impressed with that softness which becomes a more charming feature in Perugino. The gable figures are pretty and in fair condition, whilst the principal subject is not free from injury. This is Gentile's best extant effort, proving that his stay in Florence had taught him something more than he had learnt at home, yet that, like his precursor Nuzi, he could not alter his Umbrian nature, nor forget his primitive education so far as to adopt any of the innovations due to Uccello, Brunelleschi, Masaccio, or Donatello. He may have been struck by a miniaturist like Lorenzo Monaco. He may have admired the creations of Angelico, but he remained inferior to the first and a fortiori at a respectful distance from the second.

A Virgin and Child between four saints, described and praised by Facius, long adorned the office of the Notaries at Siena, and is variously stated to have been painted in 1424-5.¹ But Vasari adds that Gentile worked in S. Giovanni at Siena.² It is, however, not as yet distinctly proved that Siena was ever visited by him.³ Gentile still inhabited Florence in 1425. An inscription, printed by many authors, long authenticated a Virgin and Child attended by saints, the centre of which has disappeared from the church of S. Niccolò di là d'Arno.⁴ It was ordered by one of the family of Quaratesi,⁵ and extorted from Vasari an opinion that of all things he had seen by Gentile, that was the best, not only because the Virgin and saints were well done, but because the predella,⁶ with incidents from the life of S. Nicholas, could not have been better or neater. The side panels of this votive piece, are still at S. Niccolò, filled with a pretty and graceful Magdalen in profile; a S. Nicholas, on whose cope scenes from the Passion are given with exquisite minuteness; a fine S. George, and a Baptist more in the old Sienese antique style; the whole ornamented with profusion, flat and fused in tone, and with a rosy flesh tint shadowed in cool grey.⁷

¹ RICCI says 1425, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 167. VASARI'S Commentators say it was commenced in 1424, finished in 1425 (vol. iv., p. 162). See also FACIUS (B.), De Viris Illustribus (Florence, 1715), pp. 44-5, from whom we learn that the saints at the Virgin's side were SS. John the Baptist, Peter, Paul, and Christopher. The Virgin he describes as striving to cover the Infant on her lap with a transparent veil. The Com. of VASARI add that beneath the principal panel was a round of Pietà.

³ The Com. of VASARI do not believe that Gentile laboured at S. Giovanni of Siena (vol. iv., pp. 162-3).

The Siena Guide, by FALUSCHI (1784), p. 229, notices the tradition of the existence of a picture by Gentile da Fabriano in S. Cristoforo of Siena.

⁶ Not to be found at this day.

But this was not a solitary commission undertaken for patrons having family chapels in S. Niccolò. A panel, lately discovered in that church, is now in the sacristy. It represents the Eternal, surrounded by a glory of cherubim of Umbrian type, sending down the Dove of the Holy Ghost to the Virgin and Christ, both of whom kneel on a rainbow spanning a golden heaven lighted by a sun in relief. The Resurrection of Lazarus, in the foreground of a landscape, and S. Louis of Toulouse form the subjects of one side, whilst on the other are SS. Cosmo and Damian and a third saint together, and S. Benedict with a chained devil. It is more hasty than the Virgin of the Quaratesi, and more strongly impressed with the defects of the Umbrian and Gubbian schools.¹

Of the same period, no doubt, is a Virgin supporting the Infant Christ erect on a balustrade before her, with remnants of Gentile's signature, and curiously like a later Virgin by Jacopo Bellini, all but life-size and injured by restoring, in possession of Mr. Jarves.²

In 1419, Pope Martin V. entered Rome, on his way from Constance. He found the capital (1421) in ruins; its churches crumbling, its houses depopulated. After he had settled some of the more important quarrels that raged in Italy, and was able to afford leisure for less important duties, he patched up the roof and floor of S. Giovanni Laterano, and casting about for some one to adorn that edifice, he chose Gentile, whom he might have had occasion to admire at Florence or at Orvieto.

Gentile had indeed been called to the latter place from Florence in 1425,³ and finished a Virgin and Child on the wall to the left of the cathedral portal. Its mutilated remnants show how conscientiously he applied to wall painting the practice usual to him in panels. The group is pleasing in its Umbrian nature; the Virgin's head is of a regular oval, the features kindly, the mouth pouting, the action graceful, the hands slim and refined. We see the qualities of Simone Martini, with increased perfection in technical execution and draperies reminiscent of those in Taddeo Bartoli; we note the finish and flatness, the copious ornament, of a miniature, and an adventitious splendour derived from a modern crown in silver relief on the Virgin's head, and original gilt embroidery on the hems.⁴

³ DELLA VALLE, Stor. del Duomo di Orvieto, ubi sup., p. 123. The record referring to his wall painting in the Duomo is dated Dec. 9, 1425, and in it the artist is called, as Angelico was later: "egregium magister magistrorum." See also FACIO, ubi sup., pp. 44-5.

⁴ The ground of this mutilated piece is newly tinged; the blue mantle of the Virgin is repainted, and its green lining pointed with gold.

It is not possible at present to determine when Gentile da Fabriano came to Rome.¹ It is certain, however, that he had done something for Martin V. before the Pope's death in 1431. He painted the pontiff's likeness with portraits of ten attendant cardinals on one panel.² In S. Maria Nuova, now S. Francesca Romana, he designed a Virgin and Child between SS. Benedict and Joseph,³ and, in S. Giovanni Laterano, he began a series of subjects from the legend of S. John the Baptist. On the accession of Eugenius IV. he continued the work,⁴ and his own decease prevented the completion of the Prophets in monochrome above the incidents of the Precursor.⁵ Here, however, as at Venice, the masterpieces of Gentile have all perished. But one of them, that of S. Francesca Romana, still existed in the sixteenth century; and Vasari relates that Michael Angelo used to say of its author: "Aveva la mano simile al nome";⁶ whilst a disciple of a different school, Van der Weyden, having had occasion to see the frescoes in S. Giovanni Laterano, declared Gentile to have been the greatest man in Italy.⁷ We know what Michael Angelo thought of Flemish art. He considered it to lack grandeur, selection, proportion, and symmetry. He objected to the numerous episodes which filled the distances of pictures; he deprecated the use of landscapes in which the eye should be solely flattered by huts, green fields, trees, rivers, and bridges.⁸ Van der Weyden, who was the true representative of an art so despised, thus appears to have been favourably struck by a form of pictorial attainment in which Michael Angelo, his antagonist in every sense, also found something to prize. We may read this puzzle by assuming that the great Florentine was in a vein of sarcasm and pleasantry when Vasari overheard the pun on Gentile's name. Van der Weyden visited the peninsula, spent days, no doubt, in seeing the creations of the best men of the time, and declared himself most pleased with those of one who held a subordinate rank in the annals of his country. The reason of this is obvious; he discovered in Gentile qualities akin to his own; great minuteness, careful fusion of tone, absence of shadow, and bright contrasts of colour.

It is probable that Gentile at some period of his life dwelt at Perugia, where parts of a Virgin and Child between two angels are preserved in S. Domenico ; a mere relic, so damaged are the remains.¹

In Città di Castello, for which, if Vasari was correctly informed Gentile finished more than one of his productions, those assigned to him in the Spedale are of doubtful origin.² A Martyrdom, and scenes from the Legend of S. Victorinus, once in the cathedral of S. Severino, have perished.³

In Fabriano, the only remnant entitled to consideration is a Coronation of the Virgin between six angels playing instruments, of old in the Casa Bufera, now in Casa Morichi, in which much of the master's manner may yet be traced. It was in former times the front of a standard, on the obverse of which a S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, of the same size and form, was depicted. This obverse is also in Casa Morichi, but it bears the inscription : "ANO DNI 1452 . DIE 25 DE MARTIO." Related as to style with the Coronation, though of ruder aspect, it may be of a later date and by some pupil.

Gentile, it is said, died at Rome, and was buried at S. Francesca Romana, in Campo Vaccino.⁴

The pieces not alluded to in the text are not numerous :—

Pisa. Pia Casa della Misericordia.—A small and pretty Virgin, seated on a cushion, with her arms crossed on her bosom adoring the Infant Christ outstretched on its back on her lap, and grasping her dress (blue and repainted). The flesh tints are now opaque. [Now in Museo, No. 26.]

Pisa. Museo.—A Coronation of the Virgin by another hand, and not unlike a Neri di Bicci.

⁴ FACIO, ubi sup., pp. 44–5. We need hardly point out the error of the Com. of the last edition of VASARI, who infer from Facio's text that Roger van der Weyden met Gentile at Rome. FACIO merely says, referring to the wall paintings of S. Giovanni Laterano : "Auctore requisito cum multa laude cumulatam ceteris Italicis pictoribus anteposuisse." Van der Weyden clearly asked for the painter's name only, and we believe Gentile to have been dead some years at that time. See antea, note to p. 96. [Gentile died in 1428. Cf. ANSELMi, in Nuova Rivista Misena (Arcevia, 1888), vol. i., fasc. i.]

Berlin Museum.—No. 1130. Throned Virgin and Child, S. Catherine and Nicholas at the sides, the patroness in prayer in front, inscribed on a frame of the period: "GENTILIS DE FABRIANO PINXIT," gold ground, small red seraphs play on the trees. The colour of this work is altered by time and oil varnishes.¹

Berlin Gallery.—Six subjects in one frame (No. 1058) "School of Gentile," in the style of Antonio da Murano.

Munich Gallery.—No. 551. Cabinets. An Assumption falsely catalogued [1866] under Gentile's name. (See antea, "Naddus Ceccharelli," vol. ii.).

Paris. Mr. O. Münder.—A small panel, originally at Milan, representing the Virgin and the Infant erect on her knee, with a kneeling patron supposed to be Lionel d'Este. This is a graceful (partially retouched) picture, with little figures in a landscape distance, and quite in Gentile's character.²

Bari. S. Agostino.—Here is a Crucifix, of which Vasari speaks,³ not seen by the authors, but described by Schulz.⁴

London. Lord Taunton.—A panel in tempera, representing a naval episode (a king in his galley, and a convoy of ships, with a friar in a grotto, and four persons with a dog on the land to the right), bears the name of Gentile da Fabriano. But the manner is that of Fra Giovanni Angelico, the drawing, action, types, drapery being like those of his school. A heavy varnish dims the surface and leaves a doubt as to the authorship by the Fra, or by Gozzoli, or perhaps by Pesellino.

Liverpool Institution.—No. 13. A saint on a throne between four others. This picture is Umbrian, and shows the influence of the Sienese Taddeo di Bartolo, but is by one bred in the school of Gentile da Fabriano, and besides (as we have reason to judge from a recent visit) is injured by time and old restoring.

Corsham Court. Methuen Gallery.—Adoration of the Magi. (WAAGEN, Treasures, Supp., p. 397.) [Not by Gentile.]

Paris. Hôtel Cluny.—A panel in this collection, assigned to Gentile and dated 1408, is by Lorenzo Monaco. See antea, vol. i.⁵

A follower, some say the son, of Gentile, belongs to this period. He Ginesio as being very close to Gentile in style, doubtless the work of a clever follower of the master. By another follower are a Virgin adoring the Child (panel) in the Museo Piersanti at Matelica, and a triptych in the Museo Civico at Fabriano. Another work betraying Gentile's influence is a triptych by a certain "magister Petrus" in the Municipio of Recanati (see PERKINS, as above).]

calls himself "Franciscus Gentilis"; and we are acquainted with three panels on which this name is inscribed. One is in the Museum of the Vatican,¹ another in Fermo;² a third belongs to Mr. Barker in London.³ They are the wretched efforts of an artist who was formed not so much on the models of Gentile, as on those of Antonio da Fabriano, Giovanni Boccati of Camerino, and Lorenzo of Sanseverino. The Umbrian style, in a worse form than that which they evolved, is mingled in Franciscus with a method of stippling akin to that of Crivelli. A closer but equally defective imitator of Gentile is Lellus of Velletri, whose Madonna in S. Agostino of Perugia is a cento of the technical methods apparent in the Virgin at Orvieto, and the least praiseworthy characteristics of Taddeo and Domenico di Bartolo.⁴

Antonio di Agostino di Ser Giovanni da Fabriano was a less contemptible, but still feeble, assistant of Gentile da Fabriano. It is to him, indeed, that the Marchese Ricci assigns the Coronation of the Virgin and S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, in the Casa Morichi,⁵ adding that, according to tradition, Antonio had tried there how well he could imitate his master. He may be seen in his native ugliness in a S. Jerome of the Fornari Collection at Fabriano, in which, like Giovanni Boccati, he exaggerates the defect of unwrought extremities visible in Piero della Francesca, and he paints in a system of mixed tempera of a raw dull tone very different from that of Gentile.⁶ His nude is fairly proportioned, but is also dry and withered; and his drapery sins commonly by angularity. The frescoes in the old refectory of S. Domenico at Fabriano may be assigned to him,⁷ and there are other authentic subjects by him

² In the house of the advocate Dominici. Subject,—the Salutation, with the infants on the dresses of the figures; the Saviour already in benediction. This is a picture devoid of all feeling; colour stippled as in Crivelli; draperies broken and angular, inscribed: "FRANCISCUS GENTILIS DE FABRIANO" (panel).

³ Panel portrait, mistaken by Ricci for that of Gentile, commingling the Umbrian and new Perugian manner with the style of Lorenzo di S. Severino as exhibited in the picture of the National Gallery and in Crivelli. The person represented is youthful, but lean and of an angular outline; at a balcony, long hair falls out of a red cap; background green, inscribed on the parapet: "FRANCISCUS GENTILIS DE FABRIANO PINSIT." Character as above. This is now in the collection of Mr. W. A. Leatham, of Miserden Park, Cirencester.

⁴ The Virgin and Child enthroned (two angels in front) between SS. John the Baptist and Augustine, Agata and Liberatore, signed on a twined scroll: "LELLUS DE VELLETRI PINSIT" [now in the Pinacoteca at Perugia, No. 68].

⁷ See antea, vol. ii. The place is now a granary; the subject filling the whole wall, a Crucifixion, and many saints kneeling on each hand. In a niche on one side in the Palazzo Piersanti at Matellica,¹ in the parish church of La Genga,² and even perhaps in S. Croce, near Sassoferrato.³

Antonio's contemporary Onofrio is said to have done the fragments of frescoes illustrating the life of S. Benedict in one of the cloisters of S. Michele in Bosco at Bologna.⁴ These differ in no respect from the rude ones of the third-rates of the fifteenth century in Umbria and the Marches.

The older craftsmen of S. Severino are of more interest to the historian. They were the neighbours of Ottaviano Nelli and Gentile da Fabriano; and one of them, by name Lorenzo, is the author of works which form an intermediate link between those of the two painters just mentioned. The earliest notice of Lorenzo is to be found in a triptych, of which the principal subject is the Marriage of S. Catherine, a piece so injured as to possess no value. It belongs to the Cistercians of S. Severino, and is remarkable for the following inscription: "NELLI MEI ANI XXVI IO LORENZO FE . . . QUISTO LAURRO." The date: "AÑO DOMINI MCCCC" beneath a Pietà on the outer side, settles the period of Lorenzo's birth.⁵ He was an illiterate youth of twenty-six at S. Severino in 1400.

is S. Lucy, on the other S. Catherine, all in a feigned frame with fair ornaments in it; the colour is injured. On the frame one reads: "1480, DIE 25 FEBRUARIJ."

² This place is about five miles from Fabriano. The principal picture is a Virgin and Child surrounded by angels on the high altar. The Eternal, above, has sent down the Dove of the Holy Ghost. SS. Clement and John the Baptist attend at the sides. The Infant is round backed, a defect noticeable in the works of the painters of Camerino. The dry and not well-proportioned forms recall Gentile and the Siense. On a scroll: "ANTONIUS DE FABIÃO PINXIT." Two standards by the same hand are also preserved here. The first represents a Virgin and Child with the Eternal above, signed: "ANTONIUS. . ." with SS. Clement and John the Baptist on the obverse and four brethren kneeling below; in the second, the Virgin, Child, and patron, with a Crucifixion between two saints on the obverse, all but ruined. [Of. F. MASON PERKINS, Rassegna d'Arte, April 1906.]

Frescoes in the crypt of the Cistercians at S. Severino, representing scenes from the legend of S. Andrew, are supposed by RICCI (ibid., p. 187) to be Lorenzo's, but

Sixteen years later, and in company of his brother Jacopo, Lorenzo decorated the whole of the oratory of S. Giovanni Battista at Urbino with incidents from the life of the Precursor, a Crucifix, and other episodes, which do not fail to create an impression when taken in combination with the arrangement of the chapel and its groined ceiling. The Crucifixion fills the side against which the altar stands. It is crowded with ill-distributed groups after the Sienese fashion. The nudes are so lean that the human frame seems reduced to a mere carcase; the angels, women, soldiers are in violent contortions, mouthing, shrieking, and shouting. Everything is exaggerated. The horses of the escort are caricatures. Amongst the incidents of the Baptist's life, however, one or more reveal an embryo of happy thought; females now and then exhibit a feminine nature in their movements, albeit affected; and some portraits, those of two men in black dresses and caps in the interview with Herod, are fairly and even smoothly coloured. But better still, on the wall to the left of the entrance, a Virgin, of slender shape, sits on a cushion, and raises with a delicate hand the veil which covers the Child, slumbering on her lap—a graceful idea, spoiled in part by the ugly type of the Infant, but in the spirit of the Gubbians. The Virgin's oblong head, and thin pinched features, her waving hair, and gold-embroidered veil recall at once those in panels which tradition assigns to Angioletto, and brings to mind Gentile da Fabriano; whilst the soft and brightly harmonised colour, the minute and precise contours, and laboriously finished details surpass those of Ottaviano Nelli.¹

from what remains of them, they appear to have no exact resemblance to those of Urbino. [Mr. Berenson and Mr. Perkins accept these as by Lorenzo.] Ricci further mentions lost frescoes by our artist in S. M. della Pieve at S. Severino (ibid., p. 198). [Some of these frescoes have come to light, and, according to Mr. Perkins, are genuine works of the master.]

¹ On the border beneath the Crucifixion, one still reads: "ANNO DOMINI MCCCCXVI DE XVIII JULII LAURENTIUS DE SANTO SEVERINO ET JACOBUS FRATER EJUS HOC OPUS FECERUNT." The figures in the Crucifixion are of life-size. The wall to the right as you enter, is divided into a double course, in the highest of which are the Vision of the Angel to Zacharias; the Salutation; the Birth of S. John; Zacharias Writing the Name; the Circumcision, and a scene in which Zacharias takes the hand of the Virgin in the presence of the kneeling Anna. This last piece is not without feeling, but the Virgin's head is restored. Some grace may be conceded to the figures in the Salutation, and the dresses are in the style of Gentile da Fabriano. The infant Precursor in the Circumcision is deformed and without any neck. In the lower course, S. John meeting Herod on horseback, and reproaching him, is a much injured fresco, where the feeble form of the Baptist is contrasted with better ones of the bystanders, some of which, as stated in the text, are portraits less ugly in type than the more fanciful faces of others. These portrait figures too are softly and truthfully coloured. Next we name the Baptism, which is marked by very poor forms of nude. An Eternal looking down is a caricature, and a curious fancy is shown in leaves of trees shaped like conchs with heads of cherubs issuing from them. In the Sermon of S. John there is again an approach to the style of Gentile da Fabriano. The subjects on the wall pierced by the door are in part gone, in part concealed by a gallery. On the side to the left most of the incidents are much injured by restoring, and others are entirely repainted.

Lorenzo and Jacopo¹ are fair Umbrian workmen, following the custom of their country, and heedless of modern improvements, untaught in the essential laws of pure art, but not entirely devoid of feeling. What their immediate influence may have been at Urbino it is difficult to say. The grace, of which they were not entirely deprived, may have been appreciated by Giovanni Santi, but we seek in vain for the impression they may have made upon him.²

A continuation of this imperfect development of pictorial qualities in Umbria may be found in the works of a second Lorenzo, also of S. Severino, who discloses a change produced by the lapse of years, first of all in the expression of form, next in the style of drawing, the character, the drapery, and above all, the technical method of tempera. This artist is the author of three inscribed pictures, two of which bear his name and the dates 1481, 1483; and the third is certified by the name only.³ The first of these is in the sacristy of a church at Pausola, near Macerata;⁴ the second, a fresco, in the collegiate church of Sarnano;⁵ the third, a panel, originally in S. Lucia at Fabriano, is in the National Gallery.⁶ They are all handled on the system of Crivelli, whose productions, indeed, fill most of the cities in this part of the peninsula, and, in spite of their shortcomings, they embody some of the religious senti-

¹ We know no more of Jacopo than is here stated. In the sacristy of the oratory are two standards, in one of which the Sermon of S. John is almost all repainted, but which still betrays a style like that of the frescoes, whilst in the other is the Crucified Saviour, in the same state, suggesting similar remarks.

³ [Other dated works have now come to light.]

ment of Alunno. In other examples of the manner of Lorenzo "the Second," as the signature on the "Marriage" at the National Gallery authorises us to call him, we find Alunno not only imitated, but caricatured, and this is the case in a Virgin and Child at S. Agostino of S. Severino,¹ a Conception in the Brotherhood of S. Francesco at Matellica,² a Madonna and holy attendants in the church of S. Francesco,³ and in two couples of saints at S. Teresa of the same place.⁴ The worst thing of this kind is a grotesque Meeting of Anna and Joachim in the Duomo at Nocera.⁵ This list of third-rates may be considered unnecessarily complete if we add to it a Madonna of the most repulsive aspect now in the sacristy of the Duomo at Recanati, by Lodovico de Urbanis of S. Severino,⁶ and a

⁵ Meeting of Anna and Joachim. Above, the Eternal, the Virgin and two angels. In the frame are half-lengths of saints. [Not by Lorenzo.]

There are records proving that Lorenzo of S. Severino painted an altarpiece at Monte Milone in 1496. The picture, according to Ricci, represented S. Antony of Padua, the Virgin and Child, and angels. It was signed: "LAURET SEVÆI A. S.," and was dated as above (RICCI, Mem., ubi sup., vol. i., p. 202). A note in the same author refers to a damaged Virgin between two saints in episcopals in S. Francesco delle Scale in Ancona signed with the fragmentary words: "... ENZO SEVERIN FECI . . . M. . . . 81." Records also exist which show that Lorenzo painted a "Justice" in the town hall of S. Severino in 1478, arms at the Mercato gate in 1481, and a figure of the Beato Jacopo della Marca in 1482 (RICCI, Mem., vol. ii., p. 130). [Mr. Berenson and Mr. Perkins both ascribe to Lorenzo the large polyptych in the church of Serra Petrana, near San Severino. MR. PERKINS attributes to the master a fresco of the Virgin, Child, and Angels in the chapel of the present Hospital at Matellica, a work hitherto given to Niccolò da Foligno (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, April 1906). Mr. Berenson further ascribes to Lorenzo a panel of SS. Paul and Nicholas, No. 5 of the Gallery of Caen; an altarpiece of 1491 at Calderola; a triptych in S. Pietro at Fermo (1481); a Madonna in Lady Horner's collection at Mills Park (Frome); a Nativity (No. 79) in the Museum of Moulins; a panel of S. Antony of Padua (1496) at Pallenza; a Madonna in Prince Colonna's Collection at Rome; and two panels (Case S, No. XIV.-XV.) in the Christian Museum of the Vatican. A fine altarpiece by Lorenzo is in the Holden Collection at Cleveland, U.S.A. (see MARY BERENSON, Rassegna d'Arte, January 1907). Another altarpiece is in the Corsini Gallery at Rome (No. 709) (cf. B. BERENSON, Central Italian Painters, 1909).]

Virgin, Child, and attendant martyrs in the church of the Zoccolanti of S. Ginesio, by Stephano di S. Ginesio.¹

Still following the eastern slope of the Apennine to the southward, we come upon Camerino, which gave birth to Giovanni Boccati,² and to Girolamo di Giovanni; two men of more worth perhaps than those of S. Severino. Camerino offered but a slight field for exertion; and Boccati did not long remain in his native place, but we judge from certain authentic examples of his skill, dating from the middle of the century, that he may be the author of an enthroned Virgin with angels holding flowers, and a S. Bernardino preaching from a pulpit; both in the monastery of S. Francesco at Camerino.³ His petition to be admitted to the freedom of Perugia in 1445 is extant,⁴ but his success seems to have been only partial. A citizen of the town had ordered a Madonna of him in 1446, which was purchased for the Brotherhood of the disciplinati of S. Domenico,⁵ and is still there. It is a warm tempera, with tones of body and polish like enamel, in which the Virgin and Child are enthroned, between two playing angels within a screened receptacle of stone, round which seraphs stand. S. Dominic and S. Francis each present two kneeling members of the Brotherhood; and they are accompanied by SS. Ambrose and Jerome, Gregory and Augustine. A garland of roses is above the Virgin's head; the Infant allows His hand to be licked by an eager dog which He holds by a leash; and in the distance at the sides, angels are placed in a decoration of vases and festoons, in rear of which trees and flowers show their leaves and blossoms. In a between the Virgin and Angel Annunciate. In the pilasters, two angels and four half-length saints. In the predellas, the Martyrdom of S. Sebastian and two other incidents, with four prophets in the intermediate pilasters. This hideous cross between the San Severini, Alunno, and Crivelli is signed: "OPUS LUDOVICI DE URBANIS DE SÂTO SEVERINO." RICCI gives copious notices of this painter, who was consul at S. Severino in 1488 and 1493, and of whom there is a record that he was in litigation with a brother painter in 1466 (Mem., ubi sup., vol. i., p. 221). RICCI also describes an altarpiece of 1463 by the same hand in S. M. delle Grazie at S. Severino (ibid., vol. i., p. 222).

⁴ RICCI publishes it in full (Mem., ubi sup., vol. i., pp. 199-200), giving us Boccati's name, which is Giovanni Pier Matteo Antonio Annutii Boccati.

predella are scenes from the Passion.¹ The long-necked, slender-waisted figure of Mary, with its small hands, all contoured with hair lines at sharp angles,—the angels are Umbrian in character, and prove the education of Boccati to have been derived from the models of Gubbio and Fabriano, and to have embodied many Sieneese habits. They also recall another kind of art, that of Bartolommeo di Tommaso and Alunno, the representatives of the school of Foligno which, by the industry of the latter, assumed an independent position towards the close of the fifteenth century, and took the place of the older ones.

This school was remarkable for its absorption of peculiarities obtained from Benozzo Gozzoli, who thus, though more humbly, shares with Piero della Francesca the honour of introducing the Florentine element into Umbria. But Giovanni Boccati did not merely receive this Florentine bias at second-hand from Benozzo. He also shared some of the errors of the master of Borgo S. Sepolcro; and in the altarpiece of S. Domenico his Infant Christ wears an aged look, and presents hard, wooden forms like those of Francesca.² Yet Boccati is but a second-rate in whom the varied influences of Siena, Umbria, and Florence do not yield anything like perfection. The grace of the Umbrians verges in him upon vulgar exaggeration; the singularity of the Sieneese in costume becomes almost grotesque in his person; the accurate drawing of the Florentines is unknown to him, and he has not an inkling of the science of perspective. Yet, he had a moderately successful career at Perugia, in the Public Gallery of which he has, we think, left at least two Madonnas attended by angels;³

² Note his short frizzled hair and protruding belly, the thin-lipped open mouth, showing the teeth; the grotesque short-waisted dress of the angels and their long thin necks, and, generally, the wrinkled faces. The drapery too is remarkable for straight and broken lines of excessive frequency.

The second of these [Sala VI., No. 24] is a Virgin giving the breast to the Infant, with angels offering flowers, others in front seated and playing. Much ornament is lavished on the dresses. [Beside these there is in the Perugian Gallery (Sala VI., No. 21) a Madonna of Mercy and a Pietà (1479), a ruined fresco.]

whilst some of his panels have found their way to Orvieto¹ and to Rome.²

In Girolamo di Giovanni of Camerino, who has been generally taken for the son of Giovanni Boccati, we trace other tendencies; and the solitary specimen which bears his name, at S. M. del Pozzo in Monte S. Martino, near Fermo, bears the impress of Boccati, of Matteo da Gualdo, and of Vivarini. Moschini found him registered in the guild at Padua under the date of 1450;³ but Girolamo clung to the traditions of his country, and displays only so much of Paduan character as may be conceded to the Vivarini, a Venetian family the pictures of which are by no means scarce on the seaboard of the Marches, and which competed in these regions with the long-lived and numerous one of the Crivelli.

The altarpiece at Monte S. Martino is signed. It was completed in 1473, and represents the Madonna, the Child, and four angels, between SS. Thomas and Cyprian. The defects which disfigure Giovanni Boccati and Matteo of Gualdo clearly exist in Girolamo, whose Virgin has a round soft head resting on a slender neck. The Child lacks all comeliness. A Crucified Saviour, mourned by his mother and the Evangelist, ornament of the central pinnacle, is bony and aged, though fairly proportioned, but the method of the Vivarini is apparent in the low, flat, and somewhat dry tempera, in the outlines, and in the general mode of rendering form and folds of drapery.⁴

² Rome, belonging to Monsignor Badia, S. Paul the Hermit, and S. Christopher, two oblong panels of high enamel surface colour. They are assigned to Piero della Francesca, but are, probably, by Giovanni Boccati—would, indeed, be his best, if authentically shown to be his. [No longer to be traced. Giovanni's masterpiece is the great polyptych of the Madonna, Child, and Saints, of the year 1468, in the church of S. Eustachio at Belforte in the Marches (see O. SCALVANTI, in Rassegna d'Arte for February 1904, and F. MASON PERKINS, in same review, for April 1906). Other works by the master are a Madonna in the Collection of Mr. Berenson at Settignano (see FELICEANGELI, op. cit.); a Madonna and Angels (No. 411) in the Chiaramonte-Bordonaro Collection at Palermo (Berenson); Two Angels in the Le Roy Collection at Paris (Berenson); a Madonna and Angels (No. 257) in the Gallery at Ajaccio, Corsica; a Madonna and Angels and a S. Sebastian of the year 1466 in the church of S. Maria del Seppio at Pioraco, near Camerino (Feliceangeli). Signor Feliceangeli and Mr. Perkins both ascribe to Boccati two very characteristic panels, each of them representing the Madonna and Child with Angels, in the ex-Nevin Collection at Rome. Mr. Berenson, finally, gives to the master a fresco of the Madonna Enthroned in the church of S. Maria Nuova at Gubbio (on entrance wall).]

⁴ In medallions on the spandrels of the central panel are the Virgin and Angel Annunciate. S. Thomas holds the girdle, and reads. Beneath the Virgin are the words: "JERONIMUS JOHANNIS DE CAMERINO DEPINXIT MCCCCLXXIII." On the side pinnacles are an Archangel Michael weighing the souls, a characteristic figure like

More of the Paduan stamp would be admitted in Girolamo, if we could certainly assign to him a S. Jerome Penitent, belonging to the Cavaliere Vinci at Fermo, a careful figure, hastily laid in with a plenteous touch of pigment of a reddish flesh tint, reminiscent of Matteo da Siena and of Bono Ferrarese, a Mantegnesque pupil of Pisanello.¹

We do not pretend to guess at the connection between Boccati and Girolamo; but the latter continued the art of Giovanni; and that art, if not in itself attractive, is still interesting as we follow it from Camerino through the Marches towards Ascoli, and see it mingling with that of Padua and Venice. The reader's attention might still be arrested by fragments in the sacristy of S. Agostino at Monte S. Martino,² and by a church standard, with subjects on both sides, in the crypt of the church of Sarnano;³ but the course of the narrative leads us onwards upon the spiral route described at the outset of these notices.

We thus reach Gualdo Tadino on the Mediterranean side of the Apennine, and find there Matteo, who is a partner in Giovanni Boccati's one by the Vivarini, and S. Martin sharing his cloak, with SS. Peter and Paul in medallions in the points. The Virgin's mantle is injured, likewise the neck of S. Thomas. [See F. MASON PERKINS, in Rassegna d'Arte, for April 1906.]

Mr. PERKINS formerly ascribed to Girolamo the Annunciation at Camerino and the polyptych at San Pellegrino and the Crucifixion at Gualdo, but appears to have come to the conclusion that the latter works are by an unknown master not to be confounded with Girolamo (see Rassegna d'Arte (Milano), August 1907).]

² Here is a pinnacle with the Crucified Saviour between the Virgin and Evangelist in the same style as the altarpiece already described.

modes of thought and execution ; but who, at the same time, tends more faithfully to maintain the Umbrian style which was to culminate in Perugino. That he was a feeble artist notwithstanding, modernising, though perhaps hardly surpassing, the Lorenzos of S. Severino, may not be denied ; but he naturally inclined towards the neighbouring draughtsmen of Foligno. There are no authentic panels by him in the town in which he was born,¹ though one, dated 1462, is said to have existed there. His manner is apparent in a S. Anna teaching the Virgin to read,² a Virgin and Saints, an Annunciation in S. Francesco,³ and a Madonna in the Duomo, of Gualdo ;⁴ but a genuine fresco will be found in a solitary chapel on the hills outside Gubbio, S. M. della Circa, near Sigillo, on the inner walls of which a Virgin and Child with a dog in His arms, and a Virgin of Mercy, are depicted ; and on a pilaster near the latter are syllables of his name.⁵

A light reddish water-colour, on a ground of green, shadowed consequently in verde, and stippled up in lights, forms the flesh tone of the first of these Virgins, whose square oblong face seems cast in the mould of the Sanseverini, whilst the usual affectation of grace, involved draperies, tenuous outlines, profuse pattern ornament, and positive tints prove the painter's Umbrian nature. In the second Virgin, the frame rivals in length and slenderness those of Giovanni Boccati, whilst the angels, who loop the cloak, might be confounded with those of the Fulginese, Bartolommeo di Tommaso, or Alunno. Pleasing heads, and pretty coifs comparatively set off a few of the females beneath the mantle, and distantly resemble those of Piero della Francesca in the Virgin of Mercy at Arezzo. We are struck in both men by a common Umbrian origin and a diligent hand, however wide we may find the distance between them as regards merit. But Matteo's pictorial career offers a further similarity with that of Giovanni Boccati in so far as we may trace his pencil south of Gualdo, as we have traced it here north of that place, in a chapel called S. Maria

² [According to Mr. Perkins, this is not a work of Matteo, but a characteristic creation of Antonio da Fabriano.]

³ These are all in the choir and of very little importance. [Now in Pinacoteca.]

⁵ "MA . . . EU. PIN . . . SU. . . . MD. . . ." probably "Matteus pinxit sub anno," &c.

On the same wall is a Conception, the most defective of all these paintings, the Infant a caricature of that which Bartolommeo di Tommaso of Foligno repeated.

in Campis, near Foligno, in which the decorations are by two or three hands, affected by the vicinity of Benozzo Gozzoli at Montefaleo. If there, however, some obscurity and doubt may exist as to the part taken by Matteo, his signature authenticates a fresco in S. Caterina, or, as it is more commonly called, SS. Antonio e Jacopo, of Assisi,¹ a chapel the greater part of which was covered with frescoes by Benozzo's assistant, Pietro Antonio.

The whole wall facing the entrance simulates an inter-columniated space, in the centre of which the Virgin is enthroned, and accompanied by angels. Two of the heavenly messengers sit in front playing instruments. S. James and S. Antony stand at the sides, each gravely escorted by an angel holding a candlestick. Above a frieze of festoons pinned with cherubs' heads, the Virgin and Angel Annunciate face each other, parted by a window; and a dog, emblematic perhaps of fidelity, is near the former.

A striking relation between this and old Gubbian art is evident; and the S. Antony is but an ugly adaptation of that of Guido Palmerucci; but the paltry masks and defective shapes, clothed in straight or broken drapery, imitate the humble works of Giovanni Boccati, whilst the Annunciation distantly reminds one of that of Piero della Francesca in the Gallery of Perugia. The brickly flesh colour, bounded by wiry lines, is singularly unattractive; and the date of 1468 preceding the artist's signature, on a card wafered to one of the pillars, tells when and by whom this poor creation was carried out.² Nor is this all that Matteo da Gualdo did to adorn this chapel. The angels in the panel spaces, below the roof which protects the façade, are his, as well as the fragments of a Saviour in Glory above, and SS. James and Antony by the portal.³ A Virgin and Child in the sacristy of S. Francesco at Perugia; a S. Jerome and a S. Paul, belonging to it in the Gallery of that city, are the only additional pieces that can be given to Matteo.⁴

³ These paintings are all much damaged, and the colour, as far as one can see, is dark and positive in tone. The figures are mere mummies.

⁴ On the step of the Virgin's throne one reads: "HOC OPUS FECIT FIERI LUCAS ALBERTUS DOMI FRANCISCI F AIA MICHALINE." The gold ground of the centre and of the side panels in the Academy has been repainted yellow. These two pieces are now united in the Pinacoteca of Perugia. Nos. 91, 92, 93. [These panels are ascribed by MRS. BERENSON (Rassegna d'Arte, April 1907) to Giovanni Francesco da Rimini, an interesting provincial painter discovered by Dr. Corrado Ricci, who found his signature on a Madonna of 1459 in the church of S. Domenico at Bologna. DR. RICCI also ascribes to the same painter a Madonna and Angels of 1461, in the possession of Signor Cantoni of Milan (now No. 2118 in National Gallery), and a Baptism in the Coll. Blumenshtil at Rome, as well as a panel representing Monks fed by Angels, No. 17 of the Gallery of Pesaro (see Rassegna d'Arte for September

We have seen how nearly related he was to Bartolommeo di Tommaso of Foligno. This was a man of Umbro-Sienese education, who flourished in the earlier part of the fifteenth century, interesting less for his merit than for a clue which he affords for ascertaining the source of Alunno's style.

"Messer Rinaldo di Corrado Trinci, ultimo Signor di Foligno, creato priore di questa colligata l'anno 1430 fece dipingere la presente tavola colla sua immagine posta a piè della Sedia di M. V. da Bartolommeo di Tommaso pittore della stessa Città."

This modern inscription is on the frame of a picture in S. Salvatore di Foligno, representing the Virgin and Child in a wide throne surrounded by little angels, and adored by a half-length miniature of the last of the Trinci. S. John the Baptist and another saint are at the sides; and two smaller canonised personages of the two sexes are in two pinnacles removed from their original place.¹ We accept the tenor of this statement as a copy of the genuine one formerly on the frame; and we conceive that this otherwise unknown Umbrian is a man of no great renown, whose instincts taught him to follow the widespread lessons afforded by his earlier countrymen and such Sienese as were affected by the models of Taddeo Bartoli and Domenico di Bartolo. In the full face and arched brows of a short-waisted but long, stiff Virgin, whose arm and hand are filed to a reedy thinness, we notice the origin of the Umbrian softness remarkable at a later period in Alunno, the longing for grace of Boccati and Matteo of Gualdo, and their ill-chosen features and drapery. The angels, of the same class, are yet nearer to those of Alunno, whilst the awkwardness of the Infant, the square forms, wrinkled flesh, and small features of the saints equally prove the tenacity with which the old 1902, May 1903, and July 1907). Don Guido Cagnola has ascribed three panels to the same master, a second Madonna belonging to Signor Cantini, a Virgin and Child once in the Doetsch Coll. (Rassegna d'Arte, August 1905, and March 1908), and a Madonna, No. 408, in the Museum at Karlsruhe (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, October 1908). Mr. BERENSON has increased the list by several pictures:—A Crucifixion in the possession of Marchese Strozzi of Florence a Pietà, with Donors, No. 18, in the Kestner Museum at Hanover; a Madonna and Child, No. 11, at Le Mans (France); a Virgin, Child, and Angels in the Walker Gallery at Liverpool; a panel of S. Nicholas saving the Poor Man's Daughters, No. 1659, Louvre; a tondo of the Holy Spirit in the Coll. Sir F. Cook at Richmond (see Rassegna d'Arte, as above). He adds to the above a Nativity, No. 255, Bologna Gallery; a Madonna (doubtful) belonging to M. Dollfus of Paris; a panel representing a Pilgrimage to Campostella, Case Q, No. IV., in the Christian Museum of the Vatican; a fresco of the Madonna, Child, and Angels in the Municipio of Spoleto. According to Mr. Berenson, Giovanni Francesco may have been a pupil of Girolamo di Giovanni. In any case, he was certainly influenced by Bonfigli.]

We may add to the list a tavola, in the Perugia Gallery, representing the Virgin and Child, and Baptist, which may, possibly, be due to Matteo, and two scenes from the life of S. Francis, No. 565, cabinets in the Gallery of Munich, on gold ground, assigned to Antonio Pollaiuolo.

Sieneſe types were preſerved in the ſmaller cities of this part of Italy. The dim grey tones, reſulting from time and neglect, preclude criticism, but the whole piece is marked enough to ſerve as a teſt of the authorſhip in others; and we are thus enabled to aſcribe to Bartolommeo the Flight into Egypt, on the front of S. Salvatore, near the portal, a mutilated Virgin, Child, and Saints in S. Domenico,¹ and a rude freſco illuſtrating an incident in the life of S. Barbara in S. Caterina of Foligno.²

In the meanwhile, Benozzo Gozzoli had ſettled at Montefalco, and his dexterity ſoon roused the ſpirit and excited the rivalry of men following his profeſſion in Umbria. In 1452, a chapel was built by a pious gentleman of Foligno, at a ſhort diſtance on the road to Spoleto, and it afterwards bore the name of S. M. in Campis.³ Its walls were covered with freſcoes, of which large portions remain; an Annunciation, with two ſaints beneath it; Peter reſcued from the waves, with a kneeling patron by its right-hand corner; and a large Crucifixion, with attendant groups, on the face behind the altar.⁴ They are hardly of reſpectable talent; poſſibly by Matteo da Gualdo, and Pietro Antonio, aſſiſted perhaps by Alunno himſelf. The name of Pietro Antonio is ſuggeſted becauſe he is a native of Foligno, becauſe we know that he ſtudied under Benozzo; and we ſee the imitation of this prolific Florentine in the ſubjects above enumerated. There is no doubt that the Annunciation is a counterpart of Gozzoli's at S. Fortunato, tinted in his uſual reddiſh water-colour, outlined in his wiry faſhion, and copiouſly ſtipped; whiſt the ſaints, eſpecially the more Umbrian ones below, have the ſlenderneſs and length, with leſs of the defects of thoſe by Bartolommeo di Tommaſo. The Reſcue of S. Peter is taken from that of Giotto in the moſaic of Rome, including the winds blowing at the upper corners, and the fiſherman angling at the ſide. We can underſtand ſuch an imitation being derived from one who ſhould, like Benozzo, have juſt left the capital. But the Crucifixion alſo is taken from that in S.

Francesco at Montefalco, though the attendant figures are drawn in the weedy and feeble forms, and with the grimace of those by Boccati, Matteo, and even Alunno.¹

It is not rare to find this compound style in the proportions just noticed at Foligno. It is apparent in an imperfect fresco of the Annunciation, outside the Monastery del Popolo, near the Ancona Gate,² in remnants of a Virgin, Child, and Saints above the door of the Convent of S. Anna,³ inside of which Pietro Antonio left a S. Francis receiving the Stigmata. The type, originally fine in Angelico, shorn of some beauty by Benozzo, is still further debased by subsequent transmission; and this is as true of the foregoing examples as it is of similar ones to which the name of Pietro Antonio is attached; such as the Virgin and Child amongst saints above the portal of the monastery of S. Lucia, dated 1471;⁴ the same subject in the same position in the monastery of S. Francesco at Foligno, dated 1499;⁵ and the scenes from the life of S. James in SS. Antonio e Jacopo at Assisi.⁶

The latter, no doubt contemporary with those of Matteo da Gualdo (1468), are less devoid of power than later ones, but they prove, as indeed

⁴ A modern inscription, but copied on the lines of an older, runs as follows: "OPUS PETRUS ANTONIUS MESASTRIS DE FULGINEI PINSIT. MCCCCLXXI." The Virgin and Child are reminiscent of those of Benozzo. The attendant saints are SS. Lucy and Clara. The vaulting of the arch of the lunette is full of ornament, interspersed with heads of monks and figures. The nimbus are finely engraved like those of Angelico.

[The S. Ansano is, according to Mr. Berenson, an early work of Fiorenzo.]

all the frescoes of Pietro Antonio prove, that he was an Umbrian on whose stock the Florentine character was engrafted by the teaching of Gozzoli; for he not only took the conceptions and the types of the latter; he used a thin-bodied water-colour, within engraved and continuous contours; he conscientiously and carefully employed materials familiar to the followers of Angelico, and courageously cropped the excessive luxuriance of Umbrian ornament; but he exaggerated also the rigidity observable in Benozzo and, as was but too natural for one of his inferior talents, introduced no life into wooden figures, which were but mechanical and imperfect copies of conventional forms. Pietro Antonio lived to the close of the fifteenth century, and perhaps longer; and his industry, not confined to the circuit of Foligno or Assisi, took him, as we believe, to Narni, Trevi, and to other cities of this part of Italy.¹

Pier Antonio, however, was surpassed in ability by his contemporary and fellow-townsmen Niccolò of Foligno, whose earliest attempt discloses a certain ripeness of power in 1458. Six years before this, S. Maria in Campis had been decorated in the manner previously described; and we should think that Alunno was engaged there, because the influence of Benozzo, which had clearly extended to the painters of that chapel, is equally evident in the composition and spirit of Niccolò at a later time.²

Benozzo had inherited in some measure the mystic tenderness and softness, the kindly religious feeling of Angelico. When he appeared in the neighbourhood of Foligno, he found an art there in which expression of sweet melancholy, purity, and resignation was the principal object

A Virgin and Child between SS. Francis and Jerome, attributed to Spagna, but doubtless by Pier Antonio, fills the lunette of the portal at S. Girolamo of Narni. In the same style, above one of the altars in S. Martino of Trevi, is a much damaged fresco representing the Virgin and Child, SS. Francis and another friar, and six angels; further, on another altar, the Charity of S. Martin, a much injured fresco slightly reminiscent of Tiberio d'Assisi.

In the same manner one sees at S. Girolamo, near Spello, above the door, a S. Francis receiving the Stigmata.

[No less than thirteen detached frescoes by Mezzastris are in the Civic Museum of Foligno (see BERENSON, Central Italian Painters, p. 203). A fine example of the master is a Madonna and Saints in the chapel of the "Maesta Bella," near Foligno. Other frescoes by Mezzastris are in the church of S. Maria infra Portas in Foligno (Berenon and Perkins), and Mr. PERKINS ascribes to him a large panel of S. Roch interceding for the people of Foligno, in the church of S. Giacomo (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907)—this last a rare example of panel painting on his part. The only other known panel by the painter is an Annunciation, No. 52, in the Museum of Caen (Berenon).]

aimed at. Between this Umbrian feature and the sentiment of Fra Giovanni there was so natural an affinity that their combination might have been foretold.

Alunno embodied, and gave a more rational form to the manifestation of modest composure and maternal affection in the Virgin, or of veneration and sympathy in angels. In exceptional cases he imparted energy and life to saints; he tried to assimilate some of the qualities hitherto denied to his countrymen, in foreshortening the human body; he drew minutely and carefully. His Umbrian frame was thus changed and improved by contact with Benozzo; but this Florentine was not calculated to raise the standard of taste in any sense; his trite conceptions suggested nothing grandiose, his vulgarity prepared nothing refined, his imitative fibre was plastic to receive, not strong to convey. Alunno, therefore, did not excel any more than his predecessors in balance of composition, in correctness of drawing, or in flexibility of flesh. His figures, on the contrary, are often rigid, wooden, and vicious in form; his faces are frequently repulsive; they abound in coarseness and grimace. A marked feature in him is the brown tinge of his colour, verde or reddish in shadow, ruddy in light; Sieneese in fact in appearance, as it is in the method by which its peculiar stamp is attained; but withal in keeping as regards the general harmony.

Tradition assigns to Bartolommeo di Tommaso the title of Alunno's first teacher, and a comparison of the two men confirms the common belief. Educated in a local atelier, imbibing as an alternative something of Benozzo, Niccolò is an Umbro-Florentine, and the true representative of the art of Foligno. Without attributing to him the exaggerated importance which he is made to bear, history may admit that he was one of those who prepared the way for others of more note. His types, impressed by Vannucci with a new elegance, were of influence in the rise of the Perugian school, which received its finish from Raphael.

Alunno's first altarpiece¹ at Deruta has been deprived of its sides and predella, but the Virgin, attended by SS. Francis and Bernardino, has already the character common to the complex of the master's works. The whole piece, when perfect, was no doubt an improvement on previous ones at Foligno, and we may concede to the principal group a fair amount of composure and affectionate feeling, a feeling kindly and maternal rather than refined to religious mysticism. Its date (1458) tells us the time when Alunno lived at or laboured for Deruta, and completed not merely this for the church of S. Francesco, but the more rudely handled subjects of a standard in the Brotherhood of S. Antonio Abate.¹

At Assisi he did much and variously—the whole front of S. Maria degli Angeli, says Vasari,² besides panels and flags. A mutilated Crucifixion on canvas on the high altar of S. Crispino,³ a Virgin of Mercy, S. Rufinus, and scenes from his legend in the brotherhood of the same name, are weak or injured specimens of his industry.⁴ A banner, called the banner of the plague, in which the patrons of Assisi pray to the Virgin who, in obedience to their entreaty, implores the Saviour's intercession, once in S. Francesco, now in the Ramboux Collection at Cologne, poorly illustrates Alunno's manner, and shows how Benozzo's forms of subject become extended;⁵ but the best thing at Assisi is the Madonna in the Duomo, the centre of which, reduced to a circular shape,⁶ and let into a modern panelling, contains the Virgin, Child, and angels reminiscent of similar ones by Gozzoli, whilst the saints in the sides, and the three little incidents of the predella demonstrate how it might chance that a well-posed figure of regular features should be found by the side of others less worthy of praise.⁷

⁴ This standard is in a bad state. SS. Francis and Chiara, under the mantle, introduce a number of the brethren. Two angels support a crown above the Virgin's head. All the heads except that of S. Chiara are retouched. On the opposite side of the standard, S. Rufinus enthroned between SS. Vittorio and Louis, both in episcopals. Two incidents from the legend of S. R. on the lower part. This side is all but obliterated. [Now in Pinacoteca.]

⁵ No. 202 of that collection.

⁶ [This altarpiece is now recomposed in its original shape, but has suffered much from bad varnish.]

S. Pietro Damasio standing writing occupies a niche in one of the sides to the right of S. Cassiano holding an inkhorn and scroll and dictating. In the pinnacle, a Virgin and three seraphs.

The S. Pietro a fine figure of regular type and naturally posed, S. Cassiano

As if it were the fate of Alunno's altarpiece to be dismembered, one of 1465 hangs in separate¹ portions at the Brera of Milan; a Madonna with saints, the sides and pinnacles of which are but partially catalogued, yet seem as if they might easily have been put together again. Rigidity and grimace, sharp positive colour, render this piece peculiarly unattractive.² A more genuine, and happier combination of grace and nature justly claim more indulgence for the canvas at S. Maria Nuova of Perugia. It was ordered for the Brotherhood of the S. Annunziata in 1466, and is now framed on an altar,³ presenting to the spectator an angel turning with an air of veneration towards a modest and composed Virgin; whilst the Eternal in the usual glory sends down the Dove of the Holy Ghost; and SS. Philip and Juliana recommend the kneeling members of the Brotherhood.⁴ Alunno never drew a more graceful form than that of Gabriel with his crisp wavy hair bound in a crimson cincture; he seldom more completely shows how the Umbrian type could be improved by the adaptation of that peculiar sprightliness which Benozzo introduced under Angelico's influence. The very border of seraphs and festoons, which parts the upper from the lower groups, is on the model of Gozzoli.⁵

The Vatican Museum now shelters the altarpiece of Montelpare dated weaker, but still not without feeling. In the other side are S. Lawrence and a bishop, with the Angel Annunciate between two seraphs in the pinnacle; the two saints injured and the colour scaled. Predella.—1. The body of S. Rufinus on a car drawn by oxen, accompanied by clergy, soldiers, and people. 2. The Martyrdom of S. R. 3. The Recovery of his body. As for the Pietà and angels in lament spoken of by VASARI, vol. v., p. 278, it is said that such a picture on canvas existed, but was probably sold in past times. Nothing is known of a panel by Alunno in S. Francesco. [Conte Umberto Gnoli claims to have found the Pietà mentioned by VASARI, in the Collection of Herr Eugen von Miller zu Aichholtz, at Vienna, by whom it was ascribed to Bramantino (cf. Emporium, April 1908).]

³ [Now in the Pinacoteca, Sala IX., No. 10.]

⁵ [To this earlier period of Niccolò's career, Mr. Perkins ascribes a fine altarpiece of the Virgin and Child, with Angels and a kneeling Donor, between SS. Francis and Sebastian, in the collection of Mr. E. W. Forbes (Fogg Museum), at Cambridge, U.S.A. This is one of the most pleasing of Niccolò's works, and foreshadows in the figures of the Virgin and Child the central panel of the Gualdo polyptych; in the S. Francis, the similar figure of that Saint in the altarpiece at San Severino. The provenance of Mr. Forbes' picture is unknown. (Cf. F. MASON PERKINS in Rassegna d'Arte, May 1906).]

in the year 1466,¹ with its numerous pinnacles, pilasters, and double predella; and a less complicated one with the Crucifixion for its centre, the original place of which is not ascertainable,² both to be classed amongst the inferior productions of Alunno. The Colonna Gallery in the same capital owns a Madonna del Soccorso by the same hand,³ and the Monte di Pietà a Virgin, Child, and Saints;⁴ all of these much like a vast series, monumental in shape, finished in 1468 for the Chiesa del Castello at S. Severino.⁵

Alunno was now modifying to a certain extent the earlier impress of Benozzo; and beginning to infuse new elements into his great composite pictures.⁶ Of these he completed one in 1471 for the church at Gualdo, where we already find some of the grimace of Crivelli; one at Nocera (1483), at Aquila (1486) [?], at S. Niccolò of Foligno (1492), and La Bastia (1499).⁷ The majority of these may be catalogued together with others of less authenticity; but that of S. Niccolò deserves more than a passing notice. It is one of those collections of panels within an architectural frame, of which we possess so many by Sienese, Umbrian, and Venetian artists. Its chief subject is a Nativity, in which the Virgin's tender action somewhat compensates for defect of form, in which S. Joseph is drawn in classic attitude, but with repulsive face. The Infant on the ground before his mother is a stuffed doll; and a crowded landscape recalls the Venetian school, and even Palmezzano. Amongst the

² In the side panels of this piece are SS. John the Baptist and three other saints, In the central pinnacle a Resurrection, in those at the side a Prophet in a medallion, surrounded by three seraphs in rounds.

⁴ Centre, the Virgin and Child (life-size). At the sides in niches are SS. Francis, John the Baptist, Jerome, and ? Chiara. Medallions six in number, in the spandrls, are filled each with a cherub's head. This piece is on canvas, partly scaled and partly restored. [Now in Corsini Gallery, No. 708 ?.]

⁵ Centre. The Virgin, Child, and Angels, between SS. James, Severino, Francis, and youthful Hubert (profile). Pinnacles, centre — the Saviour and seraphs, Daniel, Jeremiah, and the Virgin and Angel Annunciate. Predella (eight feet long), — centre: Christ in a circular glory embossed with cherubs in relief, between Twelve Apostles in relief in niches. The dress of the vulgar S. James is repainted. The cope of S. Severino is in part renewed. The same may be said of the mantle and tunic of the Virgin, and of the veil on the Infant. S. Francis is the best figure of the series, but the altarpiece as a whole is of an inferior quality, even for Alunno. On the border, above the predella, are the words: "NICOLAUS FULGINAS PINXIT, MCCCCLVIII."

⁶ [As MR. PERKINS has pointed out (Rassegna d'Arte, June 1907) Niccolò did not escape the influence of the Vivarini, an influence potent in the Marches and north-eastern Umbria. The influence of Crivelli is also visible in his later works (Berenson).]

saints in a triple course above and at the sides of the Nativity, some are almost caricatures; more are vulgar, grim, mouthing or affected; but the Resurrection of Christ in the gable is one of Alunno's most successful efforts. The movement of the Redeemer, as he steps out of the tomb, reminds one of Benozzo's creations, and at the same time of the Mantegnesque in Crivelli; and this not only as regards character and drawing, but as regards mould, which remains, at the same time, Umbrian and almost a counterpart of that usual in Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. The Saviour's naked body is dry in bone and muscle, the head regular. The guard sleeping by the tomb is boldly foreshortened in imitation of the Mantegnesques, after the fashion adopted by Giovanni Santi at Cagli; nor would it be presumptuous to suppose that Niccolò had had occasion, ere he carried out this work, to analyse Signorelli's fresco in the Duomo of Orvieto. Yet whilst he thus attempts to adapt his style to the bolder one of a far greater master, his better proportioned figures are still feeble. The predella, which was kept in France when the chief portion of the altarpiece was restored to its original place after the peace of 1815, is marked by similar features to those above enumerated; whilst its colour is dull and brown in shadow.¹

The following is an additional catalogue of Alunno's extant works:—

Gualdo. Tadino Duomo.—The Virgin, attended by angels, holds the Infant erect on her knee, and receives from one of the messengers of heaven a basket of cherries. A vertical split damages the panel, which is capped by a Crucifixion, between Mary and John Evangelist. The contortion of the Virgin's face as she embraces the body of Christ is worthy of Crivelli. A star at the pinnacle point contains the Saviour in benediction. A double course of full and half-length saints occupies the sides, SS. Paul, Peter (his yellow dress in part new), Francis (grimacing as in Crivelli), Bernardino (full-length part new, part scaled); Sebastian, Diego, Louis, Michael (half-lengths). The side pinnacles are filled with half-lengths of SS. Christopher, Clara, Stephen and another. On the base of the Virgin's throne are the words: "NICOLAUS FULGINAS PINXIT MCCCCLXXI." At each side of a receptacle for the wafers of the host in the predella are angels with festoons of flowers, and eight saints in niches;—others in the pillars parting the niches (which are double), six figures in the pilasters of the altarpiece, and an angel on each of the plinths. The S. Paul is an instance of Alunno's occasional success in the production of a good form, erect, stepping out, broad and easy in drapery, natural and flexible. The colour is powerful and harmonious.

A trivial realism marks a monk, with goggles, in the predella. The whole is on gold ground.

Arcevia. Spedale.—RICCI notices here an altarpiece of 1481. (Mem., vol. i., p. 201). According to GAYE, Kunstblatt 1837, No. 85, the Virgin and Child are enthroned between SS. Francis and Sebastian; on the obverse is the Annunciation; and the date is 1482. Besides the name and the year, a scroll in the hands of the Infant Christ is said to read thus: "PER LI DULGI PREGI DELLA MIA DILETTA MATRE E DEL MARTIRO SEBASTIANO ET DEL DIVOTO FRANCESCO IO BENEDICO QUESTI MIEI CONFRATI 1482."¹

Nocera. Duomo Sacristy.—The Nativity, the Virgin, on her knees, adoring the Infant Saviour, angels, under a dais; between SS. Lawrence, Rainaldus, Felician and Francis, above which are SS. Sebastian, John the Baptist, Paul and Catherine. A Coronation of the Virgin and four half-length Doctors of the Church are in the five gables. Six half saints are in each of two high pilasters capped by an open hand carved in wood, with a hole at the wrist for relics. A series of recesses parts the body of the piece from the predella, in which there are twelve half-lengths of Apostles. The figure of S. Felician is one of the exceptionally good ones. On the border of the chief course is the inscription: "HOC OPUS NICOLAI FULGINATIS MCCCCLXXXIII."

Aquila. Convent of S. Chiara.—A fine Alunno. Christ crucified is bewailed by four angels; a monk grasps the foot of the Cross, the Virgin fainting to the left, the Evangelist grieving to the right. The Redeemer is drawn with a fair show of anatomy. At the sides are:—1. Christ on the Mount. 2. Carrying his Cross. 3. Rising from the Tomb; with a fourth scene from the Passion. The flesh tints in the Crucifixion are a little injured. On the border is the signature: "NICOLAI FULGINATIS MCCCCLXXXVI."²

Another picture of the same period in the same convent is the Virgin and Child between SS. Paul, Francis, Chiara, and another female saint in a double course; the Crucifixion forming a central gable. (The notes of this work are mislaid by the authors, and the painter cannot be named with precision as Alunno.) [?]

Serra Petrona.—RICCI mentions a Madonna in S. Francesco of this place³ dated 1491 (Mem., vol. i., p. 201).

Foligno. S. Niccolò.—A Coronation of the Virgin by Alunno is in the Cappella S. Antonio, belonging to the Ruspoli of Camerino. Beneath the principal group, S. George overcoming the Dragon; SS. Bernardino in ecstasy, and Antony looking up. In the predella are medallions of the Ecce Homo, Virgin, and S. John Evangelist. On the plinths of the pilasters two shields are supported by two angels each. The distant figures have a strength and firmness which might remind one of Signorelli, the movements of some horsemen being powerful and good. The rest is in Alunno's less happy manner.

Foligno. S. Bartolommeo (fuor di).—A Martyrdom of S. Bartholomew by faying. In this convent church is also a poor Alunno damaged by repainting.

La Bastia.—In the church of this place which lies between Assisi and Perugia, is an enthroned Virgin and Child, surrounded by angels. Various fruits and a vase of cherries are on the foreground. SS. Sebastian and Michael Archangel are in attendance. The lunettes contain the Eternal and seraphs, the Virgin and Angel Annunciate. In the predella, Christ, half in the sepulchre, is embraced by the Virgin, whilst His hand is kissed by S. John Evangelist. Two angels in lamentation are to the left, one grimacing to the left, holds a light. David, Zachariah, Micah (with goggles), a saint, Isaiah, and Daniel are divided on each side of the Pietà. The enthroned Virgin's attitude is kindly and pleasing. The Angel and Virgin Annunciate are amongst the best by Alunno, with something reminiscent of Giovanni Santi. Much colour has scaled away, and the predella is injured. The general tone of what remains is warm in lights, cold in shadows. On the middle border is the inscription: "HOPUS NICOLAI FULGINATIS 1499," and on the right plinth one reads in a cartouche: "QUESTA CONA LA FATTA FARE LA PATERNETÈ DE DON BENINGNIO DE SER MARINO DE SPIELLO PIUANO DE SCHO ANGILO DE LA BASTIA F L'ANIMA SUA ET F SUA DEVOTIONE." A similar cartouche on the opposite plinth is illegible.

Bologna Gallery.—Standard. On one face is the Annunciation with the Eternal above, amongst angels, conceived in the spirit of that by Signorelli at Volterra, or of Santi at Milan. The angel seems to run, and betrays all the defects of Alunno. On the obverse are the enthroned Madonna and Child, over whose heads the Eternal suspends a crown. This is signed: "HOPUS NICOLAI DE. . ." It has been suspected to be due to one "Deliberatore." The latter word having been formed out of the final and now abraded part of the inscription. Liberatore has probably been read in error for Foligno. At all events the character of the painting makes it obvious to be an Alunno.¹

Assisi. Ex-church of S. Lorenzo al Monte, near Rocca.—Here, in a ruined edifice, is a tabernacle, rudely painted, in the Umbrian style, but probably not by Alunno. In it is a Virgin and Child, and S. Francis with the Eternal in the vaulting, and a saint in a niche. Beneath S. Francis are small kneeling personages. The following are remnants of a signature: ". . . CHOLA PICTOR."

Louvre. Musée Napoléon III.—Ex-Campana Gallery, No. 111: a standard representing a Virgin of Mercy with the faithful under the mantle in charge of SS. Francis and Chiara. The Saviour above is much injured and repainted, also numerous little saints, all by Alunno. No. 88, Annunciation, genuine likewise. [?]

Berlin Museum.—No. 137. Virgin adoring the Infant Saviour on her knee, an Umbrian piece without the marked features of Alunno; and rather reminiscent of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. The ground is regilt.

Carlsruhe Museum.—No. 350. This, described by Dr. Gaye, who saw it at Assisi, is a standard originally in the church of S. Gregorio of that city. In its original condition, one side was filled with a S. Gregory in episcopals on a throne; a book in his left hand, his right giving a blessing. A green cloth is held back by two angels, and at the saint's feet kneel (right) the men, (left) the women, of a Brotherhood. Higher up, the Flagellation is a similar composition to that of the Alunno at Deruta. Above the pillar to which the Saviour is bound: S. P. Q. R., and near the Saviour the words:

"HOPUS NICOLAI FULGINATI 1468." On the obverse, high up, Death, with the scythe, and S. Francis in ecstasy in front of a red curtain. Below, the Crucified Saviour, S. John Evangelist, and the Virgin, and the Magdalen at the foot of the Cross. As now arranged, the S. Gregory and the Crucifixion are placed over each other, with a signature on the border, and the rest is absent. This must have been originally fine. The angels attending on S. Gregory are not without feeling; the S. Gregory himself is regular in shape, and there is no want of relief in the parts. The forms of the Christ in the Crucifixion are purely rendered, though imperfect in proportion. The head is expressive. The imitation of Benozzo is very apparent.

London. National Gallery.—No. 247. Bust of Christ ascribed to Alunno. See antea, "Matteo da Siena."

Oxford. University Gallery.—S. Francis, S. Catherine (?) called Giotto (presented by Hon. W. Fox Strangways). The character of these two foliated panels is uncertain on account of repainting, but they seem to issue from the schools of Alunno or his pupils.

St. Petersburg. Gallery of Count Stroganoff. Virgin and Child ascribed to Alunno, really by Fungai (see postea).

The career of a man of middling capacity has thus been followed in its changes. Its interest lies in the clue which it affords to the various influences felt throughout Umbria and the Marches during the latter half of the fifteenth century. Its opening years are unknown to us; its close is equally obscure. No trace of Alunno has been discovered subsequent to 1499.¹ [?]

The art which dragged on a poor existence at and about Foligno in those days was below mediocrity, and showed that Alunno was not a man of a temper to animate disciples with a vigorous life.² He was

[A fine work by Niccolò is a Crucifixion in the sacristy of the Duomo of Foligno—unknown to the authors—who seem likewise to have been unacquainted with a dated picture by the master representing the Crucified mourned by SS. Francis and Bernardino, of the year 1497, in the Pinacoteca at Terni. In the Villa Albani at Rome is a polyptych by Niccolò of the year 1475; in the Pinacoteca at Ravenna a Christ with the Cross and Angels (Berenson); in the Morelli Gallery at Bergamo (No. 6), a Head of a Saint; in the Municipio at S. Marino, two panels of Franciscan Saints (Ricci); in the Bishop's Palace at Camerino a predella representing Pentecost (Berenson). MR. BERENSON also ascribes to Niccolò a standard in the Gallery of Angoulême (No. 2); a Pietà in that of Bayeux (No. 27A); a S. Bernardino, dated 1497, at Buda-Pesth (No. 82); an Annunciation (No. 277) at Tours. Conte Umberto Gnoli further gives to the master an Assumption in the church of Alviano, and a second picture with the same subject at Lugnano (see Emporium for February 1909). Mr. Perkins gives to Niccolò four panels of Saints in the church of S. Maria in Piazza at Sarnano.]

² There were many, there are still productions of these years at Foligno and in neighbouring places. The following, for instance:—

Foligno, S. M. infra Portas. This church still contains some of the paintings of which it was of old full—a S. Jerome crowned by two angels (half-length), a kept up to a certain mark by feeling rather than by any very important acquirements or talent. A production of one who might claim to have been his son, once existed in Todi. Its predella bore the inscription: "NICOLAS FULGINEAS FECIT. LATANTIUS FILIUS DELINEAVIT AÑO MCCCCLXXXVI." ¹

This sketch of the progress of men exhibiting local peculiarities, modified by others greater and better than themselves, would be incomplete without an allusion to one Lorenzo, respecting whom Rumohr publishes a quaint record. The preservation of his name is due to the vanity of a citizen of Viterbo, Niccola della Tuccia, who having compiled a book of the annals of his native place, could not resist the temptation of inserting a passage in it relative to himself. He describes how Nardo Mazzatosta, having caused a chapel in S. M. della Verità, outside Viterbo, to be painted by Maestro Lorenzo di Pietro Paulo, that artist took him for a model in his fresco of the Presentation of the Temple, "on the 26th of April 1469." ²

The chapel of Nardo Mazzatosta is still open to the curious of our day: and on its walls they will see, in a lunette, the Procession of Mary and her parents to the Temple, with the Sposalizio in a lower course; in a second lunette, a Virgin and Angel Annunciate with Saints, and the Nativity below; in a third, the Burial and Assumption of the Virgin; finally in the ceiling the symbols of the Evangelists, Prophets, Fathers of the Church, and Confessors, the Venerable Bede amongst them.

S. Roch on a pilaster reminiscent of Pier Antonio and Alunno; a Virgin in grief with the Dead Saviour on her knees, a poor piece with something even of a follower of Ottaviano Nelli; a Redeemer on a pilaster by a follower of Alunno and in the same spirit; a Crucifixion with Angels, Virgin, and S. John Evangelist, of which the lower part is gone; and a Virgin and Child, and S. John with an inscription giving the name of the person who ordered the fresco.

Foligno, S. Giovanni Decollato. In this church are paintings of no value, to be marked only for the sake of recording their existence.

Foligno, Alla Madonna, called Fiamminga, half a mile on the road to Spello. In the apsis is a Virgin adoring the Child on her lap, between SS. Sebastian. John the Baptist, and two other saints, with angels in attendance playing instruments. The Eternal (repainted in the sixteenth century) and the town of Foligno appears above, and heads of Sibyls fill a lower feigned border. These are paintings of the time subsequent to Pier Antonio and Alunno, as are likewise a S. Francis and a Madonna on the walls which have been injured.

Foligno (near), S. Maria in Campis, feeble fresco, Virgin, Child, S. Francis (rest gone), inscribed: "FATTO FARE LI REDE DE' JOCHIMI DA SANTO RACHIO PER LORO DEVOZIONE 1507," rude work, continuation of the local school.

¹ It belonged to, and was sold by, Signor Leoni. [This painting is no longer to be traced. By Lattanzio, according to Mr. PERKINS (Rassegna d'Arte, June 1907), are two flying Angels in the convent of S. Maria degli Angeli at Assisi. The same authority mentions as a probable creation of Lattanzio a damaged altarpiece, now reduced to a round, of the Virgin, Child, and Saints, in the municipal collection at Cannara. These works were shown at the Mostra d'Arte Antica at Perugia in 1907, and at the same exhibition was to be noted a bust of an angel on canvas, with Lattanzio's name on the reverse. This last-named work, however, showed no trace of Niccolò's influence, and was quite Pinturicchio-like in spirit.]

² RUMOHR, Forschungen, vol. i., p. 202.

Nothing can be more clear than the imitation of the manner and conceptions of Piero della Francesca and Melozzo in the Presentation and Sposalizio. Lorenzo not only designs with the examples of Piero in his mind ; he endeavours also to reproduce his architecture and perspective. In some portraits his realism is not without power ; but vulgarity and affectation are striking. He is not correct as a draughtsman. His colour is cold and dull. His perspective is false, his forms rigid. These features are, however, more striking in the Nativity than in the Annunciation, which recalls Benozzo. Nor are the reminiscences of that master confined to one subject. They are produced with equal force in the ceiling, in which a head like that of the Venerable Bede, seems a caricature of the Florentine in bricky tone as well as in features.

The initials of Lorenzo, and the date 1469, confirm the annals of Niccola della Tuccia,¹ but Lorenzo was busy in other parts of S. M. della Verità, besides the chapel of Nardo Mazzatosta ; and an Annunciation, a Marriage of S. Catherine, and a Madonna giving suck to the Infant Saviour, all of them completed in 1455, betray the same rude hand, and the influence of Gozzoli.² But we need not be surprised at this ; because Lorenzo is probably the author of a series representing incidents from the lives of S. Bernardino and S. Anthony, in S. Francesco of Montefalco.³

³ The life of S. Bernardino is illustrated on one, that of S. Antony on the other, side of the chapel. In a lunette, Christ is crucified in the presence of the Virgin and Evangelists. In the ceiling are the symbols of the Four Evangelists. The lunette shows the spread of Benozzo's influence ; the other frescoes reveal the extent to which the examples of Piero della Francesca were studied even by painters who could only caricature his types and exaggerate his defects. The series under notice is inferior to that of S. M. della Verità, but the hand is apparently the same ; and on the base below a fresco of a miracle by S. Bernardino are the ciphers of the date MCCCCLXI. [These are given by MR. BERENSON to Mezzastris (cf. Central Italian Painters, p. 204).]

BONFIGLI AND FIORENZO DI LORENZO

WE believe that no satisfactory grounds have ever been given for the conspicuous position attained by Perugia as a school of art in the fifteenth century. It is natural that we should feel surprise at the greatness of Perugino when we consider how long the earlier Umbrians remained second to their brethren of Siena;¹ but it is desirable that some explanation should be given as to the causes of that greatness, and that we should know to whom it is due.

Unusual importance has been given to Alunno, who is supposed to have influenced the career of Pietro Vannucci. But the painters of Foligno, as well as those of Perugia, derived something from their connection with the Florentines; and, whilst Alunno owes much to Gozzoli, Benedetto Bonfigli received his impulse from Domenico Veneziano and Piero della Francesca.

We require no better clue for tracing the progress of Perugian art in the person of its first local celebrity, than that afforded by the series of frescoes illustrating the legends of S. Louis of Toulouse and S. Ercolano in the Hall of the Palazzo Comunale in that city. They were begun in 1454, partly finished in 1461, and still incomplete in 1496; they reflect changes superinduced by the progress of painting throughout Italy, as well as by accidental causes; and they prepare us for the perfection of Perugino. They are a combination of the Florentine and Umbrian with the Ferrarese and Paduan.

Bearing in mind that Domenico Veneziano was at Perugia in 1438; that Piero della Francesca, his pupil, left marks of his passage there; we accept without hesitation the evidence of Bonfigli's pictures, and we perceive from whence he derived the mixture of Umbrian and Florentine character which those works reveal.

Domenico Veneziano, even when staying at Perugia, was acquainted with most of the Florentine artists of the time. Bonfigli likewise shows that he was not ignorant of their fame; and when he undertook the Crucifixion and scenes from the life of S. Louis in the chapel of the "Magistrato," he challenged beforehand the opinion of Fra Filippo, Angelico, or Domenico. It was no wonder that he should know the latter, who had actually resided at Perugia; and that he should learn from him to revere the talents of two friars who were amongst the best men of the Florentine school.

When Domenico Veneziano was in the full expanse of his powers, Bonfigli was, however, comparatively a beginner. We trace him at his craft from 1453 to the end of the century. He may have been Domenico Veneziano's assistant, and have laboured in company with Piero della Francesca.

Although Bonfigli's name is not on the register of the Perugian Guild before 1461,¹ he enjoyed all the privileges of a master in 1453, having appraised a relief by Battista di Baldassare in that year.² Before that time, no doubt, his works had become known; and pictures exist in which a relationship is apparent between him and Giovanni Boccati, Matteo di Gualdo, or Benvenuto di Giovanni. The Annunciation, once in the Orfanelli, and later in the library of Signor Vincenzo Bertelli on the Piazza at Perugia, is one of these.³ Earnestness, feeling, and grace are not to be denied to the slender, high-waisted angel and Virgin; and the faces, marked by broad foreheads and small chins, are agreeable enough. The hands are filed to a pointed shape, whilst the feet remain coarse, and the draperies straight or broken at right angles. A clear rosy tone without much shadow, a good deal of gold in the brightly contrasted stuffs, are equally strong characteristics of the painter's Umbrian nature, whilst the angels who surround the Eternal in benediction in the golden sky are drawn in a spirit of affected elegance, with garlands of flowers forming quaint crests on their heads, reminding one of the neatness conspicuous in Gentile da Fabriano. In obedience perhaps to the strict terms of a written agreement, S. Luke is made to sit in the middle of the foreground, with his symbol couchant at his side. Some perspective is shown in the colonnade and terrace at the base of which the Virgin kneels; and a panelled marble screen closes the court behind the angel.

To this local work an Adoration of the Magi in S. Domenico of Perugia may be added, which has been assigned to Gentile da Fabriano on account of its essentially Gubbian features.⁴ Time and restoring have injured and dimmed the colours, but there is no mistaking the style, which is that of Bonfigli, perhaps more than usually intermingled with Sienese features like those of Taddeo or Domenico Bartoli.¹ Passavant remarks, that according to tradition this Adoration is due to the year 1460;² but this must be proved. Bonfigli had already entered into a very extensive practice at that time. He had not only accepted (1454 the commission for frescoes in the Palazzo Comunale,³ but (1459) another for a Brutus in the refectory of the Priori in the same building; and in 1461,⁴ he enjoyed the honour of seeing the first of these orders valued by Fra Filippo.⁵

The Priori did not at first contract for the whole chapel. They resolved that the wall hallowed by the altar should be decorated with a Crucifixion, in which SS. Louis and Ercolano should attend on the Virgin and Evangelist, whilst on the remaining area, forming one half of the chapel, the legend of S. Louis should be illustrated. It is not difficult to ascertain the order in which the frescoes were carried out, though some of them are seriously injured; nor is there any doubt as to the portion which Fra Filippo valued. The friar's award, which is still extant, distinctly alludes to the finished part as being on the side of the chapel looking towards the old palace of the Priori. Bonfigli may thus be supposed to have first done the Crucifixion, to which a more modern one has been since substituted. To the right of that, as you face the Crucifixion, are the Consecration of S. Louis as bishop of Toulouse, the Miracle of a Merchant at Marseilles, and a third subject now almost obliterated. After the award, and therefore subsequently to the year 1461, he promised to furnish one compartment in every six months, until the whole chapel should be ready; yet we find him leisurely proceeding in 1464,⁶ quarrelling for salary with the General Council in 1469,⁷ still taking instalments of payment in 1477, and even in his will, dated 1496, leaving a provision for the completion of that which he had not found time to bring to a close.⁸ The patience of the Perugians would be strange indeed, were it not for a passage in one of the council records of 1469, which explains their equanimity. In the course of his differences with the Priori, Bonfigli threatened to throw up his engagement, if certain conditions, upon which he insisted, were not fulfilled. Had Bonfigli been considered by his townsmen as an artist easily replaced by others, his threats might have been ridiculed ; but the Perugians really admired him ; they declared that the frescoes of the chapel were the greatest ornament to the city ; and they believed that, were they not finished with equal talent and success, an ignominious stain would be cast upon them.¹ Bonfigli's claim was therefore conceded. Nor can we be surprised even now, that such should have been the result.

Under the new agreement he painted the funeral of S. Louis, and the siege of Perugia by Totila, with the death and burial of S. Ercolano, on the wall facing the Crucifixion, and, on the remaining spaces, the Translation of the Saint to S. Pietro.

Large portions of the Consecration have scaled away ; still the Pope may be seen enthroned giving his blessing to S. Louis, a monk near the latter, and part of a cardinal by the former ; but the best preserved bit is the head of an aged friar in a peristyle to the left. It is easier, however, to judge of Bonfigli's power from the next episode—of the merchant whose money and goods had been lost in a storm at sea ; whose prayer to S. Louis being heard, he recovered the gold and silver in the entrails of a fish purchased on the market-place.² A broader style in the treatment of drapery, good proportion, a careful nude of a fisherman taking pence, reveal a study of Piero della Francesca and of the Florentine school.

The third subject, mangled as it is, preserves some interest, because S. Louis is represented in it looking down from a circular glory in a foreshortened attitude, like that of the Eternal by Uccello, or that of the angel in Francesca's Vision of Constantine at Arezzo. The arch, above which the saint appears, might even confirm Vasari's description of Bonfigli's visit to Rome.

The fresco of the Death of S. Louis is a composition of symmetrical order. The mendicant brothers surround the youthful saint, and mourn over him with decent grief, whilst males and females in lay costume stand in the aisles of the church in which the funeral ceremony is performed. The monks who bear the tapers or incense move with some nature and animation. The architecture is drawn with a perspective skill which reveals the influence of Piero della Francesca ; the figures remind one of those by Domenico Veneziano. They are inferior to these, but like them they sin by shortness of stature and some vulgarity of features or expression.³

³ The upper part to the left, the lower to the right, of this fresco are scaled off.

The incidents from the life of S. Ercolano can only be understood by a reference to local legendaries, the Bollandists and Pez's anecdotes being insufficient. These declare, indeed, that the Perugian bishop was ordered to be decapitated and flayed by Totila, and that when the body was found again after forty days, and taken in procession to a consecrated resting-place, it showed a whole skin and no signs of corruption, whereas that of a child buried with it was in a state of putrefaction. In the right-hand side of one fresco the saint lies decapitated on the ground, again about to be consigned to the grave together with the child. But on the left, several men are killing an ox, and a priest addresses Totila's lieutenant, whilst a fight is depicted in the distance. The next fresco shows the procession of clergy carrying the body, accompanied by the community; the whole much injured by the scaling of the wall. Both pieces are striking; because the first contains a view of the church of S. Ercolano and the Roman Gate as they now stand, and the second, a perspective drawing of the old palace of Perugia. Both have a fair amount of life and motion, with something of the exaggeration familiar to Matteo of Siena.

Looking at the work as a whole, we are not surprised that a man who thus modified the Umbrian style by adapting to it that of Domenico Veneziano and Piero della Francesca, should be a favourite with his countrymen. His manner is superior to that of all the Umbrians of his age except Piero. It proves his acquaintance with classic Florentine art; it places him as regards merit, as well as in respect of aim and purpose, in the ranks of those Ferrarese whose labours adorn the palace of Schifanoia. It shows his familiarity with the nudes of contemporary Paduans and Veronese. His progress, no doubt, was only gradual. But we have seen that in his earliest period he commanded the respect of craftsmen; and the growth of his experience could not but increase that feeling. We accordingly find not only that his dilatoriness at the Palazzo Comunale was borne with patience by the Perugians, but that he was entrusted with commissions irrespective of an undertaking the successful termination of which was heartily desired. His appointment as umpire to decide the value of the new front added to S. Bernardino of Perugia by the Florentine Agostino d'Antonio, was alike honourable to all engaged.¹ The numerous productions which issued from his atelier at various subsequent periods, prove that the contract at the Palazzo Comunale was not to be considered as precluding him from intermediate commissions. A banner for the Company of S. Bernardino [1459], a Virgin of Succour for the church of Coreiano (1472), a standard for the Brotherhood of S. Fiorenzo (1476), a Virgin of Mercy for the church of the Commenda di S. Croce¹ (1478), and many other pieces testify to Bonfigli's industry. Nor is it uninteresting to mark in them the gradual expansion of his powers.

The "Gonfalone" of S. Bernardino is a large canvas with a gold ground, on which Christ, attended by angels, gives His blessing to S. Bernardino, who stands before Him bearing the name.² Below, between the spectator and a view of the "Augusta Perugia,"³ are two incidents from the legend of S. Bernardino.⁴ In the large head and festooned draperies of the Christ we see Bonfigli still clinging occasionally to the peculiarities of Taddeo and Domenico Bartoli's school; and the dull colour of a spare tempera is not agreeable to the eye. The Virgin of Succour at Corciano is an imperfect specimen, deprived of its original appearance by restoring and repainting.⁵

The standard of S. Fiorenzo is better, and almost worthy of a place by the side of the frescoes in the Palace. It was commemorative like that of Corciano—allusive to the stay of a plague assigned by the indolent and superstitious to the severity of God, but attributable also to the improvidence of man. It was destined to honour the Virgin, whose intercession had been prayed for; and she was represented borne in a cloth by angels, showing the Infant Saviour erect on a basket of flowers, SS. Pellegrino and Florentius, Sebastian and Philip on the foreground, attended by kneeling dames and men, parted into two principal groups by an angel holding a long scroll. On this scroll a feeble poet has written the angel's proclamation. He cries out to a people full of iniquity to think of its sins, and remember that the Virgin is its successful intercessor; and at the close of the lines one reads: "NEL MILLE SETTANTA QUATRO CENTO SEI."⁶ The light tempera, embrowned by time, is bravely handled, and not without a judicious distribution of light and shade. Some feeling in the Virgin and grace in the angels counterbalance the defects apparent in the hard stiff nude of the Infant Christ.

These qualities may be found in four saints; in a Virgin, Child, and Angels, perhaps the centre of an altarpiece of which the foreground were the sides, in four scenes on a small scale belonging to a predella, and in two pinnacles, hanging separate in various parts of S. Domenico of Perugia.¹ One sees in the central panel the influence of Fra Filippo, and in the Angel and Virgin Annunciate of the pinnacles a gentle modesty akin to that of Alunno, who may have been at Perugia at this time.² But for the damage which it has sustained, we might place in the same class a picture in the Academy of Perugia, of the Virgin enthroned in front of a marble screen overtopped by angels, in a court in which saints attend at each side. A part of the surface on the right of the picture is abraded and leaves but a trace of the figures there, but the angels in prayer are amongst the most graceful by Bonfigli.³

The Virgin of Mercy in the church of the Commenda is a wall painting repeating a well-known and common composition.⁴ It may share attention with other pieces by the master in the sacristy of S. Francesco,⁵ in the Confraternità della Giustizia,⁶ in the Gallery,⁷ and in the Carmine of Perugia. The latter, hanging high up in the choir, seems originally to have been a church standard.⁸ The Virgin adores the Infant on her lap, and is surrounded by kneeling people—a king, a pope, and others. A mild meditateness, similar to that which finds expression in Fiorenzo di Lorenzo and Perugino, already animates the Madonna. Outside Perugia, a chapel in S. Antonio Abate of Deruta remains to be noticed, in which a Virgin of Mercy, in the usual fashion, forms the ornament of one side, and Four Evangelists are distributed in the ceiling. The style is hard to criticise with precision, because much injury has been done by time and neglect. It reminds one of that in the frescoes of

² Two figures in each side—SS. Catherine and Peter, Paul and Peter Martyr. They are well relieved by light and shade, well proportioned and not without nature in movement and regularity of form. The central panel, which is hopelessly and almost totally injured, is not usually visible to the public. The Virgin is in the middle, the angels four in number at the sides of the foreground. The pieces of predella represent the Crucifixion, which has almost disappeared, the Baptism of Christ, the Decollation of S. John, and the three youths saved from death by the intercession of S. Nicholas.

The angels have the same crests of flowers on their heads as those in Bonfigli's picture of the Annunciation in possession of Signor Bertelli.

S. M. in Campis outside Foligno. It is inferior to Bonfigli's in the Palazzo at Perugia, yet more in his character than in that of any other artist.¹

As for the Virgin holding the Dead Christ on her knees, between SS. Leonardo and Jerome, a panel of 1469, in S. Pietro of Perugia, assigned by Passavant to Bonfigli, it might have been produced by the feebler brush either of the Boccati or of Matteo da Gualdo.² It may be by Lodovico d'Angeli, a scholar of Bonfigli, whose manner approaches somewhat to that of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. An angel above the Virgin seems copied from Benozzo or Angelico; the outlines are hard, the colour leaden and vitreous; and the drawing is peculiarly defective.³ We may leave this uninteresting example for the sake of inquiring whether it be true that Bonfigli ever visited Rome.

Whilst the art of Perugia was taking, under his lead, a position which entitled it to a special recognition, two youths had been silently receiving their nurture, and laying the foundation of a lasting fame. Pinturicchio and Perugino enjoyed the advantages which accrued to them from the general progress of their craft throughout Italy. They ceased to have local, they rapidly gained an Italian, celebrity. Their field of labour became enlarged; and their distinction smothered, as it were, the humbler claims of men of whom they might at first have been but the apprentices. Pinturicchio's connection with Bonfigli, as handed down to us by Vasari, was that of an assistant and friend.⁴ As Timoteo Viti, after leaving Francia, might have placed his experience at young Raphael's disposal in the years of his upward struggle, and afterwards, by a natural change of parts, become the aid of his own pupil, so Bonfigli might have followed Pinturicchio to Rome, and helped him in the decorations of the Vatican. Vasari's curt remark, that Bonfigli's productions there were numerous, is expanded by Taia into a description of several frescoes and copious "grotesques" executed at the Stanze during the reign of Innocent VIII. (1482-92).⁵

There are, however, in our days no frescoes suggestive of Bonfigli in Rome except a Crucifixion and Apostles in the centre of the nave and

¹ This fresco is assigned by Orsini to Alunno. See Vita, &c., di Pietro Perugino, by BALDASSARE ORSINI (Perugia, 1804), note to p. 24. [Mr. Berenson mentions this as an early work of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo; Mr. Perkins gives it to a follower of Bonfigli.]

We may further notice the following works by Bonfigli:—Perugia Gallery, Nos. 108-112; Miracles of Nicholas of Bari, not very important and somewhat rude [Now No. 2, Sala VIII.]. transept of S. Gio. Laterano.¹ What we know of Perugian chronology is not against a visit to Rome by Bonfigli between 1484 and 1486. That he was disagreeably busy in litigation with his own wife, Gioliva di Menicuccio, in 1483 and 1486, is proved by records in Mariotti;² whilst documents of a later date (1489), discovered by the same author,³ show that his relations with his partner in life were curiously improved when a third party forced him to defend an action in her favour. It is probable that this troublesome lady left him a widower shortly after, for in his will, dated July 6, 1496, he bequeathed his landed property to a couple of churches, and the residue to S. Domenico.⁴ He directed that his remains should be buried in the vaults of the latter; and, no doubt, the dying wish was obeyed, although the date of that event has escaped the search even of the patient Mariotti.⁵

We may connect with the name of Bonfigli and with that of his contemporary Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, eight panels in S. Francesco of Perugia, usually assigned, though on insufficient grounds, to Vittore Pisano, illustrating the life and posthumous miracles of S. Bernardino, in the following order: ⁶—

1. The Birth of the Saint at Massa. 2. A Girl Restored to Life after falling into a well. 3. Resurrection of a Dead Person at the prayer of the Saint. 4. Rescue of the Youth taken to execution for a riot at Aquila. 5. The Saint Healing the Sick. 6. The Saint Curing a Man of a wound (apparently caused by a bull). 7, 8. Miracles of the same nature.⁷

The chief interest centres in the first four of this list. They are the finest things of the school at the period of their completion, and afford

a key to the identification of Perugian art before the close of the fifteenth century, explaining its development from the time of Bonfigli to that of Pinturicchio and Perugino. They combine naturalism with classicism in a form familiar to Bonfigli, and fashionable since Piero della Francesca shed his influence over the Umbrian country, whilst they reveal an approach to a kindred feeling sprung from the same source or altered by Paduan and Veronese character at the Schifanoia of Ferrara.

The Birth of S. Bernardino, unequally carried out in its various parts, is fair in the conception of some heads, but derives a certain quaintness from strange dresses and lean figures. It is somewhat inharmonious in the tones of a tempera resembling that of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo.¹

The Resurrection of the Girl is superior to the Birth of S. Bernardino. The well from which she has been taken is in front of a triumphal arch, ornamented in good florid classic style, and inscribed: "S. P. Q. R. DIVO . TITO . DIVI . VESPASIANI . TULLIO VESPASIANO, AUGUSTO . A. D. MCCCCLXXIII. . . ." The child sits in the centre of the space; her mother, S. Bernardino and another Franciscan kneeling opposite, attended by a tall page in the tights and chaperon of the time, and leaning on a long stick, whilst wondering spectators, prostrate or standing, balance the group on the other side. Through the arch, the eye wanders over pastures, trees, and hills, commanded by a castle. The motives which guide the attitudes and expressions are pleasantly suggested. The forms themselves are precisely and carefully made out, and charm by a freshness of colour for which Fiorenzo di Lorenzo is more remarkable than Bonfigli. In spite of occasionally broken and angular folds, the cloth falls with a neatness and simplicity that seem to foreshadow Perugino.

In the third miracle, a female, kneeling with her back to the beholder, and a boy startled by a dog, recall Fiorenzo and even Pinturicchio, whilst a man in profile near the frightened child and another standing on the right of the picture more decidedly display some of the defects of Bonfigli.² The peculiar features of Matteo da Siena or of the Ferrarese are found united with no happy result in the Rescue; whilst in the vision of the Saint appearing in heaven and healing a sick person, the general style of Bonfigli and the handling of Fiorenzo seem commingled, and a perspective of classic edifices resembles one by Piero della Francesca, or that in frescoes at the Schifanoia of Ferrara. A rude execution and hard, dry figures characterise the rest of the series.

These panels, suggesting a very different authorship from that of Pisanello, to whom they have been ascribed, introduce us to Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, who thus becomes implicitly connected with their production in the atelier of Bonfigli.¹ We therefore assume of necessity that Fiorenzo received tuition from Benedetto;² and this view is confirmed by authentic pictures exhibiting a modification of the old Umbrian and Bonfigli's style, with a partial adherence to the innovating principles on which Vannucci remodelled Perugian art. There is such an increase of gentleness and freshness, so much additional truth and symmetry and grace in his types; so marked an improvement in his drawing, in the absence of seeking observable in draperies which play quite freely round the limbs, and have the branching fold of Perugino's, that it is obvious Fiorenzo derived some advantage from his great contemporary. As a colourist in tempera, for he always remained true to the old system, his tones are gay in key, even mellow, though frequently contrasted somewhat sharply. Using the verde ground for half tints, and covering it with warm flesh lights, he gives the shadows a brown orange tone. He seems in fact to have embodied the same class of features as are found developed by Pinturicchio, and may therefore be considered as the immediate precursor of a master who, during a progressive career, received a happy influence from Raphael. Fiorenzo's works, which are rare and valuable, are undeniably of the Umbrian stamp prevailing in Alunno; but Alunno shares the peculiarities of Bonfigli in so far as both are Umbrian, Bonfigli being only more gifted and more versatile. Both placed the Perugian school on a respectable footing in the middle of the fifteenth century. Both had a share at various degrees in the cultivation of Fiorenzo's manner.³ The feeling prominent in the painter of Foligno was attractive, and Alunno certainly left an impress on the Umbrians, because there was a sympathetic connection between the ecstatic longing of his saintly figures, and the tender ones of most natives of this region; but his was not the less a defective art, ill-calculated to command exclusive sympathy, and overshadowed in many respects by the earlier and purer one of Angelico and Benozzo,—humble when compared with the deeply religious and essentially Christian creations accumulated in the age of the revival in the old sanctuary of Assisi.

If we inquire into the conduct and duration of Fiorenzo's life, we shall find few distinct facts to record. His birth, adolescence, and manhood are alike involved in obscurity. Perugino and Pinturicchio have cast him into the shade. Yet Mariotti recites the terms of a contract dated 1472, in which Fiorenzo agrees to paint for 225 ducats an Assumption of the Virgin, with SS. Peter, Paul, Benedict, and Silvester ; a Virgin and Child between SS. Jerome, Ambrose, Nicholas, and Paulinus, the Twelve Apostles, and others in a double altarpiece at S. Maria Nuova of the Silvestrines, now the Servi of Perugia.¹ It was sought for in vain by Mariotti in the convent for which it was ordered, but its principal parts seem to have found a place of safety in the Academy of Arts at Perugia. The Virgin, upon clouds, adores the Infant seated on her knee, whilst two angels look up with kindly reverence towards her. At the sides, SS. Benedict and Peter, John Evangelist and Francis stand out of a golden ground.² To these, which composed the principal face, may be added the pinnacles containing the Eternal and Four Doctors of the Church, and five longitudinal pieces in which the Angel and Virgin Annunciate, two full and two half-length saints are to be seen. If we confine our attention principally to the first and most important portion of this great work, we shall gain a just view of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. Religious composure and modesty in the attitude of the slender Virgin, resigned timidity in the gently bending head, are relieving features in a form not entirely free from heaviness, nor altogether select in details. One feels inclined to pardon the breadth of nostril, the lean throat and collar-bone, the falling shoulders, the short broad hand. The Infant is not the wooden mummy that disfigures the Madonnas of Giovanni Boccati. The shape is coarse, the type common. The action is still broken and exaggerated, but the lines are not angular ; and their curves reveal the approach of Perugino. High surface shadows, and transparent lights give relief to the vestments, whilst the verde ground crops up through the rough touches of the flesh. The angels with their falling locks unite grace with youthfulness in their neatly draped frame, and embody a class of beauty no longer surprising when one considers that the time is that of the great Vannucci. The saints are not less remarkable as affording evidence of the progress made by Perugian art, by their dignified mien, finished drawing, and careful execution. The Evangelist looking up with a foreshortened face, looks as if it were by Pinturicchio, and tells of an effort for the attainment of an expression of inspiration. A successful rendering of action is coupled with some squareness of shape in the frame, the head, the nose, and close eyebrows.

² [All critics do not agree on this point.]

² These five panels and five pinnacles are now united in the Gallery of Perugia. The remaining pieces are—full-length, S. John Baptist ; the Angel and Virgin : half-lengths (superposed) of SS. Antony and Francis ; S. Sebastian. These pieces are in Fiorenzo's manner and, doubtless, formed part of the Silvestrini altarpiece. They have lost their brightness through the effects of time and dirt.

One characteristic series of traits may be discerned in all the figures. They assume an aged look in consequence of the wrinkled aspect given to a thin casing of flesh that seems insufficiently to pad the bones. The hands are well drawn, but cramped in the Umbrian fashion. The system of colouring is throughout the same, though slightly altered by age and by repeated varnishing.¹

Fiorenzo di Lorenzo was one of the Decemvirs of Perugia when the commission for this altarpiece was entrusted to him.² That he was then of mature age and experience is proved as much by the office to which he was elected, as by the success which he had achieved. He had, however, not only furnished the picture of S. Maria Nuova, but many pieces in addition, of which some are preserved in the Perugian Academy; eight half-lengths of saints in the medallions of a predella;³ a meagre S. Sebastian, in which the root of Fiorenzo's style may be distinctly traced to the school of Bonfigli;⁴ and other less valuable productions.⁵

But a more interesting relic of Fiorenzo's prime is the Eternal in a circular glory, between SS. Romanus and Roch, in S. Francesco of Deruta. Nail holes and partial scaling of the intonaco scar the surface; and the preservation of the fresco from total obliteration is probably due to the chance which led the owners of the altar to hang a modern canvas in front of the wall. The painter's name is absent; but is no doubt Fiorenzo; and the date (1475) in the border, above a view of the town of Deruta, tells the period of completion. Nothing can be more clear than the influence, even thus early, of Perugino; and the perfection attained might entitle Fiorenzo to rank immediately after Vannucci in Perugian annals. The figures are not models of artless simplicity. On

⁵ For example: Perugia Gallery, No. 107, S. Bernardino, a dry and feeble work on panel; S. Sebastian, wood, injured; Virgin and Child, in great part lost (wood); fresco from the suppressed convent of S. Giuliana of Perugia, representing the Dead Christ on the Virgin's knee between a male and a female saint (part of the Virgin's head is gone). The manner is that of Fiorenzo, but the names of Lodovico Angeli and of Bartolommeo Caporali are not to be excluded. Three saints, Margaret, Antony, and Catherine in one frame, dirty and of little importance, of Fiorenzo's school, and perhaps by one of the above-mentioned subordinates.

the contrary, an effort at arrangement in pose and action is apparent in them; there is a studied gracefulness and affectation not only in the frames but in the play of limbs and extremities; and the foreshortened head of S. Romanus, with its retreating lines, reminds one of those so frequently produced by the master of Raphael. The draperies are reminiscent of those in which Palmezzano revives the originals of Melozzo or Piero della Francesca. The cool red shadows, laid in upon the verde, are well fused with the lights, leaving still upon the eye an impression as of a somewhat raw and unpolished surface. As a wall painting, this is one of the most important that has been recovered in our day. It is not less interesting, and only less authentic, than the altarpiece in the sacristy of S. Francesco at Perugia, the sides of which, containing S. Paul and S. Peter, have been removed from their natural connection with a lunette representing the Virgin in glory amongst angels, and have been placed side by side with others by a different hand. These panels are as fine as those of the Perugian Academy; and they are signed on the hems of the tunics with the words:

The lunette which they supported is now [1866] above the two mutilated angels by Bonfigli, of which a description has been given. Its semi-circular field is covered by a half-length Virgin grasping the naked Infant Christ, in a glory of seraphs' heads, and attended by two angels. The influence of Perugino is naturally more sensible in 1487 than it was twelve years before, and is, in spite of still defective type, very clear in the pleasing group of the Madonna. The Child, improved in form and motion, is drawn on the principle observable at a later period in Pinturicchio. No single angels by Fiorenzo have more grace and feeling, or better Peruginesque draperies, than those at the Virgin's side looking up with arms crossed on their breasts.²

Fiorenzo evidently struggled hard to keep pace with the progress which was taking place in the art of his age, and this struggle is evident not merely here, but more markedly still in a fresco of the Virgin and Child attended by two angels; a lunette in the Sala del Censo at the Public Palace of Perugia. It is reminiscent of Pinturicchio, and combines a most enticing softness and beauty with his coarse touch and copious vehicle; and would alone suffice to show where he obtained his first lessons.³

³ [This is now given by some critics to Pinturicchio (cf. BERENSON, Central Italian Painters, p. 229).]

The catalogue of the Berlin Museum justly assigns to Fiorenzo di Lorenzo a Virgin and Child on gold ground, bearing the date of 1481, pleasing for the gentleness of the principal figure. Something in the cast of the draperies might suggest that the painter had been in contact with a Florentine.¹ But the value of the piece is not alone due to its being by Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. It leads us to judge with some certainty of an Adoration of the Magi in S. Maria Nuova of Perugia, which Vasari² and subsequent writers have called by the name of Perugino. It is just to the historian of Italian art, as well as to Rumohr, to add that they do not consider this altarpiece as anything else than a juvenile production of the great master.³ But it would be truer to say that the artist is an old hand than that he is a beginner. The Umbrian manner here is that of Fiorenzo improved by time and by the example of the rising Perugians, embodying more delicate sentiment than is to be found in his earlier period, and a nearer relation than before to Pinturicchio.⁴ Several peculiarities in it are those of Fiorenzo: and as such we should lay stress on the composition, which is somewhat stiff and formal; on the drawing, which searches out the forms with a certain hardness and angularity; on the faces, which are in a measure rigid and monotonous; on the shape of the hands and articulations, that bend strangely; and on draperies of which the breadth is injured by frequent and broken folds bound with unnecessary tightness to the frames and limbs; but particularly on the colour, both as regards its technical method and dull opacity. With respect to the latter, a novelty is apparent in the medium employed; but the absence of feeling for colour, the flatness due to scarce half tone or shade, the gaudiness and want of atmosphere, are familiar in Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, whilst they are foreign to Perugino.⁵ The picture represents, we have said, an Adoration of the Magi. The Virgin sits under the pent-house with the Infant on her knee, in bene-

¹ [Berlin Cat. No. 129.] Gold ground, inscribed: "MCCCCLXXXI." [It seems highly probable that Fiorenzo at one time studied in Florence. Mr. Berenson considers him to have been influenced by both Antonio Pollaiuolo and Andrea Verrocchio; Mr. Perkins, also, is particularly insistent upon the strong part played by Verrocchio's art in the foundation of Fiorenzo's style, which, according to the same critic, was not altogether uninfluenced by Pesellino as well.]

³ RUMOHR, Forschungen, vol. ii., p. 339. This piece is also assigned to Perugino by MEZZANOTTE, Life of Perugino, ubi sup., p. 15, and by PASSAVANT, Raphael, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 489. It has been transferred, since the above was written, to the Perugia Gallery.

⁴ VERMIGLIOLI cites a MS. of the eighteenth century, a chronicle of the convent of S. Maria Nuova, in which it is stated that the Adoration of the Magi was painted in 1521 for Camillo di Braccio Baglioni (Vita di Pinturicchio, ubi sup., p. 212).

diction. Her head and dress are like those of the Berlin Madonna, which we have attempted to describe. The Infant's type is similar to that in the lunette of S. Francesco of Perugia.¹ The kneeling king on the left, with his heavy face, would look more natural but for the wooden drapery bundled about his lower extremities, and S. Joseph on the right, leaning on a stick, would be more pleasing if the same fault were not striking. The king, standing next to the kneeling one, exposes a front face immovable in features and expression; whilst the third king holding a cup, and a more distant figure to the right of him, are marked by some of the mildness of air which Pinturicchio improved upon. Finally, a man to the left may be noticed as the so-called portrait of Perugino. The passion for discovering likenesses and making deductions from such discoveries, is general. There is a distant resemblance in the mask to the known one of Vannucci, but his presence in a picture of this time would not prove that he painted it any more than it would disprove the authorship of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, whose genius is more distinct and whose name is more forcibly suggested than any other.

The list of Fiorenzo's productions at Perugia may be completed by a reference to an early Madonna in the Fraternità della Giustizia,² in which the stamp of Benozzo and the grimace of Alunno are to be found in connection with some of the defects of execution common in the school.³ We might assign to him abroad a fine panel, deposited of old

³ We may add the following:—Perugia—Palazzo Comunale. Two panels with half-lengths of Saints in Prayer. Perugia—Sacristy of S. Agostino, wood, half-length of the Virgin and Child, enclosed in a circular ornament, with six cherubs' heads in it. Two heads of angels of a large size at the angles of the base are reminiscent of Mantegna. The Infant Christ is that of Fiorenzo or his school, and the colour is handled with some of the new mediums [now in Gallery, Sala XII., No. 7]. Perugia—S. Giorgio, a fresco by Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, but not of his best. Subject, the Marriage of S. Catherine, with S. Nicholas of Bari in attendance, rude and in part repainted (the background new). [Now in Gallery.] Same church.—Nativity, a repeated fresco in which the S. Joseph is all but new, with the date "A.D. MCCCLXXX." [Now in Gallery.]

Terni—S. Francesco, Cappella di S. Antonio, much injured altarpiece of the Virgin and Child between SS. Bonaventura, John Baptist, Francis, and Louis, with three saints in each pilaster, the Eternal between two angels in a lunette, and five coarsely executed scenes from the Passion in a predella. On the border one reads: "1485. DIO E VIRGINI OPUS ERECTŪ DIONISIE JOAÑIS PRŌRATE." It is difficult to judge of the authorship. The style is between Fiorenzo and Pinturicchio. [By Antoniazio (see postea).]

Ravenna—Galleria Comunale, Triptych, gold ground, Virgin and Child, between SS. Peter and Paul, the Eternal in the pinnacle between the Virgin and Angel in the Santa Trinità Museum at Madrid, a noble head of the Redeemer between SS. Peter, John the Baptist, John the Evangelist, and a female martyr.¹ But having done this, our list is all but exhausted, and we are led to inquire how it comes that one whose career may be traced for so long a period, should have left so few examples behind. We must remember that there is proof of Fiorenzo's existence in 1499, when he assisted Bartolommeo Caporali in valuing a picture by Giannicola of Perugia; and that if Mariotti, from whom this fact is taken, is further correct, our artist was companion to Tiberio d'Assisi in a similar valuation as late as 1521.² A space of more than thirty years yields absolutely nothing. Is it possible that Fiorenzo's labours in that interval should have remained concealed under another name? ³

Annunciate, inscribed: "MCCCLXXXV DIE XXVIII DI JUGNIO." The work is dry and hard, but we must remember the names of Bartolommeo Caporali and Lodovico de Angelis. [Now in Uffizi Gallery—and by Antoniazzo (see postea).]

Carlsruhe Museum, Nos. 165, 166—SS. John Baptist and Evangelist, small full-lengths on gold ground, falsely assigned to Agnolo Gaddi, but of the Perugian school and in the manner of Fiorenzo.

Liverpool Institution, No. 22—Piece of a predella, representing the Birth of the Virgin, assigned to Filippino. This piece has been noticed (antea, vol. ii.) under its old number (20), amongst the works of Filippino. A recent visit has altered our judgment. Though injured, it is painted in the style of the panels long assigned to Pisanello in S. Francesco of Perugia, and therefore recalls Fiorenzo di Lorenzo.

¹ This picture is Umbrian in character, and suggests no other name than that of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. It has something of Benozzo too.

MR. PERKINS attributes to Fiorenzo a panel (No. 228) in the Museum of Nantes (formerly ascribed to Buffalmacco) representing S. Sebastian and S. Antony of Perugian history is cumbered with the presence of one Andrea Alovigi, commonly called L'Ingegno. We have examined the records illustrative of the person so named. They are the same which Rumohr had occasion to comment, and they had already suggested to him the following well-grounded remarks:—

Vasari relates¹ that Ingegno learnt the art from Pietro Perugino, in whose atelier he competed with Raphael; that he acted as his master's journeyman in the Cambio of Perugia, where he did some fine things which are not further distinguished. It might be hard to point out figures which Vasari himself was unable to describe with precision; yet comparatively modern writers have decided that these are the Sibyls and Prophets, which are the finest of the series.² Vasari adds that Ingegno aided Perugino at Assisi, referring perhaps to the frescoes on the outer side of the chapel of S. Francis in S. M. degli Angeli. He alludes finally to the Sixtine Chapel, where he (Ingegno) also helps our artist (Perugino), and says immediately after: "The great hopes which Ingegno had given rise to were dissipated by his premature blindness. Upon this Pope Sixtus IV. gave him a pension at Assisi, which he enjoyed till the age of eighty-six."

Sixtus IV. died in 1484. Raphael first joined the school of Perugino about 1500, when the hall of the Cambio was begun. Vasari therefore commits a gross error of chronology; for Ingegno could not have lost his sight twenty years before he competed with Raphael. Mariotti and Orsini think it impossible that Ingegno should have had a share in the decoration of the Cambio; because they believed Vasari's story of his blindness. They should rather have suspected that Vasari was ill-informed on that point. There is not a word about Ingegno in Vasari's first edition, and he is only mentioned in that of 1568. It is not unlikely that in the latter a misprint should have occurred (Papa Sisto for Papa Giulio II.), for we shall see that under the pontificate of Julius, Ingegno was appointed to a place. . . . It

Padua—a work of the highest quality and great charm; a fine panel of S. Nicholas of Tolentino in the Johnson Coll. in Philadelphia (U.S.A.), in Fiorenzo's most Verrocchiesque phase; and a large fresco of S. Michael in the Municipio at Bettona (recently ruined by a barbarous restoration) (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, October 1905, August 1907, and August-September 1909).

Signor Venturi gives to Fiorenzo a panel of the Dead Christ with two legendary scenes (No. 1415) in the Louvre.

A probable work of Fiorenzo is the carefully executed panel of the Crucified between SS. Christopher and Jerome, No. 377 of the Borghese Gallery at Rome, although Morrelli gives this work to Pinturicchio's earlier years.

Both MR. BERENSON and MR. PERKINS give to Fiorenzo the beautiful Annunciation in Mrs. Gardner's Coll. at Boston (U.S.A.), perhaps one of Fiorenzo's best works (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, for August 1907).

A small panel of S. Jerome in the Desert, ascribed to Fiorenzo, is in the Morelli Gallery at Bergamo.]

Lodovico at Francesco of Assisi are assigned to Ingegno, who is supposed to have painted on the walls previously covered by Buffalmacco, the frescoes of the latter having, in 1490, gone to ruin. The same statement, according to Pungileoni, is to be found in the registers of S. Francesco of Assisi.

is at all events capable of proof that, if Andrea lost his sight at all, the event occurred later than has been stated. For the Cavalier Frondini at Assisi is possessor of a book which I have examined, in which Andreas gives receipts for certain sums paid in to the account of his brother, who was a canon of the cathedral of Assisi. He there calls himself: "Ingegno di Maestro Alivisse," or, "Allovisii, Allevisi, and Aloisi." The last receipt runs as follows: "Ingegno di Maestro Allovisi, die Mercurii, quinta Decembris 1509." Had these documents, which are all in the same hand, been written by another, the fact would have been stated; this was the legal system of the period. But it appears that the name Ingegno might not only be due to the man's talent as a painter, but to a known versatility on his part. Frondini showed me many original MS. in which our Ingegno appears as proctor (1505), justice (1507), assistant to the authorities (1510), and finally as papal cashier (1511). . . . Vasari, it is clear, confounds a pension with the salary paid to a papal cashier, which Ingegno had become in 1511. He confounds Julius II. with Sixtus IV.

Rumohr then proceeds to state that the only notice he has of an artistic work by Ingegno is that described in the following, which is an extract from a "Bolletario" in the office of the public secretary at Assisi:—

"An 1484, 29 Octobris. Magister Andreas Aloysii habuit bullectam pro armis pictis in platea et ad portas civitatis . . . flor. 5, solid 26." ¹

This item hardly proves more than that Ingegno had directions and funds for the payment of the painting of the arms on the square and gates of Assisi. But it does not even declare that he was the painter.

But we have to deal with a certain class of pictures assigned to Andrea Alovigi, and we may perceive at once that they bear the impress of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. Let us examine them.

Assisi.—Inside and above the gate of S. Giacomo, a life-size Virgin in prayer with the Infant on her knee in a glory of seraphs floating in clouds above a landscape. The Virgin and Infant are similar to those of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. A low, brown tone, altered by damp, prevails. The fresco is decidedly like one of Fiorenzo's.²

Assisi.—In a recess of the outer face of the church of S. Andrea is a Virgin holding the Infant Christ on her knee. S. Jerome and another Saint in the side of the recess. The type of the latter is fair and gentle, in general appearance like the foregoing.

Assisi. Ex-convent of Benedictine Nuns, now delle Mantellucie, via S. Agata.—In the same manner, but injured, a fresco of the Virgin and Child between SS. Francis and Jerome. In the thickness of the recess S. Bernardino and another figure, which is all but obliterated; the whole above the portal. We set aside the four sibyls in the Lower Church of Assisi, which are proved to be by Dono Doni.

Assisi. Arch of S. Antonio.—Leading from the Piazza to Moiano, a fresco, much injured, above the key of the bend, of the Virgin, Child, and S. Francis, with remains of a landscape similar to the last.

Moiano, near Assisi.—A small chapel is here in which parts of a Virgin and Child on the inner wall, a bishop, S. Francis, and seraphs in the vaulting, and other pieces on the outer face, may still be inspected. These three frescoes, from Via S. Agata, arch of S. Antonio, and Moiano, have been transferred to canvas and placed in the commune of Assisi.

We have thus a series of ill-preserved fragments revealing an approach at last to Tiberio of Assisi, and possibly the product of a local craftsman. It may be classed under the name of Ingegno for want of a better. Following the manner of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo further, however, the catalogue may be continued.

Rome. Palazzo de' Conservadori al Campidoglio.—An injured and restored Virgin (above life-size) adoring the Infant Christ on her lap, with two angels at her side. (The Virgin's dress exclusive of the gilt border, has been repainted in oil.) This fresco, of a rough, red-brown colour, reproduces Fiorenzo's types and character. VERMIGLIOLI (Vita di Pinturicchio, ubi sup., p. 73) attributes this fresco to his hero.¹ PASSAVANT assigns it (Raphael, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 501) to Ingegno.

Orvieto, Casa Gualtieri.—Fresco, sawed from the wall of the Gualtieri family chapel in the Cappella S. Brizio of the cathedral at Orvieto. S. Michael with a sword in his right, and his left on his haunch, tramples on the dragon. He stands in armour on the foreground of a landscape of rock and sea, interspersed with islets, ascribed successively to Raphael, Signorelli, and Ingegno; it is not by any of them, but probably by Eusebio.

London, National Gallery, No. 702 (from the Wallerstein Collection at Kensington).—The Virgin and Child, the latter standing on a parapet in front of its mother (half-length). This piece, under the name of Pinturicchio, is similar to the following.²

Naples Museum.—Of old numbered 84. Virgin and Child, which again is similar to the following.

Paris, Louvre. Musée Napoléon III. (ex-Campana), No. 174.—Virgin and Child, of which there is a poorer repetition in the same collection under No. 175, and yet another:

Milan. Brera, Galleria Oggioni.—Virgin and Child, slightly altered by oil varnish.

¹ [Ascribed also by MR. BERENSON to Pinturicchio (cf. Central Italian Painters, 1909).]

² [Two other panels similar in subject and type to this picture are in the Bufalini Collection at Città di Castello (given by SIGNOR RICCI to Pinturicchio (cf. Pinturicchio, (London, Heinemann) and in the Municipio at Trevi (officially ascribed to Pinturicchio). MR. PERKINS does not accept either of them as by Pinturicchio, but gives them simply to unknown followers of Fiorenzo (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907).]

Of the same size as that of the National Gallery, and repeating the same subject, we have a panel at—

Urbino—Convent of S. Chiara—on the back of which are the words: "FU COMPRA DA ISABETA DA GOBIO MATRE DI RAFAELLO SANTE DA URBINO FIORINI 25, 1488." It is a flat and feeble tempera of grey tone on gold ground superior, however, to the last mentioned. But better than all of the others, and apparently the original from which they were taken, is:

*London. Sir Anthony Stirling.*¹—Half-length of the Virgin in half of an almond-shaped glory (with eight cherub heads in the field of it, and rays engraved in the gold ground). The Virgin supports the Infant in benediction, in front and to the left of her, whereas in the other examples the Child stands to the right. In this panel of Sir Anthony Stirling's the movements are more gentle, and the character is more tender; the forms are better rendered, and the features are more expressive; the drapery is more natural and better cast, the colour is more pleasing, and the drawing more correct than in any of the foregoing. This panel seems indeed to have served as a model for all the others, which are by different hands, and of more or less value (ex. gr. after this of Sir Anthony comes that of Urbino, then that of the National Gallery, followed by those of the ex-Campana Collection, of the Naples and Brera Museums). But the Virgin of Sir Anthony Stirling is truly by Pinturicchio, to whom it is given; exhibiting, however, all the characteristics which prove that he derived his style from Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, as, for instance, reminiscences of such of the creations of the latter as: the panel lunette in the sacristy at S. Francesco of Perugia (now in Perugia Gallery), the lunette fresco in the Sala del Censo at the Palace of Perugia. It might thus appear that the Madonnas now classed together have all the stamp of Fiorenzo with features in addition reminding us of Pinturicchio.²

London. Dudley House.—Originally in the Bisenzio Collection at Rome. Virgin and Child between S. Dominic and a female saint recommending two kneeling donors. This small Madonna does not throw any light on the obscure branch of art here treated. The painter seems to have laboured after Perugino.

Carlsruhe. Museum. No. 154.—Catalogued as Ingegno. Virgin and Child attended by two angels, between SS. Benedict and Bernard, as Duke and Duchess of Urbino (?) with their respective suites kneeling at the sides of the foreground. Umbrian, of the close of the sixteenth century and not like any other so-called Ingegno (wood, oil.)

Florence. Metzger and Volkman Collections.—RUMOHR (Forsch., vol. ii., p. 328), and PASSAVANT (Raphael, vol. i., p. 503) notice a small Madonna bearing the initials: "A. A. P.," which they interpret "Andreas Aloysii pinxit."³

Paris. Louvre. No. 37.—Virgin and Child enthroned and saints, classed as Ingegno, in the mode observable in the ceiling of the chapel of the Cambio at Perugia, by Giannicola Manni. We shall revert to this.

² [A panel in the Fogg Museum (Forbes Collection) at Cambridge, U.S.A. evidently belongs to this same class (cf. F. MASON PERKINS in Rassegna d'Arte for May 1905).]

³ [Now in National Gallery.]

If it can be shown that the majority of the works above noticed are by Ingegno, it would follow that the master so-called was at the school of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, and a companion of Pinturicchio; but until better evidence shall be brought forward than the initials of a name or the records of Assisi, doubts must continue to be entertained. Yet, we may accept Ingegno as a password to qualify pictures of the same class in various parts of Europe.

A more real apparition in the history of Umbro-Perugian art than Ingegno is Lodovico Angeli, who was registered in the guild of his native place in 1481 and 1506,¹ whose performances betray a positive mediocrity yet at the same time the education of Bonfigli. Judging from a canvas bearing his signature and the date of 1489, we should add to the pieces of which he may be called the author, a panel in S. Pietro of Perugia representing the Virgin embracing the corpse of the Redeemer, attended by S. Jerome, seated at a bench with his Lion by him, and an erect figure of S. Leonardo. An angel above the principal group recalls, and seems copied from, one by Benozzo Gozzoli. The nude of Christ is wooden, lean, and defective, the drawing wiry and unsound, the tempera hard, vitreous, and of a leaden hue. On the border one reads: "ANNO DOMINI MILIESIMO CCCCLXVIII." This is one of the few things attributed without authority to Bonfigli.² The style is not his, but a poor mixture of it with that of Fiorenzo, a mixture observable in the following:

Perugia. S. Simone.—A panel dated 1487.

Perugia. Duomo.—Cloth, tempera representing Christ erect (of life-size) in benediction, between a female saint and Antony the Abbot, SS. Jerome and Francis. On the lower border is the inscription: "A. D. MCCCCLXXXVIII LODOVICUS ANGIOLI FECIT," of feeble character and poor type; the figures are cold in tone and laid in with a hard, spare vehicle. Frequent folds mark the draperies.

Perugia Gallery. No. 15.—Styled Fiorenzo. Panels with half-lengths of S. Dignamerita, Antony the Abbot, and Catherine, on gold ground, a little less defective than the foregoing, reminiscent of the Mantegnesque, possibly by Lodovico.

Berlin Museum. No. 137.—A Virgin and Child not without merit (but see antea, Alunno).

Corciano. S. Francesco.—An approach to the method of Lodovico is apparent in a very rude panel here of the Virgin and Child, between SS. Jerome and Francis, Antony, and S. Mary Magdalen attended by angels; at all events this is a cross between Bonfigli and Fiorenzo.

The narrative of the lives of the great Perugians, Vannucci, and Pinturicchio, inevitably takes the historian to Rome, where their skill exhibited its mastery during a period of full fifteen years. Before them, we have said, Piero della Francesca and Melozzo extended the influence of Umbrian art. The lustre of these brilliant names has perhaps contributed to the neglect of men whose boast might be that, as Romans, they partook of the progress made by their Perugian contemporaries.

Vasari relates, that when Filippino Lippi in 1493 gave up a chapel complete in its decoration to Cardinal Caraffa, his frescoes were valued by Lanzilago of Padua and Antonio, alias Antoniasso the Roman, the two best painters of that time in the capital.¹ Antoniasso was of a family which followed the same profession during three generations at least. The earliest of its members of which we have any notice is Antonius, the designer of an altarpiece in the sacristy of S. Antonio del Monte at Rieti, dated 1464. The Virgin is represented giving the breast to the Infant erect on her lap. On the sides (hanging in the choir) are S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, and S. Antony. An inscription at the base of the centre runs thus: "ANTONIUS DE ROMA . EPINXIT 1464." It is not rare to find pieces equally old and defective. This one is interesting not only for its authenticity, but because it shows a local Roman in the middle of the fifteenth century influenced by the example of Benozzo Gozzoli, and therefore following the track of the Umbrians.²

Twenty-five years later, Antoniasso, the son perhaps of Antonio,³ received a commission from Girolamo Gaetano, archbishop of Capua, for a Virgin and Child between SS. Stephen and Lucy, to be placed on the altar of a chapel built by his orders in 1489 in the cathedral of his see; and this is still in its original place, though spoiled by restoring and almost deprived of its inscription. The impression it creates is that of a poor Perugian work, with something reminiscent of Pinturicchio. It bears the illegible remains of the words: "ANTONATIUS ROMANUS M. FOR. P. MCCCCLXXXIX." ⁴

This picture gives a clue to the author of other Roman productions, the first of which is the Virgin and Child between SS. Paul and Peter, and the twelve of the "Rota," now in the Quirinal and originally in the audience hall of the tribunal of the Rota. It was ordered, no doubt, by Monsignor Brancadoro, president of that court, whose arms are on the Virgin's throne, and exhibits a mixture of the manner of Fiorenzo

² The Virgin is less than life-size, in a tunic of gold. Her blue mantle is all but gone. The saints on the side panels are on gold ground, abraded entirely in that of S. Antony. The tempera is light.

³ [Antonio and Antoniasso were one and the same person, as we now know.]

⁴ We should not have been able to decipher these words. But Canon Gabrielle Gianelli of Capua had them transcribed, and states that they were legible before the panel was last restored. To his authority also must be referred the facts stated respecting this altarpiece and its patron. On the Virgin's throne one still sees in the midst of arabesques the letters: S.P.Q.R. A.R.P. S.P.Q.R., showing that the Archbishop of Capua was a Roman noble. The figures are almost life-size. The picture is on the first altar to the right, in the Duomo of Capua.

and Pinturicchio, and may therefore be by Antoniasso or the next member of the family whose name occurs immediately after his.¹ The same mediocre style is apparent in a David and Solomon, an Eternal in Glory, and a Conception, ruined frescoes in the third chapel to the left in S. Pietro in Montorio at Rome, though here there is some trace of Perugino and Spagna intermingled with Pinturicchio.²

In the sacristy of S. Paolo fuori le Mura at Rome, a Virgin and Child between SS. Paul and Benedict, Peter and Justina (life-size) with injured heads, and a repainted sky, may be placed in the same class as the altarpiece of the Quirinal.

In the church belonging to the Pagnani family,³ at Castel Nuova, on the road from Rignano to Rome, there is a Christ Enthroned in benediction, assigned to Perugino, but in type recalling certain figures by Bartolommeo Caporali in Castiglione del Lago. A long inscription on this panel closes with the date 1501. In the same church a S. John the Baptist and S. John Evangelist illustrate the same artistic direction, and remind one, as do the works of Antoniasso, of the better frescoes at S. Croce in Gerusalemme in Rome.

The third Antoniasso is Marcus, the painter of a Resurrection between SS. Stephen and Lawrence, with the Eternal in a lunette between SS. Francis and Antony, a domed altarpiece in the refectory of the convent of S. Chiara at Rieti. The predella contains the Capture, the Flagellation, the Crucifixion, the Pietà, and the Entombment; and on a border one reads: "MARCUS ANTOIUS MAGRI ANTONATH ROMANUS DEPINXIT MDXI." The central Christ is ill-proportioned, the sleeping soldiers ill-arranged, by one who has seen the works of Perugino.

The Antoniassi are a local Roman family and worthy of being remembered, not because they have done much independently, but because they probably acted as assistants to the great men who visited Rome at the close of the fifteenth century. They are entitled indeed to the same degree of attention as Bartolommeo Caporali, or Melanzio who has been mentioned in these volumes in connection with poor wall paintings at Subiaco.⁴

² The figures of the Prophets are at each side of a scutcheon. The Eternal is in an almond-shaped halo.

³ The church previously belonged to the family of the Effetti.

may have been, in the beginning, a pupil of Melozzo da Forlì, but the influence of Fiorenzo seems to have been the most important one under which he formed his style. He was active from 1460 to 1508 circa. Works from his brush are numerous, and the list is constantly growing. MR. BERENSON'S list, the most complete as yet published, contains over sixty numbers (cf. Central Italian Painters, 1909, pp. 133-7). Antonissimo is now the admitted author of the frescoes of the Story of the Cross in S. Croce in Gerusalemme in Rome, as well as of other wall paintings in S. Giovanni Laterano, S. Maria sopra Minerva (Chapel of S. Catherine of Siena, &c.), S. Paolo fuori le Mura, S. Pietro in Montorio, SS. Vitò e Madesto, S. Amobono, and in the Pantheon (in this last-named church a particularly attractive Annunciation has recently come to light (cf. G. BERNARDINI, in Rassegna d'Arte, March 1909). Frescoes by him exist also in the church of S. Giovanni Evangelista at Tivoli (cf. ATTILIO ROSSI, in Arte). A beautiful picture by the master is the Annunciation on the fourth altar to the right in S. Maria sopra Minerva at Rome (formerly ascribed to Fra Angelico). One of Antonissimo's most important altarpieces is in the church of S. Francesco at Montefalco. It represents S. Catherine of Alexandria between SS. Vincent and Nicholas of Tolentino. This fine work was first given back to Antonissimo by MR. PERKINS (see Rassegna d'Arte, August, 1907) after having passed for years under the name of Spagna. MR. PERKINS has also restored to the master a very interesting Nativity (attributed to Ghirlandaio, No. 68), in the Barberini Gallery at Rome (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, May 1905) and further ascribes to the painter a Madonna in the Magherini-Graziani Collection at Città di Castello, a tabernacle in the Fogg Museum at Cambridge, U.S.A., a Madonna in Glory in the Johnson Collection at Philadelphia, and a similar picture in the possession of M. Eugen Fischhof in New York. A characteristic Madonna and Child by Antonissimo is in the Altenburg Gallery (No. 112)—the Corsini Gallery at Rome possesses three works by him—a large altarpiece of the Madonna, Child, and Saints (No. 2371) of the year 1488, a S. Sebastian (ascribed by Signor Venturi to Melozzo), and a Madonna with Saints (in Magazine). Perhaps the most important of Antonissimo's altarpieces at Rome is the so-called Madonna della Rota, in the Vatican Gallery (see antea, p. 197). MR. BERENSON gives to Antonissimo various pictures of the Madonna and Child in the Von Kaufmann Collection at Berlin; in the Biblioteca at Fermo; in the Collection of Mr. E. P. Warren at Lewes; in the Gallery at Lille (No. 992); in that of Mr. Benson at London; in that of Mr. Theodore Davis at Newport, U.S.A.; and in the Perugian Gallery (No. 19, Sala V.). Other pictures mentioned in MR. BERENSON'S list are at Brussels (Museum—Christ and Saints); Capua (Museum—Madonna and Saints, 1500); Cassel; Fondi (parish church, Madonna and two Saints); Gloucester (Sir Hubert Parry's Collection, Madonna and Saints); Lyons (Aynard Collection); Naples (S. Paolo Maggiore, Madonna and Saints); Orte (Duomo, Annunciation, 1500); New York (Metropolitan Museum). Altarpieces by Antonissimo also exist in the church of SS. Giovanni e Paolo at Rome; and at Subiaco (church of S. Francesco—Madonna, Child, and Saints—a fairly early work of 1467).]

PIETRO PERUGINO

WE are accustomed to think of Pietro Perugino as humbly connected and inured at the tenderest age to privation ; but he was, without any doubt, of a respectable family, a branch of which enjoyed the freedom of Perugia in the early part of the fifteenth century.¹ His father, Cristoforo Vannucci, lived at Città della Pieve, and we learn from the hearth register of that village that Pietro was one of several children, and that he was born in 1446.²

In those days, when small peasant proprietors clung to the shelter of feudal towers, and had no certainty of protection from the inroads of predatory neighbours, it may have been a hard task for the father of a numerous family to dispose of his sons so as to secure to them a decent and respectable future. He would naturally send his younger boys to the nearest town, and, if he had the means, apprentice them. Pietro Perugino left the paternal home before he was nine years old, and was articulated to a master at Perugia.³

This master was of no great talent, says Vasari, yet he had a feeling for his art, and a great veneration for those who distinguished themselves in it, and he always assured his pupil "that of all places in which perfect painting might be attained, none was more advantageous than Florence, where men were taught by competition to use their wits and work with industry, in order that they might rise above an intolerable mediocrity, and ascend to fame and honours." In these words the Aretine biographer probably sketches the character of Bonfigli, whom elsewhere he has described as the favourite of the Perugians before Vannucci became known; we may doubt whether he meant Fiorenzo, a man of fair repute,¹ who took good lessons from his contemporaries and was the companion rather than the teacher of Pietro.² We should be content, in this uncertainty, to reflect that Perugino received a most fortunate education, which was not to be had except in a good school; we may assume that he learnt most of the secrets of his profession at Perugia, and that then he fancied there was yet room for greater acquirements. It would not be far wrong, indeed, to suppose that he took to wandering as a journeyman, and that he thus became the associate of Piero della Francesca; for Vasari mentions at least two frescoes at Arezzo; and suggests that they were produced by Perugino when he was Piero's assistant.³ From thence he bent his steps to Florence, eager to see the masterpieces of that capital, or to become acquainted with the persons of artists whose names had already been heard in the workshops of the provinces. Bonfigli and Piero della Francesca would both have impressed his mind with the grandeur of Florentine examples, have told him the wonders of the Carmine, of Santa Croce, S. Maria Novella, and S. Marco. We know that he frequented the Carmine; and in the Brancacci Chapel he might meet all the rising men of his generation,⁴ Michael Angelo, Credi, and Leonardo, whom Santi couples with him in the lines:

² The root of the Vannucci family, compiled from the records at Città della Pieve by Marchese Giuseppe della Fargna, is given in the appendix to B. ORSINI's Vita, &c., di Pietro Perugino, 1804, pp. 236-7.

*"Due giovin par d'etate e par d'amori
Leonardo da Vinci e'l Perusino
Pier della Pieve ch'e un divin pittore."*⁵

After leaving Piero della Francesca, from whom perspective and the chemistry of painting had received so great an impulse, he would strive for admission into an atelier in which his knowledge in these branches might be improved.⁶ For chemical researches he could not find a better place than Verrocchio's shop. He would be the companion of Leonardo to whom the science of art owes its chief progress, and to whom the perfection of the innovating system of mediums at Florence is due.

¹ VASARI, vol. vi., pp. 30, 32.

³ VASARI, vol. iv., p. 23. The frescoes (which were in S. Agostino and S. Caterina) are gone.

⁴ VASARI says he studied in the Brancacci, vol. iii., p. 162.

⁵ See the Rhyme Chronicle in PUNGILEONI, Elogio Storico di Gio. Santi, p. 73.

Both might labour simultaneously to fathom the secrets of colours and of mediums, the one with the precision of a trained mathematician, the other with the feeling of a colourist.¹ Both would necessarily go deep into the technica, seeking and searching like the Van Eycks, and applying the results according to the powers with which nature had endowed them. It would thus happen that Leonardo should add to the imperfect method of Piero della Francesca the atmosphere in which it was wanting, and ascend gradually to the culminating point of his career in the production of the Mona Lisa, whilst Perugino should arrive at a height almost equally surprising in the Madonna of the Certosa;² the first attaining depth by calculation, the second yielding the same quality by an innate sense of the value of tone, and by peculiar knack of handling, both succeeding in that smoothness of tints which "caused the crowd to gather round their work and think it was a marvel."³

But the community of thought and of aim in Perugino and Leonardo would not end there. Perugino is justly celebrated for his proficiency in perspective.⁴ He might have learnt the elements of it from Pietro della Francesca, and have sought to master its intricacies under Luca Pacioli, who held the chair of mathematics at Perugia in 1478.⁵ But he would be sure to find a congenial spirit in Leonardo, who was to show the students of his academy at Milan all the secrets of perspective that were known to that age. Da Vinci and Perugino are named in one sentence by Caporali. He says they both knew the use of "two centres of vision";⁶ and it is quite as certain of Leonardo that he taught that rule, as it is of Perugino that he put it into practice. We shall see how the latter adopted Da Vinci's principles of composition; how both in different ways excelled in giving atmosphere to landscape. That they were together under Verrocchio, is only stated by Vasari;⁷ but Vasari is confirmed by the creations of the three painters; and he speaks of them in conjunction too frequently to permit a doubt as to his conviction. Nothing can be clearer or more true than that Perugino and Da Vinci gave the last polish to the Florentine art of oil painting on the lines laid down with so much labour and patience by the Peselli, the Pollaiuoli, and Verrocchio;¹ nothing more just than that Perugino should be coupled with Francesco Francia as gifted with incomparable feeling in lending softness to form.² But Vasari's statements receive additional confirmation from the pictures of Lorenzo di Credi, the favourite pupil of Verrocchio, whose altarpieces are so remarkable for the devotional grace of action, the smoothness of surface, and the cast of lined drapery which, whilst they remind us of Leonardo, recall the Umbrian qualities of Vannucci. We shall see that these Umbrian qualities were not condemned at Florence, but that, on the contrary, they exercised an influence similar to that of the Sienese in previous centuries. What these had done of old to temper the severity of their rivals in the person of Orcagna, and to contribute in forming Angelico, the Perugians did anew by means of Pietro Perugino. It may be due to him that the somewhat rugged grandeur of the Florentine school, as represented by Ghirlandaio, was chastened; and that the coarse realism of the Peselli, and of Castagno, from which neither Botticelli, the Pollaiuoli, nor Verrocchio, Piero della Francesca, nor Signorelli were entirely free, was modified. Perugino and Leonardo are both entitled in separate measures to claim the merit of having helped to form Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto.

One cannot affect to decide in what year Perugino first visited Florence; nor whether that event occurred before 1475, when he had commissions for painting in the Public Palace of Perugia;³ or after 1478, when he produced the ruined frescoes of Cerqueto.⁴ His name had become familiar at Florence in 1482;⁵ and he was allowed at that time to compete with Ghirlandaio, Botticelli, and others, in the Palazzo

³ RUMOHRE publishes the payment to Perugino for this work (Forsch., ubi sup., vol. ii., p. 338).

Pubblico. It is true that he did not carry out his commission, which was revoked in favour of Filippino.¹ But it is not possible to say where he was employed even then. If it should be asked what piece amongst those of continental galleries best illustrates his early style, one might choose the round of the Virgin and Child enthroned between saints in a landscape; a tempera panel at the Louvre.² A picture of this kind, if presented to a Florentine at the close of the fifteenth century, would undoubtedly have been admired as embodying the carefulness and finish and the devotional resignation of Umbrian types with a most attractive freshness.³ To us it represents Perugino in his ascending period, a genuine painter of Perugia still, but fortunate in having instilled a new life and beauty into the art of his countrymen. Conventional and quaint as it is to see the Virgin in rich clothing, seated on a throne partitioned off from a pleasant wilderness by parapets of stone; to watch two angels praying behind in tender adoration, and female saints in gorgeous apparel standing by in elegantly sought attitude; there is a calm sweetness about them all; they seem so innocent and gently happy; it would be pity to disturb them. Yet, this dreamy impression is created by no cloudiness of form or yearning after effect. The graceful and slender figures are drawn with a clear outline. The dresses are crisp in fold, the hems are minutely overlaid with golden borders and jewels; the veils are subtle in texture and lightly disposed. True harmonies of pure colour variegate the vestments where the bright cloth turns its bright lining to the eye, or the mantle decks the tunic. Tempera was never handled with more skill to yield by stippling a warm flesh-tone of a light fair yellow, fused with great softness into grey shadow. Still one sees something of the anxious care natural to one who has not yet settled into the resolute assertion of himself. The Child is affected and a little unmeaning, the draperies are not yet cast with breadth. The contours are too sharp, and the forms are a little lean. Perugia, however, had not as yet boasted of an artist equal to such a work as this, and if Vannucci had produced it there, it is probable that the fact would have been chronicled and preserved. The names of painters without renown, and the contracts into which they entered at Perugia, whilst Pietro was refusing commissions at Florence, exist to this day. They interest us indirectly by proving that none of the great Perugians, Bonfigli, Fiorenzo, Perugino, or Pinturicchio were open to public engagements in their own town during three or four seasons preceding the close of 1483. An altarpiece, intended for the chapel of the Magistracy, was ordered from an obscure artist called Pietro di Maestro Galeotto in 1479, who stipulated for two years' time to finish it, and who died in May 1483 without having done any more than the frame.¹ Six months later Vannucci chanced to visit Perugia, and he solemnly promised that he would deliver the altarpiece in March 1484, and one of its sections in the first four weeks of December 1483. The reason why it was desirable that one portion should be done before the rest is clear. There were eleven priors in the college; and they were only elected for a term. The lunette was to contain the Virgin of Mercy and the portraits of the priors and their notary in a kneeling posture beneath the Virgin's cloak. The magistrates naturally wished to secure the completion of this part of the agreement before their tenure of office expired. But Perugino, who was perhaps on his way from Florence to Rome, had probably intended to leave the commission in the hands of some apprentice. At all events, he quitted Perugia without beginning the required portraits, and we see distinct symptoms of irascibility in the wording of a new contract in which the authorities excuse themselves for the breach of the old one. The order was transferred to Santi di Apollonio, who took ² the likenesses from life; but the rest was left unfinished, and it was soon discovered that no more trust was to be put in Santi than in Pietro di Galeotto, or in Perugino. Chuckling and mindless of this disappointment, the runaway was doubtless on the road to Rome, where for a time his frescoes were to fill the post of honour at the Sixtine Chapel.

We say for a time, because a greater painter followed, and destroyed his work. Every one knows that Perugino covered the altar face of the chapel, dividing it into three fields. In the central fresco of the Assumption he introduced the kneeling portrait of Sixtus IV., in the side ones the Nativity and the Finding of Moses. Michael Angelo's Judgment occupied their place some years later; and all that remains of Perugino is the Moses and Zipporah, the Baptism of Christ, and Christ's Delivery of the Keys to Peter.

Modern writers have frequently assigned the first of these to Signorelli.³ It contains several incidents in one frame; the angel appearing to Moses and ordering him to circumcise Gershom, the Circumcision, and the Wedding-dance in the distance. The conception and setting, and the landscape, are Peruginesque, as well as the action and shape of the figures. But Perugino's admirers might suggest that finish, harmony, and balance are still less striking in this than in the two other subjects. There is more hardness and angularity than Perugino would have given, and though resolute movement is lent to the angel arresting the progress of the patriarch, heaviness deprives the children's forms of their greatest charm. The truth may be that Perugino did not devote much of his own labour to this bit. The children may have been by Della Gatta, and he again may have been second to Perugino's assistant Pinturicchio. Pinturicchio accompanied his master to Rome, under very favourable conditions. He was a Perugian by birth and education. He had followed with moderate talent the lessons of Bonfigli and Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, and afterwards joined the atelier of Perugino.¹ He had all the qualities that should be sought in a subordinate; and might have become indispensable to one who undertook large commissions and required an orderly superintendent for his apprentices.² It was natural that Perugino should take him into partnership, and give him a third of his profits.³ Nor do the Sixtine frescoes discountenance the belief that the two men stood in this relation to each other in 1484. The frescoes of Pinturicchio in the Borgia Chambers and at Araceli warrant us in believing that it was so; they fully explain how Pinturicchio prepared himself for independence by a constant intercourse with Vannucci and a judicious study of the Florentine examples at the Sixtine. Perugino himself had not looked in vain at the productions of his contemporaries; and a strong impression had been created on his mind by the frescoes of Domenico Ghirlandaio. In the Baptism at least he reflected this; and Pinturicchio might have been led into a similar path by the necessity of carrying out the designs of his elder partner. The composition of Perugino's second fresco is essentially Umbrian. It is overcrowded and monotonous; the groups are not bound together with such art as to produce the effect of unity; and simplicity and nature are wanting. Yet a pleasing impression is created by isolated parts. The Saviour in front, receiving the water poured on His head by S. John, attracts by an Umbrian softness. The masks and type of both are purely Perugino's,⁴ whilst the standing acolytes on the right embody something of the grand laws of movement and pose which are illustrated in Ghirlandaio. The nude of a man stripping near the Baptist is well given, and the youth erect at his side might have been conceived by Pinturicchio. The formal arrangement of the Sermon of John on a hill

² [Cavalcaselle was doubtless right in his suspicions regarding the execution of this fresco as well as that of the Baptism. Both works were attributed directly to Pinturicchio by Morelli at a later date, and are given to that painter, rather than to Perugino, by most modern critics, including Mr. Berenson.]

to the left, and that of Christ on a mound to the right, the kneeling angels, the Eternal in a round glory of cherubs' heads, with four seraphs in waiting at equal intervals; the wide expanse of country in which the episodes are placed; all these may have been grateful to the eye before time and restoring destroyed their harmony.¹ It is doubtful, however, whether the execution was originally as careful as that of the Delivery of the Keys to Peter.

It is rare to find one piece in which the character of a painter is revealed in all its aspects. The arrangement, the drawing, the colour are not all and severally the artist's best. Perugino's Delivery of the Keys is no exception to this remark; but it is certainly one of his finest wall paintings for division, design, action, and expression. The incident he depicts is simple, yet demands, from the deep meaning attached to it as related to the history of the Roman Church, a certain grandeur and solemnity of treatment. Christ gives the keys to the fisherman. The apostles attend, displaying in movement and glance their conviction of the weight and greatness of their mission; but the scene is not laid in the country of Bethlehem; nor is the charge given to the twelve alone. Numerous groups are gathered in a palatial court. The idea of the Church in its victorious might is symbolised by the Temple in the centre and the triumphal arches at its sides. In carrying out all this, Perugino achieves a symmetrical harmony. He infuses a charm of tenderness, of devotion and resignation into his impersonations. The lines are drawn in gentle curves; and the dresses are elegantly cut in cloth of double stuff, branching at the top of the fold, and well studied in fall and undulation. Some of the apostles convey an idea of firmness and nobleness, that reveal Perugino's contact with the Florentines. The weight and dignity in their bearing point to influences unfamiliar to the pure Umbrian. There is life in the Saviour, breadth of form and of drapery, allied to fine proportion, in the kneeling Peter, whose type is an evident approach to those of Signorelli. This is the fair side of a picture, in which the peculiarities which forbid perfection in the master are discernible. In Perugino's symmetry the seeking is by no means hidden; his art, being well under the curb, is without fancy; and his steps have a studied and measured regularity. The conventional marshalling of the dramatis personæ prevents the flow of that current which should run through the composition, binding its parts, and making them all tend to the production of one great whole. Figures again, if appropriate and full of feeling in themselves, are seldom sufficiently united. They rarely conceal the effort made by the painter to realise gracefulness of pose at the expense of freedom and beauty. Certain attitudes have been set and studied once with the deepest attention in various aspects, have been committed to memory, and introduced afterwards without a return to nature, and without due consideration as to place. The hands have been cramped into certain invariable positions, the limbs have a well-known and frequently repeated stride, the heads a constant bend; one might guess the spot where the pins have been stuck to pucker the drapery. The drawing of extremities is often untrue, affected in shape as well as in action. These are most usually the characteristics of Perugino, and they are apparent to a slight extent in the best of his Sixtine frescoes. Knowledge of perspective is evident in the temple and arches of his distance, where, however, the blocks are all parallel or at right angles to the plane of the picture; and he only requires the centre of vision with the distance-points to measure by. But he takes little advantage of his knowledge when connecting groups and figures with the ground on which they stand, and the edifices which surround them. It serves his purpose to have the centre of vision high, in order that the bases of his buildings shall be seen far above the foreground personages. These form a row in front, and are remarkable for their staid demeanour. Just above them, he throws in another string of people remarkable for excessive liveliness of motion. Above these are the bases of his temples and arches which stand on a given line and in regular order. He thus covers his surface literally, but he does not conceal the voids between the ranks; and he still leaves the impression of conventionalism and monotony. Though Ghirlandaio was less perfect in perspective than Perugino, than Pier della Francesca or Mantegna, he applied its general principles in combination with the great maxims of composition, and so obtained far more important results than could be hoped for by any exclusive professor of the science. Perugino, no doubt, was not unmindful of Ghirlandaio's masterpieces when he designed the Delivery of the Keys, but he had not as yet Ghirlandaio's art in distributing space, nor his talent in combining figures with scenery or edifices. Of his landscapes at the Sixtine there is less to be said than of his architecture, in considering which, particularly with reference to the fresco before us, it is noteworthy how much the octagon temple has in common with that of the Caen Sposalizio, or that of Raphael's Marriage at the Brera. The ruling style in these is represented in the works of the architects collectively known under the name of Bramante, and is found in its simplest and most classic form in the S. Maria della Consolazione at Todi by Bramante of Urbino.¹ But an early example of it may be seen in a study of buildings at S. Chiara of Urbino, due, as we have supposed, to the pencil of Piero della Francesca.¹ Perugino is one of the great men of his time who does not seem to have undertaken architectural commissions. In Rome he might, if he chose, associate with men of name in that branch; and the probability that he did so is increased by the circumstance that amongst the spectators in the Delivery of the Keys one on the extreme right stands (in profile), holding a set square, pointing with his forefinger as he talks to his neighbour handling a pair of compasses. To the left of both, a man in upright attitude separates the two first from a fourth personage wearing a skull-cap, who might be Perugino himself, his face has so many features recalling those of the portrait in the Uffizi at Florence. There are no means of knowing who were the architects thus portrayed by Perugino, but he might have received from them the sketches for the arches which adorn his distance. Two or three figures besides those described may be considered as taken from life; but it would be vain to think of assigning names to them. They may be likenesses of Perugino's associates in Rome at the period of his stay, or of men who desired to see their persons immortalised in a sacred place. But we do not see amongst them either Pinturicchio or Della Gatta, whose labours are indeed more easily traced in the Moses and Zipporah, and in the Baptism, than they are in the Delivery of the Keys.²

As a wall painter, Perugino at the Sistine followed the practice familiar to him in the production of temperas on panel. He laid in the flesh with the usual pale grey-green, and stippled the lights and shadows over all, retouching the dry surface at last with rough hatchings which have been blackened by the effects of time. His system was that which Pinturicchio continued at Rome after Perugino's departure.

This event, no doubt, occurred after the completion of the Sistine Chapel in 1486; and this we infer not from any knowledge as to the manner in which Perugino's masterpieces were received, but because he had returned to Florence in the autumn of that year. It appears from the criminal records of Florence that Perugino and a companion called Aulista di Angelo of Perugia were convicted of having disguised themselves on some of the long nights of December, and waited with staves at the corner of a street to waylay some person near S. Pietro Maggiore. The evidence adduced before the "otto di custodia" in their sittings of July 1487 established most damning facts against Aulista, who was proved to have murdered one man, and struck or wounded others at Rome. It further appeared that he had proposed to murder the person against whom he and Perugino had a grudge, but that the latter wished to end the matter with a drubbing only. Fortunately for the threatened party, the conspirators were taken into custody, and sentenced, Perugino to a fine of ten florins of gold, Aulista to perpetual exile.¹

The payment for the Sixtine frescoes was not authorised till August 1489, when Perugino became entitled to draw on the Apostolic Camera at Perugia for a rest of 180 ducats.² In the interval he sent (1488) an altarpiece to S. Domenico of Fiesole,³ and (1489) he received an invitation to Orvieto.

During forty-four years which had elapsed since Angelico's time, the scaffoldings had not been taken down in the Cappella di S. Brizio. The superintendents had never been able to satisfy the demands of a master of name, or they had wilfully neglected to engage one, till Perugino visited Orvieto. They seem to have felt on this occasion that their duty compelled them to remove what they admitted to be a stain on their administration, especially as an artist stood within their reach "whose fame had been spread throughout Italy by his completion of the frescoes in the Apostolic Palace at Rome." They asked Perugino to examine the chapel, and tender for its decoration. He did so; and we may judge from his offer at what a price he valued himself. He would take the whole chapel, he said, for fifteen hundred ducats, if he were furnished with scaffoldings, lime, gold, and ultramarine. He would use such subjects as might be submitted to him, and personally execute the faces and hands of all the figures. With prudent reserve the superintendents contracted only for the ceilings and all the spaces above the capitals, promising to give two hundred ducats for the work, and closing with an advance of ten gold pieces, on condition that Vannucci should begin in April 1490, and go on throughout the whole of the following summer. Perugino upon this left Orvieto, probably for Florence, and was not again heard of during that year. It is possible that his ambition had suggested the chance of more interesting employment at Florence. In Orvieto, the adornment of a chapel in the cathedral had been left for half a century in abeyance. In Florence, the disgrace was more sensible, for the front of S. Maria del Fiore had never been touched since the façade had been raised on the plans of Neri di Fioravante, Benci Cioni, Francesco Salvetti, Orcagna, Taddeo Gaddi, and Niccola Tommasi.¹ It was a common subject of conversation in 1490, that the exterior of the cathedral of Florence was in an unsafe condition, and (we read the words with some surprise) it was no heresy to declare in the journals of the Guild of Woolstaplers that the front was a mongrel structure, and built in defiance of all architectural rules or order.² Lorenzo de Medici, the virtual leader of the Florentines, would no doubt have been pleased if the Duomo of his native city could have been perfected in his lifetime. He therefore gave his support to the Guild of Woolstaplers when they ordered the operai to take the necessary steps for obtaining plans and funds for this new enterprise. The skill of Italians of every grade was consulted. Architects, sculptors, and painters from every part of the country were desired to compete, and in the course of the year eleven designs and one model were ready. The 5th of January, 1491, was the day fixed for the meeting of the promoters in S. Maria del Fiore. Foremost in the assembly the two consuls of the Woolstaplers, Silvestro de' Popoleschi and Ridolfo Falconi, appeared in virtue of their office. They were followed by a host of men of position, Florence, the Soderini, Niccolini, Giugni, Serristori, Salviati, Cavalcanti, Tornabuoni, Strozzi, Scala, Filicaria Martelli. Designs were presented by the Canon Carolus Benci, by Giuliano and Benedetto da Maiano, Francesco di Giorgio, Filippino Lippi, Giovanni (? Giuliano) Verrocchio, Bernardo Ghalluzzo, Antonio Pollaiuolo, Francesco da Fiesole, Francesco, herald of the

² Record of deliberation of Guild of Woolstaplers at Florence, dated February 9, 1490, in Com. VASARI, vol. vii., p. 243. We also see that ALBERTINI held the same opinion. He says in the Memoriale, ubi sup., p. 10: "Decta facciata, la quale Lorenzo de Medici voleva levare e riducerla a perfectione, mi pare senza ordine o misura." But Albertini is a prejudiced critic, for he had built a model of a new front and wished to see it carried out.

Florentines. The only model exhibited was by Jacopo Piattola. All the professional men of importance in Italy were invited, and most of them came, Perugino, Vittorio the son of Ghiberti, Simone Pollaiuolo, Monciatti, Benedetto da Maiano, Francione, Domenico Ghirlandaio, Cosimo Rosselli, Lorenzo di Credi, Giovanni Graffione, Andrea di Monte San Savino, Clemente del Tasso, Andrea della Robbia, Sandro Botticelli, Alesso Baldovinetti, Andrea da Fiesole, Lapo, were all grouped together; and prominent amidst them all the commanding figure of Lorenzo de' Medici. One might have thought that the time chosen for this competition would be favourable beyond any other. As a state, Florence enjoyed peace and wealth, both a guarantee for the speedy prosecution of a great architectural undertaking, and Lorenzo de' Medici was in the fulness of his power. But when the names of the competitors are considered, it seems doubtful whether the talent which they represented would have sufficed. This, it seems, was felt by most persons at the meeting; for after Tommaso Minerbetti had opened the proceedings with a statement of the labours of the operai, more than one speaker rose for the purpose of recommending delay and mature consideration; and Lorenzo de' Medici closed the debate with an eulogy upon those who had sent designs, but at the same time with a suggestion that there would be no inconvenience in postponing a matter of such gravity to a future time. In this manner the hopes that might have been entertained as to finishing S. Maria del Fiore were dashed to the ground. The model and designs were consigned to oblivion, and the persons present parted to their several homes.

Whatever may have been Perugino's expectation in reference to this affair, he was not long in making up his mind as to the course which he should pursue. Avoiding Orvieto, where he might have been sued for the penalties on his breach of contract, he proceeded to Perugia, where he drew the remnant of his pay for the Sixtine frescoes (March 5, 1491) at the Apostolic Chamber, and then went onwards to try his fortune anew at Rome.

During his absence Pinturicchio, together with the somewhat lazy Filippino Lippi, had taken the lead as a decorator, and alternately received the commissions of Innocent VIII., and the Cibos, of the Borgias, and Della Roveres. Perugino, for a short time, divided with him the patronage of the latter, and was employed by Cardinal Giuliano¹ to adorn his palace. This prelate, then bishop of Ostia, was of the same impetuous and exacting temper as when, under the name of Julius II., he ruled the Church; ambitious, in 1491, as in 1503 and 1508, to attach the greatest living artists to his person, caring much and paying royally for the best works, but always ready to destroy them for the sake of getting better. Raphael had not as yet ascended to the eminence from which he afterwards looked down upon his master; and Perugino enjoyed for the time the fullest confidence of his patron. He did not conceal from the Cardinal that, unless an efficient protection could be extended to him, the superintendents of Orvieto might venture upon measures of annoyance, and when they, at last, determined to cancel his contract, Giuliano was induced to write to the priors and council a letter as insolent as his temper and power allowed him to do. The superintendents, in obedience to a promise extracted from them by the Cardinal, had remained quiescent during the whole of 1491, but in January of the following year, they began to deliberate what their best course should be, considering Perugino's delay. The result was a resolution to ask Pietro whether he intended to come or not. He replied in April that he proposed doing so at the next opportunity. Yet he took no immediate step towards the fulfilment of his promise, so that the superintendents were obliged at last to let him know they would appoint some one else in his stead. This was the signal for Cardinal Giuliano to interfere. He penned a letter on the 2nd of June reminding the council of Orvieto that they had agreed to wait, knowing that Perugino would be ready for them in a few months; but he added:

"Now Maestro Pietro has stated that, contrary to your word, you intend to substitute for him another painter who shall do your work; this is, indeed, truly remarkable (conduct). We laboured under the impression that you were to be compliant as best suits the love we have ever borne to your community. And so we now again exhort and pray that you do reserve this place, which is his due, to Maestro Pietro, and refrain from molesting him for the short time during which he has to expedite our affairs."¹

In the meanwhile the Orvietans had been in correspondence with Pinturicchio, who announced his arrival almost at the moment when they received Giuliano's letter.² Not venturing to offend so important a dignitary as the Cardinal, they obeyed his injunctions by keeping for Perugino his place in the Cappella S. Brizio; and Pinturicchio received instructions to labour in a different part of the cathedral.

The only memory of this busy and interesting period in Perugino's life is an altarpiece in the Albani Villa near Rome, the decorations of the Cardinal's palace having perished. But this altarpiece alone, with its date of 1491 gives us sufficient knowledge of his manner at the period. Its principal subject is the Nativity in the form which Perugino subsequently repeated with slight changes on various occasions; and this again is surmounted by three panels of the Crucifixion between the Angel and the Virgin Annunciate. The stable of Bethlehem is transformed after the true Umbrian fashion into a wide and roomy enclosure protected from the weather by arches resting on pillars, in one corner of which the ox and the ass are penned behind a palisade. The Infant Christ lies on the foreground in the middle of the floor, with the Virgin and S. Joseph on their knees, in rear of Him, and two angels between them in adoration. In the aisles SS. Michael and John the Baptist, SS. George and Jerome, kneel and stand in prayer. The light pouring in from the openings to the left, casts pleasant shadows on a fine architecture and illumines a pretty distance of hills and lakes seen through the apertures. Above, the Saviour on the Cross in a landscape is bewailed by the Magdalen, who lies prostrate with her arms about the tree, between the lamenting Virgin and Evangelist. For a tempera, slightly injured by abrasion, restoring, and other accidents, this is still a very transparent and softly fused picture with warm lights and grey shadows, carefully united by reddish grey half tones in the flesh. It is one of the master's most graceful pieces, with freshness in the types, resignation and modesty in the poses, and tender expression in the features. It is still Umbrian in sentiment as well as in the minuteness of its finish and in its details, but free from exaggeration or coarseness. The S. Michael is young, modestly noble in mien, and intent as he prays, his form reminding one of those of Raphael. The Baptist and S. George are almost equally charming, whilst the S. Joseph and the S. Jerome are more ordinary conceptions. There is great dignity in the slender figure of the Virgin, and an improvement upon the older Umbrians is seen in the shape of the Infant Christ. The Annunciation is full of feeling, and the form of the martyred Redeemer is as fine as its movement is fair, the whole scene of the Crucifixion almost foreshadowing a similar one by Fra Bartolommeo.¹

The death of Innocent VIII. and the accession of Alexander VI., occurring in July of 1492, possibly induced Perugino to leave Rome and return to Florence without attending to his commission at Orvieto.¹ From the Borgia, indeed, he had little to expect, and perhaps something to fear in consequence of His Holiness having patronised Pinturicchio and recommended him to the Orvietans. But Perugino was now so famous that he was less anxious to receive than he was to be able to satisfy his numerous commissions. He was balloted into the municipal council of Città della Pieve for May and June 1493, and is said to have served his time there in due course;² but two large altarpieces produced at Florence at the same period give proof of continued attention to his art. With a true instinct and shrewdness, he perceived that the days of tempera painting were numbered, and he began to practise more constantly on the innovating system, of which he had, no doubt, long known the theory. If one looks at the Virgin and Child between the Baptist and S. Sebastian, now at the Uffizi, but originally at S. Domenico of Fiesole, it is apparent that he had not thoroughly caught the routine of colouring in the new methods;³ for the marks of hatching and stippling are still clear in the light olive flesh tones. As a composer and a draughtsman, however, he was improving. His figures are still gracile and posed in the usual Umbrian attitudes, the S. Sebastian is lean and withered in frame and limb, but the Virgin is well proportioned and handsome in face, and forms a pleasant group with the plump Infant on her lap. The saints are resolutely drawn with legs in correct foreshortening. The drapery is well cast, and one sees a striving towards higher aims than the creation of mere tenderness and grace.⁴ With less finish or carefulness of handling, with less judicious arrangement of drapery and choice of type, the Madonna and Saints of 1493 in the Belvedere Gallery at Vienna illustrates the same phase in Pietro's career.⁵

Being now a permanent resident at Florence, and a candidate for employment in all the branches of his profession, Perugino opened a regular shop, and whilst he sold panels to distant purchasers, he painted frescoes for Florentine convents. Of these the most celebrated is that of the Gesuati, which contained a Brotherhood familiar with the pursuits of art. The Gesuati had built for themselves a monastery, outside the Porta a Pinti, and erected workshops for the production of painted glass. They carried on a flourishing business, and took part in almost all great undertakings during the last half of the fifteenth century. For these friars Perugino drew numerous cartoons, and painted on wall and on panel, decorating two cloisters with frescoes, and the convent church with two altarpieces.¹ Their establishment became for this reason doubly famous to visitors, whom curiosity prompted to see the creations of a famous master, to customers desirous of excellent wares. But as the imperial army advanced in 1529 to the siege of Florence, the exposed situation of the edifice and the advantage which it might have afforded to Philip of Orange, induced the generals of the threatened city to demolish it. The frescoes were, consequently, lost; and all that remained of the wreck was taken to S. Giovannino della Calza, or S. Giusto, where two or three pictures remained until the time of their transfer to the Academy of Arts.² Of these the earliest seems to have been the Pietà in which the Dead Saviour, lying on the lap of the grieving Virgin, is supported by the head on the shoulders of Joseph, by the feet on the knees of the sitting Magdalen, whilst S. John the Evangelist looks up in prayer to heaven on the left, and another saint stands silently mourning on the right. The scene is laid in front of a colonnade, drawn in bold perspective with a low centre of vision. Any one familiar with Francia's lunette in the National Gallery will be able to understand the beauty of this very similar composition which, in Perugino's hands, is treated with greater success and feeling, and with a higher command than he had yet exhibited, of correct proportion. By giving great melancholy to the Virgin, who bears the weight of her Son's frame, thoughtful intentness to the Magdalen who gazes at the feet once anointed by her care, delicate tenderness to Joseph, presenting the full face of the Saviour to the spectator, and a natural rigidity to the select shape of the Redeemer, Perugino showed a sense of discrimination worthy of praise. He proved himself a judicious observer of the Florentines, without losing the characteristic features of the Umbrian, preserving certain foreshortened movements reminiscent of the Perugian school in the upturned head of the longing Evangelist, keeping up its old fashion

VASARI also gives a full description of this convent, and of Perugino's frescoes and altarpieces (vol. vi., p. 33 and following). Records in the archives of S. Maria del Fiore prove that the Gesuati had the furnishing of six glass windows in the lantern of the cupola of that church in 1466 (GUASTI, La Cupola, ubi sup., p. 107).

of drapery, but applying renewed vigour and conscientiousness to the clear rendering of form and the true perspective of its lines, and clothing it in a broader cast of fold. All this he accompanied originally with clearness in the handling of oil-colours partaking in tone of the greyness of tempera, and justly balanced in harmonies.¹ It was a work which probably created a great impression on Lorenzo di Credi, and might well stir a sympathetic fibre in Fra Bartolommeo. In 1494, Perugino's experience had become still further enlarged. A nobler style than he had as yet gained may be found in the Madonna and Saints of S. Agostino at Cremona, on which the stamp of Florentine art, as expressed in the dignity of Ghirlandaio's creations, is obvious. The finely-shaped Virgin on her pedestal is still slender in frame, but she has little Umbrian languor. The Child is square in its fulness, yet inspired. The attitudes have more of the Florentine gravity; the draperies are more grandly cast than before; and the oil-colour, of strong tone, is touched with increased mastery and force.²

A new feature in Pietro is also revealed in this year by a portrait of himself at the Uffizi, which seems the forerunner of two others of Valombrosan friars in the Academy of Arts at Florence. Perugino was a man of imposing air. He had a plump countenance, with small dark eyes under a fleshy brow, a short but well-cut nose, and sensual lips; broad cheeks, and a bull neck. His ample furnishing of bushy but frizzled hair tells of a genuine native strength, but he prides himself on an elegant hand. The unity of the parts, the fused enamel surface, and the bold clean touch, coupled with good modelling and precision of contours, suggest a comparison of this masterpiece with those of Antonello da Messina.³ The work has more nerve than is found in

¹ This Pietà is now in the Academy of Arts at Florence. [No. 56.] It was taken, says RICHA, Chiese, vol. ix., p. 103, by Mary Magdalen of Austria to the villa near the Porta Romana; and a copy of it was given to the convent of S. Giovannino della Calza. It is possible that this copy, which has disappeared from Florence, should be a so-called replica described by the Annot. of VASARI, vol. vi., p. 36, as once forming part of the Orleans Gallery. In its present condition one hardly realises the probable beauty of the original colour. The flesh is of a fair yellow shaded with bluish grey, the whole abraded; half the head of the figure on the right repainted; the eyes and forehead of the Virgin retouched, and the background thrown out of harmony. VASARI mentions this piece (vol. vi., p. 36).

³ [No. 287, Uffizi.] On the back of the panel the following is engraved: "1494. DI LUGLI. PIETRO PERUGINO PIVS⁹ PM^o DIE. . . ." He wears a black skull-cap, a

Francia, to whom it was long assigned, but is not essentially different from the Vallombrosan Friars in the Academy, the freshness and life in whose faces, together with a lively warmth and neat design, have also caused many to believe that Raphael was no stranger to their production.¹

As Perugino now became better known for the colour in his pictures, the demand for them quickly extended towards Northern Italy, where that quality was more usually sought than in the South. Besides the Madonna which was sent to Cremona, a Miracle of the Cross had been finished in 1494 for the school of S. Giovanni Evangelista at Venice,² and Vannucci was now induced by the council of that city to consider the draught of a contract for "the flight of Pope Alexander III.," and "the Battle of Legnano" in the Sala del gran Consiglio. It was proposed that these should be done for 400 ducats without any limit as to time. Perugino boldly claimed 800 ducats; and the negotiation failed, no doubt in consequence of the exorbitance of his demand.³ But it was of advantage to him that he should not be obliged to leave Florence, where a casual absentee might speedily lose a practice reared by patient industry.

He had thus far endeavoured to combine a diligent study of composition with an honest striving towards a faithful reproduction of red vest laced over a white shirt, a purple coat with brown facing. One hand leans on a parapet; the other holds a scroll on which one reads: "TIMETE DEUM." The colour is a little veiled. The distance is sky, hills, and water. [MILANESI, VASARI, vol. iii., p. 604, deciphered the inscription, which continues: FRANC^o DE LOPE—that is, Francesco delle Opere, whose portrait it is.]

nature. He had tried to master the idea of his subjects, and to give to his personages the appearance, the passion, the action, and the meaning suited to them. He was already quoted as one of the most able men in Central Italy for the application of the system of oil. A short year elapsed, and the Pietà of 1495 at the Pitti marked him out amongst Florentine craftsmen as a candidate for the highest celebrity. One of the greatest attractions of this piece consisted, according to Vasari, in the brilliancy of its tones and of its backgrounds;¹ and even now that time and restoring have dimmed and altered it the landscape is one of Perugino's best. It was natural, indeed, that independently of all else, his cleverness in distances should excite admiration in a city where they had long been noted for a comparatively monotonous surface, upon which trees or buildings were laid in with touches of opaque substance copiously impregnated with vehicle, and necessarily rough in consequence. By introducing transparent and varied tints into them, and thus adding a charm all but unknown to the Peselli, Pollaiuoli, Verrocchio, and Signorelli, he captivated the spectator. His pre-eminence in this respect was due to his command of means in the use of the mediums, now in course of rapid improvement, at Florence; but not to that cause alone. The Umbrians had long bestowed an extraordinary attention upon details of landscape. Perugino took this specialty with him to Florence; but instead of considering that section of his art as definitely acquired, he carefully looked at Masaccio in the Carmine. At Rome he saw how Ghirlandaio added interest to his wall paintings by wide expanses of vales and of lakes; and when he returned to Florence, how admirably Domenico combined his incidents with scenery, in the Sassetti Chapel and in the choir of S. Maria Novella. Instead of laying the Pietà in a formal convergence of rays by placing the centre of vision in the middle of the picture; instead of pursuing the course which he had followed in the Delivery of the Keys, and which he afterwards repeated so frequently in the days of his decline, he set the centre of vision at one side, and broke up the features of the country into simple yet graceful sinuosities to show pools of water disappearing in the horizon, and limpid on the outskirts of a city. He fitted trees and shrubbery so cleverly that in spite of all the calculation which it reveals the result seems a spontaneous creation of nature. It was not enough for him to have thus given a special beauty to one particular part; he also made the lines of the country complementary to those of the figures, which he ceased to place with Umbrian symmetry and regularity, in order to put them together pyramidally on the principles illustrated by his predecessors. The Saviour's body, still full of the flexibility of life, but supine in death, is supported in its winding sheet on a stone by Joseph of Arimathæa;

the head is held up by the Magdalen, the left arm by the Virgin. Mary Cleopas looking over the heads of both, completes the pyramid, with Mary Salomé kneeling at her side between the Virgin and a youth who stoops to raise the corners of the cloth at the Redeemer's feet. S. John and the wife of Zebedee, Nicodemus and two others, stand to the right and left. In this arrangement, Perugino leaves nothing to desire, balancing and harmonising everything with a sobriety and fitness only to be found in the best composers, emulating the Masaccios and Ghirlandaios without servilely copying them, and imparting to all at the same time his own peculiar sentiment. The Virgin shows her maternal love in an agony of grief, without grimace. In the Magdalen, sorrow and sympathy are united in the face and in the action. Joseph of Arimathea turns away his head, overcome by the melancholy of the scene, whilst the youth at the Saviour's feet is less affected. In thus modifying the intensity and form of pain in each person, as in transmitting individuality to the features, Perugino's merit is undeniable. Softness of expression and select grace give it the impress of its originality; an originality well calculated to temper the rugged grandeur of the nobler, or the realism of the more naturalistic, Florentines, and prepare the way for Raphael. As a study of nude, the Redeemer is finely proportioned, without the false conventionalism so often conspicuous in the hands, feet, or articulations of earlier and later creations, and without their stiffness, length, or leanness. One sees in it as in the surrounding mourners, the forerunner of that splendid work of the sixteenth century, the Pietà of Fra Bartolommeo at the Pitti; in the greater spontaneity and more intense feeling of which one still traces a happy impress derived from Perugino.¹

The year 1495 was thus remarkable in the career of Vannucci. It was that in which an Umbrian, imbibing the principles, slowly developed throughout two centuries since Giotto, successfully applied the laws of composition, and added a calm tenderness to the gravity of the Florentine school; and, through his influence on Fra Bartolommeo and Raphael, replaced, as far as it was possible to do so, the pious mysticism that had perished with Angelico. The time indeed was one when no artist could hope to revive the simplicity of old convent art, when no reformer, were he talented or enthusiastic as Savonarola proved himself, could restore a religious spirit incompatible with the condition of society during the ebb of republican liberty; but it was still a time when a pleasing gentleness, an expression of purity in representing heart in conjunction with positive beauty, might be substituted for the deeper and more imposing sentiment of Giotto, Orcagna, Traini, and Fra Giovanni.

When the nuns of S. Chiara, for whom the Pietà was finished, were in possession of it, a rich Florentine, Francesco del Pugliese, offered them threefold its price if they should consent to exchange it for a counterpart by Perugino himself. The offer was rejected, because the nuns ascertained from Vannucci that he did not think he could repeat it without failure.¹ He had probably not the courage to copy a picture on which his own labour had been exclusively bestowed, and fearing that his pupils would not make a replica as good as the original, he preferred undertaking new subjects. He thus produced at intervals the frescoes of S. M. Maria de' Pazzi, which Rumohr describes as fully equal in composition and expression to the Pietà of S. Chiara,² Christ in prayer on the Mount of Olives for the Gesuati, the Crucifixion for S. Girolamo delle Poverine at Florence, the Madonna with Saints for the Magistracy, and that of the Virgin and Child for S. Pietro Martire, of Perugia. In every instance he maintained the ground he had previously won, or he exhibited his fullest powers as a colourist. We may be grateful indeed for the preservation of these examples in their original loveliness, and value them for affording that insight into Perugino's progress in oil-painting which is denied in the faded though still beautiful ones of the same period previously described. The Christ on the Mount is now in the Academy of Florence,³ where one sees how well Perugino has placed the Redeemer on an elevation, kneeling and praying, whilst an angel brings the cup. The three apostles lie sleeping on the foreground as Iscariot, in the distance, leads the soldiers to the capture. With much thought in the conception, and much freshness in the types, the picture gains an additional charm from the hour with which Perugino marks the time of the action. The sun has just set; and a strong reflection still rests on the Saviour and apostles who detach themselves in gloom from the pale horizon of the sky. In this twilight the forms are finely brought out by well-modelled relief. In the Crucifixion, the Virgin and S. Jerome stand at the sides of the Cross in a landscape after sunset; and in order to strengthen the melancholy of the scene, Perugino gives it a mysterious depth of atmosphere in a low key of warmth, and thus corrects the defects of figures made out with less than usual care and conscientiousness.⁴

The Madonna and Saints executed in 1496 for the chapel of the Magistracy at Perugia, and now at the Vatican, is, unlike the two last, a bright day-light piece. The Madonna is enthroned in front of a colonnade on a pedestal between the four patron saints of the city. Her shape is slender, and her appearance extremely gentle. The saints breathe contentment and sympathising tenderness. But the colouring is vigorous and masterly, of a pleasing richness in the flesh tending to that brownish ruddy tinge attractive in Antonello and the Bellini, and in the early Giorgiones; whilst the draperies are prepared and glazed with a perfect knowledge of the laws of contrast, and with great skill in technical handling.¹ The Virgin and Child of S. Pietro Martire was finished in 1498.² It represents the Virgin seated in a landscape attended by two angels in flight, and the Infant Saviour on her lap blessing six brethren in white, kneeling in front. The Child is a little fat and square, and the features of His mother are a little vulgar. But the expression and action are softly meditative, and this impression is heightened by the calm glow of evening which overspreads the groups, not with the vividness of that in the Christ at the Mount, but with a clearer, milder reddish brown, polished as enamel. It is another of those instances in which Perugino adapts the technica of his art to the rendering of an idea, and trusts for effect to colour rather than to form, emulating the Venetians who harmonise their tints with the incidents they depict. The system upon which all these panels were wrought was almost the perfection of that which had been inaugurated by the Peselli and the Pollaiuoli, improved by Verrocchio, by Leonardo and Perugino. It was not simple, nor was it acquired at once.

Perugino prepared flesh with a warm brown tone which he worked into rotundity by successive strata, leaving the high lights for the close.³ These strata were such that each should be lighter in colour, yet fuller in body than the last; and therefore the final and most substantial one was the high light which occupied the least space in the picture. Care was taken in laying the second not to lose all trace of the first, but to let its value appear through the superposed colour. This, in a few words, was the technic of the Van Eycks. It created flesh-tints merging from thin to full body in proportion as the parts fell out of shadow, receiving light from without, and transparency from within. The consequence was a somewhat unbroken surface, with insufficient half-tone; but this disadvantage was corrected, ex. gr. in the Madonna of the Vatican, by strengthening the darkest spots with a final scumble which remained higher on the panel than the rest; and the result was a clear and lucid enamel betraying less of the secrets of manipulation than the painting of the earlier innovators. To complete a picture by these means was a matter of calculation and certainty of hand, an undertaking in which a false step involved absolute failure. But the method was perfectly familiar to Perugino, and was invariably used during his transition from this period to the more advanced one in which he carried out the altarpiece of the National Gallery. In draperies, the processes varied. All cold mixtures were put in first with warm substrata, covered over like the flesh-tints, and glazed.¹ Vice versa, warm or glowing colours were rubbed on with cold undertones; and this method was followed with unwavering consistency even in changing hues. Reds and lake reds alone were sometimes laid on above cool preparations in half-body with high surface lights and shadows, and glazed; sometimes the glaze preceded the lights and shadows, sometimes the lights were furnished by the undertone. In general all colours except lake-reds were opaque and of solid impasto, receiving light from without, with shadows superposed, and occasional hatching in the projections. The brightest shades were invariably chosen for the foreground, changing hues for the middle distance.²

During the whole of these years, until the Perugians determined to decorate the college of the Cambio, Vannucci resided almost entirely at Florence, visiting Perugia occasionally for the purpose of painting a picture, or receiving orders for new ones. At one of these visits, the Vatican Madonna, which he had promised in 1483, was allotted to him a second time on the 6th of March, 1496 (N.S.);³ Santi di Apollonio's likenesses of the members of the Council of 1483, which had been upwards of twelve years in some secluded garret, were cancelled by the Council of 1496;⁴ and Perugino substituted for them a Pietà. He was to deliver the whole in six months from the date of the contract, and no doubt did so. But he was not satisfied with so little; and two days later he signed with the prior of the Benedictines of S. Pietro for an Ascension to be completed in two years ; nor is it unlikely that he agreed at the very same time for the Madonna of S. Pietro Martire. On his return to Florence, after finishing the altarpiece of the Magistrato,¹ he invested some of his money in a purchase of land in the parish of S. Piero Maggiore, where he usually lived, and thus appears to have contemplated a permanent stay.² Permanent indeed it still remained for some time, for in the midst of other labours he found leisure to attend various consultations on matters of art. In January 1497, he accompanied Benozzo Gozzoli, Cosimo Rosselli, and Filippino Lippi to value the frescoes of Alesso Baldovinetti in the church of S. Trinità at Florence ; and in the language and orthography of his " opinion " shows himself undoubtedly the most illiterate of the four.³ In June 1498 he was present at a most important discussion.

Upon the death of Lorenzo de' Medici it was observed by the superstition of the people that various signs and omens of a highly doleful nature gave notice of coming misfortunes. The most striking amongst these was the destruction of the lantern of S. Maria del Fiore by lightning, which prefigured, as Macchiavelli believed, the ruin of the republic.⁴ The fall of the lantern was not in itself an irreparable injury, and though months went by before the marks of the accident were obliterated, it was finally replaced in its original state. Simon Pollaiuoli, the superintendent of the cathedral, was induced either by the consuls of the woolstaplers, or by his own fear of responsibility, to submit the repairs to a meeting of architects, sculptors, and painters ; and at this meeting, Filippino Lippi, Lorenzo di Credi, and Perugino all tendered their advice.⁵ There was, in fact, hardly a public or private deliberation to which Perugino was not called, and thus reap the fruit of a life of privation, during which a bed was long an unknown luxury, and night was turned into day for the sake of learning.⁶ Yet, as sometimes happens to men who have struggled, the sweets of the harvest were so pleasant to Perugino that he began to look upon their accumulation as of more interest than the preservation of his fame ; and from this time dates the beginning of an activity in which his pupils and journeymen had a share as great as his own, and in which their mediocrity covered with his name was necessarily calculated to injure him in public estimation. This phase in the master's career is already marked in the Ascension of S. Pietro of Perugia, which was taken to Paris by the French, and was not returned in its primitive condition. The central Ascension is in the Museum of Lyons, the lunette in S. Germain l'Auxerrois at Paris,¹ the predella in the Museum of Rouen, three of the pilaster saints in the Vatican at Rome, and the other five in the sacristy of S. Pietro at Perugia.² The Ascension is on a conventional model, fitted to please men not yet initiated to the more perfect and natural creations of Perugino's successors.³ The Redeemer is draped to the hip and points upwards with both hands, suggesting that the two angels who support His glory of cherubs' heads, are taking Him to the region of bliss, where two seraphs attend the Eternal in a circular glory of the same kind issuing from a cloud in benediction.⁴ The joys of the heavenly host are represented by four winged players in couples at the side of the Saviour. The Virgin, in the foreground of the landscape above which He ascends, turns her head upwards; whilst S. Peter and S. Paul, and the company of the Apostles in diverse attitudes, follow her example. In the predella, the Adoration of the Magi is rich in distant incidents. The Baptism is formal, the frame of the Saviour being finely rendered. The Resurrection comprises the usual number of soldiers asleep about the tomb, on the edge of which Christ is standing with the banner. But the fore-shortenings are drawn with little success, and would prove Perugino to have been inferior in the reproduction of difficult positions to Signorelli.⁵

Restored with punctuated stippling of a red tone. The flesh lights pallid and chalky from abrasion, ex. gr. in the Virgin's face and the torso of the Christ. The blue sky is scaled, restored, and out of harmony. The distance is so carelessly repainted that the heads of some foreground figures are covered at the outlines. The glazes over the angel's forms are removed. Figures all but life-size.

In the first of these, the Virgin sits to the right with the Child on her knee, the kings in front to the left, the foremost one with one knee on the ground, and his arms across on his breast. Between the kneeling king and Virgin, backwards, S. Joseph. Suite of kings with horses in distance to the left, and the announcement to the shepherds on a hill to the right. In the second, Christ with the Baptist in centre, between four angels in adoration. Two figures in converse at each side of the foreground. In the third, as in the second, a strip of the foreground has been renewed (ten figures).

The half-lengths of the pilasters at Perugia and at Rome are fair enough for the place they were destined to fill.¹

The whole composition and isolated bits of it were frequently repeated by Perugino. A replica of the Ascension without the lunette or predella was taken for the cathedral of Borgo S. Sepolcro, where it still exists in a bad condition,² having been apparently confided exclusively to assistants. The glory of the Eternal was used anew in the arched sky of the Assumption at the Academy of Arts at Florence; the players and the two angels supporting the Redeemer's glory, deprived of scrolls, were transferred to the same picture. The Eternal was given without alteration in the fresco of the Sibyls and Prophets at the Cambio of Perugia. The glory of angels and some saints were introduced into the altarpiece of the SS. Annunziata de' Servi at Florence, and variations of these again into an Assumption in the parish church of Corciano, near Perugia, and into the Caraffa panel in the Duomo at Naples.³ The handling of the original at S. Pietro was at once bold and free, but in its conception and execution has neither the unity nor the charm of the contemporary Christ on the Mount, and Madonna with Saints at the Vatican. It stands in this respect on an equality with the Virgin of 1497 in S. Maria Nuova of Fano, where six saints at the sides of the throned Madonna and Child combine the gentleness of Umbrian types with the fine choice of Florentine proportions. A charming predella with scenes from the life of Mary contains compositions in the best style; but a lunette representing the Dead Saviour supported on His tomb is incorrect and coarse in the nude.⁴ This altarpiece again is superior to the Annunciation of (?) 1498 in the same church,⁵ though on a par with a much

In the lunette, Christ is supported by Joseph of Arimathæa and Nicodemus. The Virgin is to the left, S. John Evangelist to the right. The lunette has a larger base than the central panel, which, however, is now without its pilasters. In the predella, the Birth of the Virgin is a composition of eight figures, and Florentine in character. The Presentation in the Temple is very prettily arranged, recalling the same subject by the youthful Raphael (eleven figures). The Marriage of the Virgin (ten figures). The Annunciation is under a long arcade in vanishing perspective. The Assumption comprises the Gift of the Girdle to S. Thomas.

Three pieces, copies (feeble), of the Nativity, Marriage, and Assumption are in the Oggioni Gallery at the Brera in Milan.

It was not extraordinary, considering the quantity of works which Perugino thus delivered in a couple of years that some of them should be inferior to others; nor is it a wonder that some parts of a picture should be better than the rest. But it is possible that time elapsed before Perugino seriously injured himself by trusting too much to his helpmates, or by his habits of repetition. His reputation was still intact when, in 1498, the Orvietans, not as yet tired of waiting for his arrival, applied to him again to come to the Cappella S. Brizio, and when the Guild of the Cambio, in 1499, asked him to decorate their Audience-Hall. Two such requests, received simultaneously, were well calculated to flatter his self-love. They could hardly leave him in doubt as to which of them would be most gratifying to his pride. In both cases he should be obliged to leave his permanent abode at Florence. But if he went to Orvieto, he would still be distant from his native place, whilst a stay at Perugia would enable him to revisit it and to enjoy amongst his townsmen the respect due to his name and success. He chose Perugia; and after writing to the Orvietans to say that he was otherwise engaged, he accepted the offer of the Guild of the Cambio. In April 1499, Signorelli was appointed to the chapel of S. Brizio, and Perugino had probably begun his equally important commission.²

The Audience-Hall of the Guild of Changers or Bankers at Perugia was built and inaugurated in 1453 without any pictorial adornments.³ It was a cube with the sides halved and arched elliptically so as to give the ceiling a rich groining; a noble area for an artist to cover with appropriate designs. Of these, it would appear that Perugino was not allowed to dictate the subjects, which were submitted to him on the part of the "auditors" by Francesco Maturanzio, professor of rhetoric at Perugia and secretary to the office of the Decemvirs.¹ Under his auspices it was determined that the vaulting should receive the seven planets and the signs of the Zodiac. The wall fronting the entrance was to contain the Nativity and the Transfiguration, that to the spectator's left, Justice, Prudence, Temperance, and Fortitude, and illustrative portraits of classic heroes; that to the right, the Eternal, the Prophets and Sibyls; and a square near the entrance, Cato as the emblem of wisdom. A vacant half space was committed to a cunning wood-carver, Antonio di Mercatello of Massa, whose labours were completed immediately after those of Perugino. The full pilasters at the angles were ordered to be filled with arabesque ornament, and the divisions with imitated pilasters in the same style.

In dealing with such incidents as these the skill of the composer is of less moment than that of the ornamental draughtsman. Apart from the Nativity and Transfiguration there was no incident to depict, and in the setting of the former Perugino had now nothing new to express. He did not attempt to introduce any fundamental changes into the Nativity, which in his eyes had already been perfected in the altarpiece of the Albani Villa, and he merely substituted two shepherds for the angels between the Virgin and S. Joseph, adding three seraphim in song in the heaven. He went confessedly² on the principle that a composition which had once been received with applause might be admired again in a repetition, and thus throughout his lifetime the Nativity received little alteration at his hands. Whenever he was required to paint that episode, he took out the old cartoon and applied it afresh, instructing his pupils, no doubt, to think meanwhile of the original at the Cambio or elsewhere; and so the churches of S. Francesco of Montefalco and S. Francesco al Monte of Perugia were adorned without much trouble to himself.

The Transfiguration might have afforded him an occasion for displaying qualities exceptionally eminent in the Pietà of S. Chiara, if success had not already blunted his energies in the conception of new forms of distribution. His Christ, erect on the clouds, with a breeze playing gracefully in the draperies, listens full of serene dignity to the words, whilst Moses and Elias stoop in humble prayer at the sides of His glory; but the disproportion between these and the wondering Apostles below is not so pardonable in an artist of Perugino's time as it would be in one of the fourteenth century, and the crouching of the recumbent Peter is too affected even for Vannucci. Yet, this Transfiguration also was preserved for future use, and transposed with slight diversity into a picture at S. Maria Nuova of Perugia. Still we should not forget that the Nativity and Transfiguration, like their companions at the Cambio, are admirable for the brilliancy of their colour, the feeling and freshness transfused into the figures, and the excellence of the handling. In the Triumph of Religion, as well as in the Cardinal Virtues, the simplest known arrangement is that adopted by Perugino. The Eternal is attended by two angels, and gives His blessing. He presides, as it were, over the groups beneath Him. The Prophets headed by Solomon, the Sibyls by the Erythrean, occupy the foreground. Isaiah, Moses, Daniel, David, and Jeremiah, the Persian, Cumæan, Libyan, Tiburtine, and Delphic Prophetesses, are in converse, and each hold a scroll with a motto. They are all graceful apparitions in the well-considered and affectedly elegant motions that Perugino sought in every instance to realise, but fine in proportion, and individually grand.

The Virtues are likewise seated on clouds, and bear their appropriate emblems, whilst their embodiment is illustrated in a long line of heroes; in Fabius Maximus, Socrates, and Numa, the Prudent; in Furius Camillus, Pittacus, and Trajan, celebrated for their Justice; in Lucius Sicinius, Leonidas, and Cœles, men of undaunted Fortitude; in Scipio, Pericles, and Cincinnatus, the glorious representatives of Temperance. The same calm resignation and gentle action marks them all, irrespective of difference of race, of time, and of character. In Sicinius alone, Perugino repeats the movement given to S. George or S. Michael in many of his sacred pieces; and imitates with more than usual power the typical pose of Donatello's statue. He bears in mind the examples left by Ghirlandaio in the Palazzo Pubblico at Florence, and though he cannot rival the high mien, the noble stature, or the dignified expression of that master's classic champions, the memory of them gives strength to his less masculine conceptions of them. In the Virtues he remembers other Florentines, and his Fortitude is derived from that of Botticelli. In the execution, he is prodigal of all the qualities that he possesses. His style expands to its breadth. The forms are remarkably firm, perfect, and well chosen. The proportions are most correct, and the attitudes are as natural as their forced grace will allow. The cast of his draperies is charming. His merits are in fact conspicuous.¹

Transfiguration.—The best of the lower figures is that of S. John protecting his eyes with his left hand, and raising himself on the right arm. The sky is repainted, and the words, "BONUM EST NOS HIC ESSE" are partially covered over.

Sibyls and Prophets.—The former, it is needless to repeat, are not by Ingegno, nor are they by Raphael; and it is impossible to admit that the Daniel is a portrait

Of the ceiling he gives the drawing, which he confides to his pupils. A central lozenge, occupying one quarter of its surface, circumscribes a square, in which Apollo on his biga is driven by four horses of various colour. The speed is great, and the ribands curl in the wind as the wheels revolve; and the god himself with flowing hair appears to bound as he throws his weight on one foot and poises the other behind him. He is very thin and young in type; and his head seems studied from the classic models of the ancient time. The production of the sides of the principal lozenge forms six triangular spaces. Each of them contains a round in one of which Jupiter, on a car drawn by eagles, receives a cup of nectar from a youth. The helmeted Mars in armour sits on a similar seat commanding two rampant steeds. Saturn with his scythe is driven leisurely by two snakes. Venus is wafted through the sky on a throne by two doves, and expects the dart of Amor who shoots from the clouds. Luna, nude to the waist, sits in a chariot with two nymphs in harness. Mercury, at ease on one leg, holds the serpentine wand, and cleaves the air with the cocks bound to his chair. The signs of the Zodiac are on the wheels of the chariots. The lozenges and triangles are fringed with supporting ornament, of monsters, beasts, birds, vases, and twining flowers. The rounds are framed most tastily, and are harmonically varied with all the hues of the prism.

The sketches for the different parts of the vaulting, we have said, are by Perugino, and the manual labour by his pupils. This is not a mere abstract supposition, but a probability supported on very forcible grounds. The Cambio ceiling is one of the most perfect examples of a system of decoration for which the Umbrian school was celebrated; it realises an exquisitely fanciful and admirably distributed pattern. Yet the interpreter of the master's idea is a subordinate, careful and minute to a fault, but without the swing or power of a finished artist. The leanness noticed in the Apollo extends to the rest of the Planets, the nudes of which betray the immature but conscientious effort of a youth of the greatest promise. The Jupiter, it is true, is rendered with some nature. The Luna, though disproportioned and affected, is accompanied by two well-made nymphs in good momentary action; but in Mars and Saturn of Sanzio. The execution of this fresco is masterly. One can still trace the pouncing. The sky is new.

Prudence and Justice.—The face of the first named Virtue is discoloured, the forehead of the Justice is abraded, and the fresco, generally, is the most dim in the hall. At the sides of the Virtues in this, as in the next piece, mottoes are inscribed on two tablets supported between two naked children. The heads of Fabius, Socrates, and Numa are much injured.

Fortitude and Temperance.—The sky is dimmed in parts by restoring, and dirty in parts from varnish. The heads of Cocles, Pericles, and Cincinnatus are ill-preserved. Cato is paltry, altered and darkened by time. The base of the frescoes is about six feet from the ground, and the sibyls, prophets, and heroes are life-size.

slenderness is united to stiffness. In Venus, a strained motion usual in dancing girls mars the grace of her thin shape ; and the same fault may be found with the Mercury, although his step sets off to advantage a fairly studied figure and a pleasing classic type of head. The garments adhere so tightly that they make the leanness of the wearers more apparent. Their folds are closely fitting, angularly drawn in a straight direction and at sharp angles. A general dryness characterises the whole ; yet there is a perfume of poetry and sentiment in it which sets one seeking who amongst the rising talents in Perugino's shop could have been entrusted with it. Many of the younger assistants, for instance Spagna, might, it may be granted, have drawn in this manner, for the steps of beginners have an habitual uniformity ; but few would have combined such clean carefulness of line with so much feeling ;¹ and the way in which Perugino's thought and conception are realised is worthy of the youth of Raphael.²

Nor is it difficult to perceive a variety in the technical execution of the ceiling as compared with that of the walls at the Cambio. In the latter, Perugino's great practice is evident in the skill with which the colour is handled, in the power of the transitions from light to shadow, and in the vigour and harmony of the tones, whereas the surface of the former is rough and blistered in consequence of the distemper-hatching of red and darker shades on grey-green underground.

Perugino has left his own portrait to posterity on the middle pilaster of the hall. It stands, a bust, in an imitated border hanging by a string of beads from a nail. It is the face and form of the picture at the Uffizi with some few wrinkles more that have crept over the forehead beneath which the small eyes twinkle maliciously under the pothook-brows, but rubicund and healthy in aspect, with a stiff copious brush of hair straggling out of a blood-red cap. Above it, the ciphers of the date 1453 confirm the record which tells that the building was ready in that year, whilst his name below the portrait-frame, and those of "ANNO SALUT. MD." on the opposite pilaster indicate the author of the decorations and the period of their completion.³ We can only account for the final receipt of Vannucci for payment as late as 1507 by supposing that he drew upon the auditors of the Cambio as suited his occasions, and that his Apollo, head spotted and scaled. Jupiter, flesh-parts, eagles, and dress of the youth presenting the nectar, blackened or renewed. The rest has been partially retouched in most places to fill up splits chiefly. The colour has thus lost much freshness.

³ His name is inscribed as follows : "PETRUS PERUSINUS EGREGIUS PICTOR. PERLITA SI FUERAT, PINGENDO HIC RETULIT ARTEM : SI NUMQUAM INVENTA ESSET RACTENUS, IPSE DEDIT." The whole, no doubt, dictated as the subjects of the hall had been before.

final acknowledgment is for those sums and for a slight remainder still due to him, at that time. The formal discharge signed by Perugino is not the only document which has been preserved.¹ The record of it is also due to the "juror of the Cambio," Alberto de' Mansueti, who prides himself on being able to note in the matricular register of his guild that he settled Pietro's account.²

We may accept the belief that the Audience-Hall of the Cambio was finished in 1500 with the more readiness, as tangible proofs exist that Perugino had leisure to complete other important works in the same year. The Assumption which he then delivered to the monks of Vallombrosa is one of those pieces in which Pietro is open to the charge of repetition, because the seraphs attending the Eternal are the same as those in the picture of S. Pietro Martire; and those at the Virgin's side and feet are taken from the cartoons of the Lyons Ascension. But the type of the Almighty rivals the later ones of Raphael; the Virgin, who looks up to Him, is one of the finest in shape, in features, and in attitude that was ever produced by Perugino; and the four saints in the foreground are magnificent as isolated creations.³ The time had not yet come when Vannucci sacrificed everything to mechanical speed. He was in the prime of life. His sense of the beautiful was unaltered; his power of realising it increased; and this at the fortunate period when Raphael was taking his most important lessons. It may be conceived with what reverence the scholar watched the completion of the noble frescoes at the Cambio; with what ardour he shared the labours in the hall. We can fancy the zest with which he strove when he saw that his master, after fifty, was still progressing, and could give to the saints in an altarpiece like that of Vallombrosa a greater readiness, a fuller and more pleasing form than before. Raphael could not have joined Vannucci at a more favourable juncture, not only for profiting by the long experience of a tried artist, but for contrasting his performances with those of Pinturicchio, who had also settled at Perugia, or with those again of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, Bartolommeo Caporali, and Giannicola Manni. None of these had a thought of setting themselves up as Vannucci's rivals. They were willing, on the contrary, to aid him, and they all endeavoured to imitate his manner. A gallant band of youths, besides, struck by the opportunity of the occasion, offered its services, and was taken into the shop. And thus, no doubt, Raphael attracted the attention of Pinturicchio, and contracted friendship with Spagna, Domenico Alfani, and perhaps Genga. The pictorial resources at Vannucci's command were thus so copious that he might have accepted any number of orders without fear of being disabled from carrying them out.

The works dating from the first years of the century bear such frequent marks of the employment of assistants, that it is probable he did not resist the temptation which a fortunate chance had placed in his way. Circumstances occurred also which might oblige him to trust more than usual to the industry and tact of his subordinates. In January and February 1501, he was elected to serve as one of the priors of Perugia.¹ This duty involved residence in the town-hall, and daily attendance for the transaction of civic, to the exclusion of all other, business.² Between December 1501 and February 1502, he superintended the division of property between himself and his nephews, Agnolo and Giacomo di Giovanni of Città della Pieve, in consequence of the death of his uncle Giovanni.³ But in spite of these occupations he undertook the Marriage of the Virgin for the chapel of the Brotherhood of S. Giuseppe in S. Lorenzo at Perugia.⁴ He signed a contract on the 10th of September (1502), with the guardian of the convent of San Francesco al Monte, to paint the saints and angels about a carved statue of the Redeemer, and a Coronation of the Virgin.⁵ He agreed on the 10th of October following to give the Florentine Baccio d'Agnolo designs for the stalls of the choir of S. Agostino, and pledged himself as Baccio's security; ⁶ and finally he took a commission from the fathers of S. Agostino for a Nativity and Baptism of Christ.⁷

As time passed, and increased the interval which separated Perugino from his last days in Florence, old associations and the reminiscences of his youth overpowered the impressions of the capital; and it is striking to see him revert in the Sposalizio to some of the characteristic features of his earlier style. This altarpiece, which did not find its way back to Italy after the peace of Tolentino, is now in the Museum of Caen in Normandy, and represents the life-size Virgin and S. Joseph united by the high priest in presence of two carefully painted groups of men and women in front of an octagon temple.¹ The composition is a modification of the Delivery of the Keys at the Sixtine, and is open to the same grave objections. It is remarkable that an arrangement which places the foreground personages on one line, those of the middle distance on a second, and the Temple on a third, showing the complete elevation of all three with empty spaces between them, should have been copied with such fidelity by Raphael in his adaptation of 1504. But Raphael remained an Umbrian in feeling and habits till he visited Florence, and had a fair excuse for repeating a conventional subject, whereas Perugino might have remembered how grandly the same theme had been treated by Domenico Ghirlandaio in the choir of S. M. Novella at Florence. With this exception, the Sposalizio of Caen is worthy of Vannucci. Its bright and harmonious colour is light and transparent, and marks a phase in his progress to perfection in the technical system of oil ;² but his forms are less pliant than of old ; and his tints have not the glow that charms in some of the pictures of the earlier Florentine period. The whole bears the impress of his own hand, which the double altarpiece of the Minorites of S. Francesco al Monte does not.³

On one side, the Saviour crowns the Virgin in an almond-shaped glory, round which four angels sport with strings of pearls and flowers. The Apostles look upwards from the foreground. At a glance we know the draughtsman again whose acquaintance we made in the ceiling of the Cambio. Here is the Virgin, with a head modelled on that of the Apollo or Luna, with a frame so slender and action so decided that nature seems but fancifully imitated, yet so soft and saturated with feeling in the midst of this exuberance, that one is still attracted. Here are angels full of playful frolic, and apostles with youthful face and small prim features, but with long frames and developed articulations. The drawing is not absolutely perfect, but the sentiment that might be expected from the eagerness of a youth is everywhere apparent ; and the general aspect is that of Raphael's Sposalizio at Milan. A flat rosy flesh-tone, laid out in the method of tempera ; tight drapery with incorrect folds, tell likewise of incomplete education. Had Perugino furnished his own cartoon for this Coronation, the pupil would scarcely have ventured to wander so far from its lines ; but the small one in Dr. Wellesley's fine collection at Oxford, from which the figures were enlarged, is not by Perugino ; and must have been a clean copy from one of his rough sketches.¹ The opposite side of the altarpiece is equally characteristic. Above the Saviour in relief, the sun and moon are depicted. An angel in profile holds a vase beneath the wounds of the palms. The Virgin to the left, the Magdalen near her looking up, S. Francis to the right gazing at the Redeemer with his arms across on his breast, S. John Evangelist erect in very sinuous action ; a calm simple landscape, and the tempera handling, all create an effect akin to that produced by Raphael's Crucifixion at Dudley House. The saints, it is true, are not identical, nor in the same relative positions at the Minorites as at Dudley House. Nor is the execution in the first instance of the same quality as in the second ; yet the hand of Raphael² is suggested in the former, as it is in the Coronation ; and he cannot be excluded from a claim to a share in the production of these pieces.

This, however, is but one of many occasions where Raphael was employed on works for the completion of which Perugino was answerable. In S. Francesco of Perugia a Resurrection of the Saviour hung for a long time above the door of a chapel near the choir. It had been invariably attributed to Perugino, whilst tradition assigned a share in it to Raphael.³ At the Vatican Gallery, where the picture now is,⁴ it is said to be the joint labour of both ; and the sleeping guard on the right is described as Raphael's portrait, that of the flying soldier as the likeness of Perugino. No tenable grounds appear to exist for the truth of these last suppositions ; Perugino probably entrusted the composition to his pupil ; and the Resurrection seems entirely done on his master's lines by Raphael. Affectation and stiffness in the lean shapes of the long-waisted Saviour are combined with poorly rendered drapery. The limbs of the two sleepers on the foreground are feeble and imperfectly foreshortened, yet isolated portions in all the figures are correct. In this characteristic combination of imperfect knowledge of general proportion and perspective, with simple yet minute working out of parts and natural sentiment, the art and experience of Perugino are not revealed. One sees, on the contrary, the striving of a nascent and undeveloped talent, and is led the more surely to connect it with the name of Sanzio, because of the youth in the faces and forms, their freshness and slightness, the minute conscientiousness of the details, and a richness of transparency in the flat and bright tones that remind one of other and less undoubted creations of the same pencil. There is a pinguity in the hands of the young soldier which reappears in later examples of Raphael; and the touch which produces a fused impasto of great brilliancy is less Perugino's than that of his disciple. A capital specimen of the same class is a little double panel at Alnwick Castle, in which S. Mary of Egypt and S. Catherine are represented. It was once in S. Fortunato at Perugia, and afterwards in the Camuccini Collection at Rome; and though of old never known except as a Perugino, it is now very appropriately called Raphael, because in addition to its Peruginesque air, it embodies (particularly in the S. Catherine) Sanzio's beautiful simplicity and sympathetic grandeur, and unites nature and dignity with great delicacy of taste. His early softness and purity, the pleasant lucidity of his colour, are there, together with that inexplicable charm which he never fails to impart.¹

The time was, however, rapidly approaching when Raphael was to close the period of his apprenticeship and trust to his own strength for subsistence. In Perugino's absence, Leonardo da Vinci had returned to Florence. A new impulse appears to have been felt in the world of art; and the name of Michael Angelo was on every tongue. A man whom Perugino had seen years before studying designs in the Medici garden or in the Brancacci, had come from Rome to receive almost at once orders for two statues of David; one of supernatural size in marble for S. Maria del Fiore; another of bronze for a French prince who had lately led an invading army in Italy. The marble was all but finished, and the same artist had been requested to carve the Twelve Apostles. The Guild of Woolstaplers had even built a house for Buonarroti to live in; and few men had been in such honour since the days of Giotto. It was, no doubt, related by persons capable of judging of these matters that Michael Angelo was introducing a new and prodigious power into sculpture, reviving and surpassing the energetic realism of Donatello, and giving a terribly masculine stamp to the art of his country, and Perugino could not resist the temptation of seeing masterpieces for which no praise seemed too great in the eyes of the craftsmen of his time.² He might wish also to revisit Leonardo, whose activity and genius were still concentrated on the improvement of oil-painting. Perhaps also his stay at Perugia had been disturbed by Pinturicchio, who enticed most of his workmen to Siena. Be that as it may, Perugino broke up his establishment at Perugia, braving the importunities of the fathers of S. Agostino, and only completing, in October 1503, the arms of his old patron Giuliano della Rovere, now Julius II., on the public palace and five gates of the city.¹ His apprentices and assistants had already dispersed themselves in various directions, Raphael to Siena, the rest to different parts of Umbria.

Perugino had scarce reached Florence and taken a lodging in the Pinti suburb, when a meeting was called (1504) for the purpose of choosing a place for Michael Angelo's David.² The statue had been hitherto guarded with the utmost jealousy by Buonarroti; but every one knew that it was of gigantic dimensions. When it was uncovered, warm disputes arose. Giuliano da San Gallo was for putting it in the Loggia de' Signori, and Leonardo da Vinci agreed with him. Perugino, who was also present, doubtless voted with his friend, but Michael Angelo was of another opinion, and chose the left-hand side of the doorway of the Palazzo Vecchio. This contempt for the views of so many artists was perhaps the cause of a secret resentment. A hostile party was in fact brought into existence, and when the giant was at last taken out into the open air, it became the mark for missiles of divers kinds; and the watchmen who guarded it were assaulted in the execution of their duty. Perugino did not openly express any dislike for Michael Angelo's style; but Vasari says, he felt how much the fame of Buonarroti eclipsed his own, and vented his spleen on all the Florentines in general. In the shop of Baccio d'Agnolo, most of these were accustomed to assemble. The San Galli, Cronaca, Filippino, Granacci, and sometimes Buonarroti met there,³ and perhaps in the heat of debate on one of these occasions Michael Angelo declared to Perugino that his art was "absurd and antiquated." This was too much for the equanimity of Vannucci, and he committed the folly, we are told, of suing his younger rival for defamation. From this action, which naturally went against him, he deservedly reaped ridicule,⁴ but he was not yet beyond learning a lesson from the sarcasm of enemies; and he resolved to show his antagonists that, although he was not partial to the school in which Michael Angelo shone, he could still emulate the more congenial qualities of Leonardo. We attribute to this time the Madonna and Saints of the Certosa at Pavia, now in the National Gallery.

To most Englishmen the Madonna of Pavia is well known. The Virgin, kneeling with upturned head, looks at the Child before her. It seems as if she had just addressed a thanksgiving to heaven and then sent her tender motherly glance downwards to worship the Infant, whose form is supported on a white cushion by an angel. Unusual beauty adorns the Babe; excessive tenderness and solicitude are suggested by the attitude and expression of the angel. The composition of the whole group is full of merit, the type of the Virgin's face nearer perfection than any that the master ever realised; and as we admire the easy movement of the frame and the neat arrangement of the hair in its net and veil, we fancy Perugino has idealised his wife, of whom Vasari says, "she was so handsome, he delighted in seeing her well attired, and often dressed her with his own hands."¹ At different times Perugino tried to repeat the subject, but the Madonna of the Pitti, which is one of these repetitions, is not equal to this one.²

The Archangel, in jewelled helm and burnished steel, with mace and shield, stands at one side of the Madonna, at rest like the Sicinius of the Cambio, or the S. Michael of Vallombrosa, but youthful in features, firm in tread, and noble in aspect. On the other side, the Angel leads Tobit—a page in tights, feebly conceived, though rescued partially from fatuity by feeling. All the backgrounds are landscapes.

Perugino's skill in the application of oils reached its highest development in this picture, whilst in respect of conception, sentiment, and design he never went further. His excellence is such that some are inclined to doubt its being all his own. A drawing for the Angel and Tobit in the Oxford collection is assigned to Raphael;³ and the principal charm of the work is attributed to Sanzio. But this is mere assumption. The technical handling of all the panels is the same. It is that of a painter of long experience in the use of his materials, familiar with the difficulties and the tricks of his profession; of Perugino in fact, as contradistinguished from Raphael, whose undeveloped powers are visible in the Sposalizio of 1504 at Milan. Nowhere, indeed, has Perugino more completely combined masterly execution, knowledge of form, and perfection of harmonies with the subtle quality which consists in giving to a scene the tone best in unison with its motives and idea. Nothing can be more attractive than the golden fusion of his flesh-tints except the soft and dreamy depth of vapour that charges his distances. He improves as far as he can the method, of which the earlier examples are the Madonna and Saints at the Vatican, the Christ at the Mount in the Florentine Academy, and the Virgin of S. Pietro Martire; the system, which may be called peculiar to Central Italy, embodying some of the principles evolved by the Van Eycks and Antonello da Messina, and ripened to the mellowness of the Bellini and Giorgione. Neither Fra Bartolommeo nor Raphael ever produced anything more remarkable as regards colour.¹

We may affix about the same date to the Holy Family in the Museum at Nancy, where Raphaelesque grace and innocence are united in a composition the rules of which are clearly derived from Leonardo da Vinci. The Virgin kneeling in full view, with her right arm on the shoulder of the boy Baptist, who adores, with joined hands, the Saviour on a cushion, forms, with those lovely little beings, a pyramidal group, somewhat marred by the two angels on their knees in prayer at her sides. Her affectionate face and air, and the waving lines of the movement, are all enticing. Leonardo alone could have conceived a choicer elegance, and would have avoided the cramped attitude of the left hand. The Christ is at once reminiscent of Fra Bartolommeo and of Raphael. A magnificent landscape with slightly leafed trees vanishes behind the two slender angels; great mastery being shown in the alternation of lighter and darker tints in the hills. A clear touch in the grasses and ground on which the infants repose, recalls Raphael's Florentine period. Powerful tone detaching the group from the distance, which recedes with fine aerial perspective, completes the effect of a picture in which the influence of Florentine example on Perugino is very apparent. He casts side glances at his contemporaries, and does not reach their great perfection of distribution, but he comes very near it, and emulates in other respects, with success, Leonardo, Fra Bartolommeo, and Raphael.²

Little more than a year had elapsed since Perugino's return to Florence, when business again called him to Perugia. As he came there in February 1505, the syndic of the Disciplinati of Città della Pieve inquired for what price he might be willing to paint an Adoration of the Magi. Perugino replied in a very ill-spelt letter that the cost would be 200 florins; but that he would reduce it to half that sum in consideration of the interest he felt for his native place. Upon this ensued a lively exchange of communications. The syndic thought that Pietro's love of country might induce him to grant still lower terms. Pietro held out for his original proposal. On the 1st of March, however, he gave way from 100 to 75 florins.¹ He executed the Adoration of the Magi in the chapel of the Disciplinati, on a square of twenty-one feet with about thirty life-size figures, in an incredibly short space of time; for beneath the feet of the Virgin one still reads the date AD. MDIII., and it would thus appear that the fresco was ready before the 25th of March, when, according to the old calculation, the year 1504 expired. Though willing to labour at a cheap rate, he was not the less alive to his own interests, and knowing probably that the public of Città della Pieve was less critical than that of Florence, he trusted much to his pupils. His composition is the formal one which Umbrians obviously preferred; the Virgin and Child, with the kneeling king in the centre, S. Joseph and the youngest of the Magi erect as sentries at her sides, and to the right and left a massive assemblage; the whole backed by a symmetrical distance in which perspective depth is attained by multiplying little episodes on a middle line. It is a work which makes a fair impression at first sight, but betrays some coarseness on close inspection, well balanced but carried out with haste, and in so far unsatisfactory.²

² This picture (wood), in the Museum of Nancy, is apparently one of those that were taken to France before the wars of the great Revolution. It was in Louis XVI.'s time in the collection of M. de Brissac, and had been sequestered when he emigrated (see DE RIS, Les Musées des Provinces, Paris, 1859, vol. i., p. 315). It has been much injured and restored. Yet it is not wholly flayed; and parts give a fair idea of what the whole once was. The blue sky is new, the face of the Virgin spotted, and half the head of the angel to the right is new. But one traces the process of the master still. The white gesso may be seen through the colours of the distance. The flesh-tints are high in surface, and the draperies still higher. Beneath the feet of the youthful Baptist are the remnants of the signature: "P. . . . P. . . ."

With equal speed and, no doubt, for as small a price, he adorned the walls of the church of S. Sebastian at Panicale with a Martyrdom of its patron saint. On this occasion he probably confided the greater part of the execution to a companion, whose light yellowish flesh-tints only relieved by a pale shadow, whose minute stippling and tender keys of harmonies seem characteristic of Spagna. The slender saint is on a pedestal in the midst of a rich architectural court all filled with polychrome ornament; and four lean and somewhat affected archers are distributed round him in varied action, the spectators being confined to the number of six in two bodies in half distance, which time have, however, almost obliterated. In a triangular space above the Martyrdom, the Eternal appears in the usual attitude of benediction, in a circular glory of cherubim between two angels in flight.¹ It is the less improbable that Perugino should have left Spagna in charge here, because in addition to the evidence afforded by the fresco itself, there is a ruined Assumption on a wall in S. Agostino of Panicale, in which the manner of Perugino's Spanish disciple is very clearly to be traced.² He lived at Panicale, it would seem, with pleasure, and transferred to the distance of the Martyrdom of S. Sebastian the undulating hills about the Thrasimene Lake; but Perugino had also this beautiful neighbourhood in his sketch-books, and introduced one of its landscapes into a panel of this time, long in the gallery of Lord Northwick, and representing the Flagellation with truly Umbrian feeling.³

Whilst Perugino left his journeymen to finish the vast frescoes of Città della Pieve and Panicale, he hurried back in person to Florence, and was thus enabled, in June 1505, to write to the Duchess of Mantua, Elizabeth Gonzaga, to acknowledge the receipt of 80 ducats for the hasty but masterly distemper-sketch of the combat between Amor and Chastity, which now adorns the Louvre.⁴ With the assurance which he derived from his fame, he ventures to affirm that he has shown sufficient carefulness to satisfy her Highness' desire and his own honour; adding that he has tried distemper because Messer Andrea Mantegna commonly employed that medium; and offering himself for further productions of a similar kind ; but he does not attempt to write to a Duchess in the slovenly style which marks his own orthography, and he improves in spelling for the same reason that he disimproves in painting ; that is, when he uses an assistant.¹ A fortnight later he met Lorenzo di Credi, and others, at S. Maria del Fiore to decide on the relative merits of two heads in mosaic by the miniaturists Monte and Gherardo, for the adornment of the chapel of S. Zanobius.²

² This fresco is assigned by ORSINI, Vita, ubi sup., to Perugino. The Virgin is in an almond-shaped glory of cherubs; four celestial players at her sides; two high up suspending the crown above her head. Beneath, are the remains of a bishop and another saint. The figures are lean, and in style like those of Todi and Trevi, a mixture of the Umbrian of Pinturicchio and Perugino, and coloured in Spagna's pale yellow tone. The fresco is an independent work not composed for but probably by, Spagna in person. It will not last much longer, being already in a great measure obliterated, as are the angel to the left holding the crown and the foreground. The best preserved bits are the playing angels.

³ It is true this picture, No. 388 in the Northwick Collection, was catalogued under the name of Raphael, but it is by Perugino or some pupil other than Raphael, and done at least in the master's atelier. The figures, three in number, are all nude. The Redeemer is on a low pedestal, a flagellator swinging a cat at each side of Him in a palatial court through the arches of which there is a view of Castiglione del Lago. The figures are slender, but well proportioned. The Christ very fine in pose bound to the pillar, the two flagellators a little academical and conventional in action, but drawn in the same style and with the same quaint headgear as in the fresco of Panicale. The pillar is new and the breast of the principal personage repainted, as is also the foot of the flagellator to the right; the distance is also retouched (1 foot 9 by 1 foot 6). [Now in the Collection of Sir F. Cook at Richmond.]

Amongst the contemporaries of Perugino, one with whom he had been in friendly relation had lately paid his tribute to nature. In the last years of his life Filippino Lippi had been employed by the brethren of the SS. Annunziata de' Servi on a double altarpiece, the commission for which, originally given to him in 1503,³ he had courteously surrendered to Da Vinci. Leonardo, however, had neglected the matter, and, during one of his frequent absences, the Servites again called upon Filippino for his services. On his death, in April 1504,⁴ the upper portion of a Descent from the Cross was ready, the lower remaining in embryo. In the summer of 1505, Perugino was requested to finish the piece, and an Assumption intended as a double to it. He acquitted himself of the first part of this undertaking with praiseworthy punctuality and personal diligence.⁵ His group of the Virgin fainting in the arms of the three Maries may indeed be classed amongst the nobler conceptions of his brush. It reminds one of a similar episode in Masaccio's Crucifixion at S. Clemente of Rome ; it was taken and improved by Raphael in the predella of the Madonna of S. Antonio at Perugia,⁶ of which the portion to which attention is called is preserved in the collection of Sir William Miles of Leigh Court. The handling is large and animated ; and Vannucci successfully harmonises his own with the performance of Filippino, uniting the grace of the Umbrian with the imposing grandeur of the Florentine, treating his figures with massive colour and breadth of touch.⁷ With the Assumption, now in the Annunziata, he dealt differently, nor can one imagine that it should have been produced at the same period. For the arrangement he fell back on the model of the Lyons Ascension, repeating the six angels from his old cartoons. Giannicola perhaps did the rest.¹ But Vasari tells us Perugino was justly criticised for this by all the artists of the time, and particularly because he had reproduced so many things from other pictures.² It was vainly that he declared he had only copied anew what had already received public approbation; he did not recover from the blow thus levelled at himself. His school, which in his younger days had been frequented by many pupils, became empty. Bastiano da S. Gallo, who had recently joined him, deserted his atelier for that of Michael Angelo,³ and others probably followed his example. From this time, Perugino began, no doubt, seriously to think of leaving Florence. His name is on the register of the Perugian Guild in 1506,⁴ whilst it ceases to be noted on that of Florence.⁵

He was no sooner at home at Perugia than he began calling in debts due to him for old commissions. From the Disciplinati of Città della Pieve he claimed a final payment of 25 florins, which was liquidated (March 29, 1507) by conveyance of a house.⁶ From the authorities of Panicale he required 11 florins, on receipt of which he gave them fourteen little flags with figures painted by himself,⁷ to be used at their festival of Corpus Domini. From the guild of the Cambio he asked and obtained 350 ducats for the Audience Chamber.⁸ Having thus settled his affairs, he sat down to new works, and endeavoured to forget the slights of the ungrateful Florentines. It was easy enough for him to show that his powers were unimpaired by bestowing his own labour where he usually was prodigal of that of assistants. Under these conditions he delivered to the executors of a carpenter at Perugia the Madonna between SS. Jerome and Francis, now [1866] in the Palazzo Penna;⁹ and for these obscure patrons he produced a masterpiece combining fine proportions, with natural movement, Umbrian tenderness with facility of brush, and graceful outlines with bright warm colour. Perugino never succeeded better than on this occasion in giving to the Infant Christ the grace which we are accustomed to call Raphaelesque, nor can a more touching group be found than that formed by Him and His mother as He springs in the Virgin's arms and looks round at S. Jerome. A minimum of subordinate aid may be assumed in the frescoes with which Perugino decorated the semidome of the SS. Annunziata or Nunziatella of Foligno. Although he did not alter the form of a composition repeated in more than one of his predellas, the Baptism of Christ here designed, with figures of life-size, is fair, with pleasing heads and slender general proportions.¹ It is probable that one might class many undated pieces on panel and on wall as productions of this and subsequent periods; but it is safer to leave these for the present, in order to trace, with what success one may, the closing years of Vannucci's career.²

⁹ This picture is so fine that it has been usually assigned to an earlier time, but we owe to Professor Adamo Rossi of Perugia the discovery of the following facts regarding it in the Annali Decemviri for 1507. It is there stated that on the 8th of June, 1507, the executors of Giovanni, a carpenter of Perugia, commissioned of Perugino, then present, a Virgin erect holding the Infant "similar to that of Loreto," with S. Jerome in cardinal's dress and S. Francis, for the price of 47 florins.

As if to console him for the loss of his prestige at Florence, Julius II. called Perugino to Rome about 1507-8. Bazzi and Peruzzi were in employ at the same time, and whilst the latter adorned the room at the Vatican now called dell' Eliodoro, and Bazzi that which bears the name of Camera della Segnatura, Perugino was given the Stanza dell' Incendio del Borgo. There he met his old friends and competitors, Signorelli and Pinturicchio, and dined in their company at the house of Bramante. There he introduced Giambattista Caporali, and made the acquaintance of young Sansovino, with whom he lodged in the Palazzo S. Clemente,

This is a description of the Penna altarpiece. The Virgin stands on a pedestal in a landscape, and two angels suspend a crown over her head. The figures are life-size, all well preserved. [It is now in the National Gallery.]

long known as the residence of Domenico della Rovere.¹ Slowly and with some of the staidness of age, Perugino proceeded till suddenly Raphael was taken to the presence of Julius II.

Vannucci had already yielded at Florence to the rising talents of the sixteenth century. Here again he was supplanted by a younger and fresher genius, by Sanzio, his own pupil. It is pitiful to think of the anxieties of the old man when he saw the ground thus cut away from under his feet. We sympathise with his disappointment when Raphael was placed over his head and ordered to renew his decorations; but we admit at the same time that with such a patron as Julius II. the result was inevitable; and with respect to the progress of art, even desirable. Much has been said of Raphael's consideration for Perugino evinced in the saving of the subjects in the Camera dell' Incendio. It is probable that the young painter was rejoiced to be able to show this mark of friendship; but we must recollect that he did almost as much for Bazzi and Peruzzi. In the meanwhile it must be owned that Perugino's ceiling, which represents the Eternal in different glories in four medallions, is not advantageous to his fame, for the principal parts are somewhat careless, and the circumscribing ornaments in dead colour, interspersed with heads of females or of Roman emperors in rounds, are heavier and in less refined taste than at the Cambio.²

With Signorelli and Pinturicchio, Perugino left Rome on his way homewards. He stopped perhaps at Assisi to decorate the outer face of the Sanctuary of S. Francis in the Chiesa degli Angeli, with a Crucifixion which has almost perished ; ¹ and then went on to Siena, where he sold a large picture to the family of the Vieri, valued at its completion on the 5th of September 1510 by Girolamo di Benvenuto, Pacchiarotti, Genga, and Pacchia,² and a Crucifixion for Prince Chigi's altar in S. Agostino. From the ruined condition of the latter it is hard to judge of Perugino's ability, but though conventional in arrangement, it is full of feeling in the faces, and peopled with figures of good proportion and shape.³

From thence Vasari might lead us to suppose that Perugino returned in 1510 to Florence, where he appraised an Annunciation by Mariotti Albertinelli ; ⁴ and executed, according to Orsini, a Virgin and Child between SS. Peter and Paul for Agostino Spinola of Savona, bishop of Perugia.⁵ It is unfortunately difficult to trace Perugino's doings between 1510 and 1512, in which year he invested his savings in land and houses at Perugia.⁶

During the campaign fought by Gaston de Foix for the possession of the Romagna in 1512, one of Baglioni's captains, a Perugian called Boto da Maraglia was taken prisoner (15th of February) by the French ; and on his release he ordered a votive portrait in remembrance of his troubles, which is still in the church of the Minorites at Bettona.⁷ In this hasty

³ Both pieces are mentioned by VASARI, vol. vi., p. 38. The Christ in the Crucifixion is retouched, and the shadows and outlines have become black and hard, but the proportions are fine and true. Two female saints kneel in prayer at each side of the Cross ; to the right of the Cross, too, the Evangelist erect grieving, the Baptist pointing to the Sufferer, and S. Jerome prostrate looking up, with the stone in his hand. Left, the Virgin erect grieving, one of the Mariæ behind her, and a friar on his knees in front. An angel in flight at each hand gathers the blood in a vase. The distance is a rich landscape. The whole piece, restored, threatens to scale away (wood, oil, figures life-size).

⁷ [Now in Municipio.]

The inscription on the canvas runs : "BOTO [? EX VOTO] DE MARAGLIA DE PEROGA. QUANDO FO PREGIONE DE FRANCIOSI CHE FO ADI XI DE FEBBRAIO MDXII. PETRUS PINXIT DE CASTRO PLEBIS." The surface is now discoloured and washy, the sky bare to the thread. The lower part of the legs (incased in red hose) of Boto is gone.

In the Virgin of Mercy there is nature and truth in the action of Mary, youthful distemper on canvas, Boto kneels cap-a-pie, and looks up to a life-sized S. Antony holding in one hand the fire, in the other a book. The date of the vow and the name of Perugino are on the lower part of the canvas, which has pretty much the appearance of a Virgin of Mercy between SS. Manno and Jerome, with male and female patrons under her cloak, in the same church. Both pieces are characteristic of the period. They are painted with slight transparent colour. The figures are fairly drawn, in good proportion, and easy motion; but the old carefulness of the master is obviously giving way to a neglectful facility.

We now find Perugino entering anew into negotiations with the friars of S. Agostino of Perugia, for whose convent he had promised ten years before to deliver an altarpiece;¹ but though the vast complex of this work occupied him much till 1514, it was left unfinished for the sake of other commissions at Città della Pieve. A feeble Virgin in Glory, adored by SS. Protasius, Peter, Paul, and Gervasius, was then completed for the prior of the church of S. Gervasio in Perugino's native town,² together with an enthroned S. Antony the Abbot, between SS. Paul and Macarius, and an Eternal in a lunette, a fresco in S. Antonio, since detached from the wall and now in S. Agostino.³ The first probably owes its vulgarity, the flatness of its washy tones, and the slowness of its relief to assistants; the last is broadly treated with very slight marks of stippling.

Equal freedom and haste are apparent in the fragments of a Descent from the Cross, dated 1517, in S. Maria de' Servi, of old Compagnia della Stella, at Città della Pieve. A group of the fainting Virgin, sup-character in S. Manno. S. Jerome kneels with his arms across. The male patron on the left foreground is aged and dressed in grey, with a cap of the same colour. A female in black kneels behind S. Jerome. Two splits cut, severally, the Virgin and S. Jerome vertically in half. The blue mantle of the former is partly in its old state, but dimmed by time. The red tunic is repainted, the heads of the Virgin and of the two saints are injured. Of two angels in flight above the Virgin, one is partially damaged; and some of the sky is renewed. The base of the panel (oil, 6½ ft. by 4½) is repainted.

ported on the ground by two of the Maries, shows how Perugino clung to an arrangement which he had found successful in the Descent from the Cross, finished after Filippino's death. Nor have years deprived him of feeling.¹

The Martyrdom of S. Sebastian of 1518, at S. Francesco de' Minori Conventuali of Perugia, may be by Perugino's pupils, and is at all events much damaged.²

The groups added to Raphael's fresco in S. Severo in 1521 are too badly injured to permit of any comment.³

But there are well-preserved frescoes of the latter period in S. Maria Maggiore of Spello, and an Adoration of the Magi in the church of the Madonna delle Lagrime at Trevi, which perfectly illustrate the power that still remained in the great old man at the advanced age of seventy-five. The most authentic of the Spello frescoes is on a pilaster near the high altar of the collegiate church of S. Maria Maggiore. Perugino's name and the date of 1521 are on two signs hanging from the dais of a throne. The subject is the Virgin seated, with the corpse of the Redeemer on her lap; the Magdalen and Evangelist mourning at the sides of the foreground. The faces and expression of Mary and of Christ are fair and melancholy; but the small shoulders and ill-foreshortened left arm of the Saviour, and the slovenly character of the drawing in drapery are an unmistakable symptom of decline, whilst the tenuous yet tremulous outlines tell of physical weakness. But the fluid colour is bold and skilful. The effect is rendered with such ease, indeed, that the surface is but slightly covered and the pouncing is visible in every part.⁴

³ SS. Jerome, John Evangelist, Gregory, Boniface, Scolastica, and Martha, with the inscription: "PETRUS DE CASTRO PLEBIS. PERUSINUS TEMPORE DOMINI SILVESTRI STEPHANI VOLATERRANI A DEXTERIS ET SINISTRIS DIV. CRISTOPHORÆ SANCTOS SANTASQUE PINXIT A.D. MDXXI."

⁴ The inscription runs thus: "PETRUS CHASTRO PLEBIS PINSIT. A.D. MDXXI." On the base of the Virgin's throne are the names "MICHÂL ÂGELUS ANDINEZ." A low screen behind the throne allows the sky and a hilly landscape to appear. A cherub's head is at each corner of the dais; a vase on the parti-coloured floor before the Magdalen. The decline of Perugino is noticeable in the eyes, which are drawn angularly to express grief.

The companion fresco on the opposite pilaster near the high altar simply represents the Virgin and Child between S. Catherine and a saint in episcopals. It illustrates the same phase of Perugino's art, with feeble and defective forms in the Virgin and Child, and contours traced as if by a palsied hand.¹ The colouring is perhaps more hastily laid in than before, as the ground serves for the lights of the flesh-tints. But these are exactly the characteristics of the Adoration of the Magi at Trevi, which is perhaps the most superficial production that ever issued from Perugino's atelier.² As he was busy with it, the Vice-Legate of Perugia wrote to the Podestà of Trevi (September 1521), advising him that the prior of S. Agostino had appointed a valuer for the picture lately hung on the high altar, and asking him to apprise Perugino, who was then living at Trevi, of the fact ;—a precious letter this, which proves the date of the Adoration of the Magi, and that of the altarpiece of S. Agostino.³ With some difficulty, and not without tedious journeying, can this great work be reconstructed in imagination at the present day. It had two faces. On the centre of the first was the Nativity and a Pietà, and at the sides, SS. Sebastian and Irene, SS. Jerome and Mary Magdalen, all resting on two predella pieces. On the centre of the second was the Baptism of Christ, surmounted by an Eternal in glory ; at the sides, SS. Augustine and Philip, SS. James the Less, and one in episcopals, and two predella pieces. Eight rounds with the Four Prophets and the Four Evangelists, two others with the Angel and Virgin Annunciate, completed the whole. Of the first face, the Nativity, SS. Jerome and Magdalen, the predella, are in S. Agostino ;⁴ the Pietà in S. Pietro of Perugia ; the SS. Sebastian and Irene in the Gallery of Grenoble. Of the second face, the Baptism, the Eternal, the predella, are in S. Agostino ;⁵ the SS. Augustine and Philip in the Gallery of Toulouse ; SS. James the

Less and his companion in the Museum of Lyons. Two of the Four Prophets are in the Perugia Gallery. The two others are probably those in the Gallery of Nantes. The Four Evangelists are in S. Agostino,¹ together with the Angel and a copy of the Virgin Annunciate by Sanguinetti; the original of the Virgin, erroneously called S. Apollonia, in the Gallery of Strasburg.² None of the panels exhibit the earlier style of the master. The two principal ones of the Nativity and Baptism are not wanting in grandeur of composition or design, but the flat colour and its feeble rounding recall the Virgin of Mercy of 1512 at Bettona; and they might be assigned to that time, were not uncertainty created by their restored condition.³ The remainder, with the exception of the predella and the Four Evangelists, are similar to each other; they have all a powerful tone, and are drawn with little of the looseness apparent at Spello or Trevi. They recall the period when Perugino laboured in the Compagnia della Stella at Città della Pieve. The Pietà is remarkable for the bright transparence of its colour, as well as for the mastery with which the outlines are given with the brush at the last. The Saviour sits on the edge of the tomb; His body supported by Joseph of Arimathæa, His arms by the kneeling Virgin and Evangelist. The composition reminds one of the fine conceptions of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto Albertinelli. There is an elasticity in the naked frame, a precision in its proportions rare in Perugino.⁴ The Eternal in benediction, holding the orb, is noble in features, bold, natural, and dignified in movement, with a good contrast of light and shade, and a powerful warm tinge in the flesh.⁵ Similar praise may be awarded to the erect saints in couples.⁶ The predella and the Evangelists, possibly completed

The Baptism is of the same character and size as the Nativity, but has slender figures, and is much restored. An angel is at each side of the principal group in a landscape. In the sky is the Dove of the Holy Ghost between two seraphs. The blue sky is retouched. [No. 11] in the Perugia Gallery.

after Perugino's death, would perhaps deserve attention as productions of Manni or Eusebio di S. Giorgio,¹ were they not seriously injured by the effects of time. The altarpiece of S. Agostino may thus be assigned to an interval stretching from 1512 to 1517. It testifies that to the last Perugino could by personal exertion still yield a work of undoubted merit.

It is to be deplored that records should fail to reveal to us the details of his life in the final period of his pictorial activity. Were these to be discovered, we might perhaps affix to a picture in the Museum of Marseilles the same date as to the principal portions of that of S. Agostino. This was long an ornament of the monastery of S. Anna at Perugia, and was transferred in the eighteenth century to S. Maria fra Fossi.² It represents the Maries of scripture as mothers, Christ and many of the Apostles as infants. S. Anna recommends the Virgin, who sits on a wide throne with the Saviour on her knee; S. Simon and S. Thaddeus playing as babes on the step. To the left, S. Mary Cleopas caresses S. James the Less, and S. Joseph protects S. Joseph Justus. To the right, S. Mary Salome stands with S. John in her arms, the old S. Joachim behind her, and the boy S. James the Elder at her side. All the figures are of the size of life, very fairly arranged, and in good proportion. The drawing is grand; the handling free and bold; and the colour is laid on without much impasto, but with great breadth of touch and at one painting.³

Perugia, and in the church of Fontignano (1522), have been sawed from the walls on which they originally stood. The latter, which ought to have been kept in Perugia, is in the Kensington Museum;¹ and may be compared with the Madonna of the National Gallery to illustrate the difference between the art of Vannucci in his prime and on the eve of his decease. The marked inferiority of the Virgin and Saints at S. Agnese may be due to Eusebio da S. Giorgio.² At Fontignano, we observe, as it were, the flicker of an expiring flame, a heavy Infant Christ, but a fine type of the Madonna; a black wiry outline, broken at intervals and taken up anew with an uncertain hand; a feeble imitation of nature in the extremities, and a painful ease in the mode of dabbing on the local tones;—an injured relic this, yet superior to the Adoration of Trevi.³

As the aged artist laboured at Fontignano,⁴ industrious and indefatigable to the close, a plague broke out in the Perugian districts, and ravaged the whole country. A disgraceful panic overspread the land. It was decreed that the ceremonies of religion should be omitted in all cases where death ensued from the contagion.⁵ Perugino died, and was reads: "PETRUS DE CASTRO PLEBIS PINXIT," wood, life-size. Two or three vertical splits. Some heads are spotted, and the landscape behind the throne is in a great measure repainted.

An old copy of the picture is in the Castelbarco Gallery at Milan. An old copy also, on canvas, of SS. Simon and Thaddeus, assigned to Raphael (PASSAVANT, vol. ii., p. 5), is in the sacristy of S. Pietro at Perugia.

Finally a small old copy of the whole piece, on paper stretched on canvas, is in the Duke of Northumberland's Collection at Alnwick.

³ The figures in this fresco are above life-size. The whole piece was transferred to canvas, and remained till 1862 for sale in the shop of Signor Angelo Morrettini at Perugia. The Child lies in the centre of the foreground in front of the penthouse between the kneeling Virgin and S. Joseph. The shepherds kneel or stand to the right and left. Two angels, now mere outlines, fly above. The whole piece is much injured. A S. Roch and a S. Sebastian originally at the sides, are said to have been sold to one Conte della Porta.

buried in a field at Fontignano. His sons¹ piously contracted with the monks of S. Agostino (1524) that his body should be taken out of its unconsecrated resting-place to hallowed ground.² In return for this service they agreed to pay for the completion of unfinished portions of the altarpiece of their father.³ If, during the subsequent days of disturbance which history has chronicled, their tender solicitude was deceived, it is not to them that blame can be attached. The mortal shell of their father remained in the grave to which it had been first consigned, and no one knows where lie the bones of Pietro Perugino.⁴

A duty that now claims performance is, to notice works of Perugino (or bearing his name in various galleries) which have not been described in the foregoing narrative:—

*Perugia. S. Maria Nuova.*⁵—Transfiguration; wood, tempera. This is a reduction from the cartoon of the same subject used for the fresco of the Cambio; the figures being reversed. Old varnish has given a crystalline reddish appearance to it. Extensive retouching has also taken place. The predella [Nos. 3, 4, 5] contains the Nativity between the Annunciation and the Baptism (tempera). The beauty and freshness of its colour tell how fine the Transfiguration may have been. The compositions are the usual ones. The conception of the Annunciation recalls that of the Fano altarpiece; and the Virgin's movement is a Florentine reminiscence. The Baptism is in so far varied that two nudes are added to the right of the principal group. The Transfiguration and its predella must be assigned to Perugino's best time. (VASARI speaks of an Adoration of the Magi in S. M. Nuova at Perugia by Vannucci, vol. vi., p. 42. This Adoration we have noted in the life of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo.)

Perugia. S. Francesco de' Minori Conventuali—but now in Gallery. S. Francis between SS. John the Baptist and Jerome, Sebastian, and Antony of Padua; wood, oil, figures life-size. Has lost its lightness and transparency. The Baptist and Jerome, being the least damaged, have more of Perugino's character than the rest. The three others are coloured anew; and it is hard to decide whether the author be the master or his assistants.

Perugia. Confraternità di S. Bernardino—but now [No. 14] in Gallery. Canvas, oil, figures life-size. The Virgin sits in glory with the Infant between two angels. Two cherubs are above her head, and three others support the cloud on which she reposes. Eight brethren kneel in the middle of a landscape, in the distance of which there is a view of the city of Perugia. The

² It had been Perugino's wish that he might be buried in S. M. de' Servi at Florence; he had purchased a burial-place there for himself and his descendants in 1515. The record is in GUALANDI, Memorie, ubi sup., ser. iv., p. 115.

³ The record in full is in MARIOTTI, Lett., notes to p. 182 and following.

brethren are placed between the kneeling SS. Francis and Bernardino. This piece is greatly injured, yet full of softness and feeling. The types are like those of Perugino in 1495, though the canvas is probably of a later date.

Perugia. S. Francesco al Monte.—Fresco, lunette of the Nativity transferred to canvas, repeated from the cartoons of the same subject at the Cambio (life-size figures), half ruined, and abraded in colour throughout. The remains of an Adoration of the Magi, also transferred from the walls to canvas, offers but a few heads to view, the rest being obliterated. Some bits, however, are in possession of Signor Fantacchiotti at Perugia. A third lunette representing S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, rudely handled, of a red colour and ruined, but certainly not by Perugino, is in the sacristy. A fourth lunette mentioned by VASARI, vol. vi., p. 42, illustrating the Martyrdom of the Franciscans before the Sultan, is entirely gone.¹

Perugia. Galleria Connestabili.—In this collection there are [1866] fragments of frescoes: a Virgin and Child, almost of life-size, between two angels, in a landscape; a S. Ercolano and a shield of arms supported by two children. They are all much damaged, but they bear a Peruginesque stamp.²

Perugia. Gallery. [No. 4].—A figure of S. Giacomo della Marca by Perugino, distemper on canvas, of 1512 (circa).

Same Gallery. [No. 5].—Previously in S. Martino, a S. Jerome (canvas) of the same character as the foregoing.

Same Gallery. [? No. 24].—Originally in the kitchen of the Palazzo Pubblico. Three half-lengths of the Virgin and Child, between S. Joseph and another Saint, a little under life-size, of a light red colour, with spare shadow, one of the late and feeble productions of the master.

Perugia. S. Agostino.—Above the sacristy door, a panel of the Virgin, between SS. Bernardino and Tommaso da Villanuova, assigned by VASARI to Perugino (vol. vi., p. 45), but perhaps by Manni (see “Manni,” postea).³

Corciano, near Perugia.—Parish church, choir. Wood, life-size figures, oil. Assumption. The Virgin, of square form and short stature, with angels, in attitudes slightly differing from those of the Caraffa altarpiece at Naples. Flat rosy flesh colour, absence of chiaroscuro. Some gaudiness would prove that the pupils of Perugino had the chief part in the work. S. Thomas kneels below, between the Apostles, most of whom are repeated from those of the Ascension of Lyons. In the sacristy of the church a part of the predella with the Adoration of the Shepherds and the Annunciation exists. In the first, the S. Joseph is new.

Borgo S. Sepolcro. Duomo.—Ascension; wood, oil, in the left transept. This is a fair replica of that of Lyons, much restored, and red in consequence. (Done at Florence, says VASARI, vol. vi., p. 40.)

Naples. Duomo.—Assumption, painted for Cardinal Oliviero Caraffa, and sent to Naples from Florence (VASARI, vol. vi., p. 40). Wood, oil, arched above. The Virgin, in graceful movement, in an almond-shaped glory, between four players, two angels suspending the crown above her head, four beneath her feet with instruments. Below, S. Thomas looking from among the Apostles with whom, right, S. Paul holding the sword. To the left, Cardinal Caraffa, kneeling, is recommended by S. Januarius. The lower part of the foreground figures is entirely renewed, together with the landscape and sky. Perugino freely employed his aids on this large piece.

Naples. Museum. No. 267.—Virgin seated on a grass mound, in a landscape, in which the Magi and their suite form groups. (Wood, oil.) The Virgin is a little broad of shoulder for the smallness of her head, and affected in bend and expression; but the brown tone is admirably fused, and the small figures of the distance are like many afterwards produced by Raphael and Spagna.¹

Montefalco. S. Francesco.—Fresco of the Nativity, with the Eternal in a lunette. The first has been mentioned as a repetition of the subject at the Cambio. The Eternal is from the same cartoon as that in the Nunziatella at Foligno. Much drapery and other parts in the fresco have been repainted, ex. gr. in the left-hand angel, at the side of the Eternal, the Virgin, Child, and S. Joseph. The foreground also is new. Above the lunette, by the same hand, the figures of the Virgin and Angel Annunciate are parted by a monster. The handling of this fresco is not by Vannucci, the colour and drawing being hard and dry (see "Melanzio," postea).

Cantiano, near Gubbio and Cagli.—A Holy Family at this place (not seen) has recently [1866] been sold.²

Castiglione del Lago. S. Agostino.—Fresco, sawn away and transferred. Subject, the Virgin and Child on clouds, and two angels with the crown. Damaged fragment ascribed to Perugino, and stamped with the character of his school. It is said that frescoes and a Crucifix by Perugino exist in the Isola Maggiore, at the Osservanti, and in the church of S. Angelo nel Campo.³

Florence. Pitti Gallery. [No. 42].—Bust of Mary Magdalen, resting one hand on the other, of powerful tone, with bright brown shadows, fine (1496–1500); wood, oil.

Florence. Pitti. No. 219.—Wood, oil. Nativity on the model of that of the National Gallery, red and hard from restoring.⁴

Florence. Pitti. No. 340.—Wood, oil. Virgin and Child, with two female saints in rear, copy (old) of Perugino's authentic panel at Vienna (Belvedere, Room III., No. 12 Roman School).

Florence. Church of La Calza.—[Now in Uffizi, No. 1547.] The Crucified Saviour, with the Magdalen at the foot of the tree, between SS. Jerome, Francis, Giovanni Colombini and John the Baptist (wood, oil), assigned by VASARI, vol. vi., p. 36, to Perugino. There is something Peruginesque in the Baptist, who points at the Cross, in the S. Gio. Colombini and S. Francis, more of Signorelli in the S. Jerome and in the Magdalen (the latter is the best figure here). The picture is of good impasto, with occasional hatching in the shadows. The colour is chill and raw and unlike that of Perugino. The vulgar Christ is reminiscent of Filippino and Raffaellino del Garbo. It is difficult to ascribe this piece either to Perugino or to Signorelli.⁵

³ [Nothing from Perugino's brush exists in the Isola Maggiore now.]

Florence. S. Onofrio.—The Last Supper. Fresco. The Apostles sit at the Saviour's sides in the following order (from left to right). SS. James the Less, Philip, James the Elder, Andrew, Peter, the Saviour, John Evangelist, Bartholomew, Matthew, Thomas, Simon, and Thaddeus. In front alone, Iscariot. The figures are life-size. The composition is Florentine, modelled on that of Domenico Ghirlandaio at S. Marco of Florence; but the execution is Peruginesque. The distance, with the incident of Christ on the Mount, especially so. It is apparent that the fresco has been worked over. (It was for years so dim as to be almost invisible.) The colour of the table partly abraded, and partly renewed. Outlines of furniture on the cloth have been left. The green embroidery on the screen is new and out of harmony, the engraved outlines having become black. The flesh-tints are laid in with much impasto of a ruddy tinge, free and from a full brush. The drawing is poor, the lower limbs feebly rendered, the fingers of hands and feet incorrect. A great inequality is obvious in the types, some being finer than the rest, S. Thomas even Raphaelesque. An inscription on the hem of his dress might with some difficulty be forced into the following order: "RA . . . UR. . . ANNO MDV.," but there is a cross mark between the D and the V. The V itself has a stroke on the right limb, and the letters have been overrun. The heads of S. Thaddeus, S. James, and S. John are Peruginesque with Raphaelesque traits, those of S. Andrew and S. Philip not without beauty. The Saviour, like the rest, has a double balled forehead, prominent cheeks, and a parted chin in puffy contours exaggerated in S. Peter. The straight lined draperies have much of the Florentine, but they want style. The colour is that of a practised and coarse hand, which is neither Raphael's nor Perugino's. Amongst the names which suggest themselves, three may be selected. They are those of pupils of Vannucci, Giannicola Manni, Eusebio, and Gerino da Pistoia. The high forehead, the parted eyes, and puffy drawing of the head of Christ are like Manni's, ex. gr. in the Perugia Gallery and in the chapel of the Cambio. Eusebio is an imitator of Raphael with some of Manni's peculiarities, a marrowy touch and sharp flesh tone. Gerino da Pistoia is, however, more likely to have been employed at S. Onofrio than either. Although Vasari calls him a pupil of Pinturicchio, his panels at Pistoia are those of a disciple of Vannucci. In his picture of 1509 at S. Pietro of Pistoia, many figures recall Raphael's first manner, and remind one of the fresco of S. Onofrio. His colour is also of the ruddy kind noticed in the latter. But further, the studies for four figures in the Last Supper have been preserved (they are on coloured paper, touched in white, exhibited in the room), and testify in favour of Gerino as against Raphael. A painted frame surrounds the Last Supper. Within it are five busts of friars, of which the three highest are Florentine and earlier in date than the two others or than the Supper. This circumstance would confirm the belief that Gerino, if he be the person here engaged, repeated anew a composition which existed before on the same wall; and this presumption is strengthened again by the existence of an engraving in the library of Gotha which has been by Passavant given to Perugino (he assumed it to be taken from the fresco of S. Onofrio as it now stands), but which is a Florentine work of the close of the fifteenth century. The engraving reproduces the attitudes, action, and extremities of the fresco in its present condition, but in a Florentine, not an Umbrian style. The architecture is not a colonnade and screen, but a closed room with windows. On the end of the seats are : a rider followed by a page, and the Capture on the Mount, and these are replaced in the fresco by an arabesque ornament. The question arises, where was the fresco of which the Gotha engraving was a copy ? Was it the original at S. Onofrio which some Peruginesques repainted at a later period under orders from Perugino to whom the commission had been entrusted ? (VASARI mentions the existence of a Dead Christ between the Virgin and Evangelist, in S. Piero Maggiore, vol. vi., p. 39. BORGHINI states in his Riposo, vol. ii., note to p. 151, that it had come in his time into the Cappella Medici. The Annotators, VASARI, vol. vi., p. 39, tell us that it is now in the Palazzo Albizzi in Borgo degli Albizzi at Florence.)

Rome. Palazzo Sciarra. No. 26.—Wood, oil, life-size. S. Sebastian at the pillar in front of an arcade, through which a landscape is seen. On the basement one reads : "SAGITTI TUÆ INFIXÆ SUNT MICHĪ." A genuine Perugino.¹

Rome. Palazzo Colonna.—Wood, oil. S. Jerome Penitent, in a landscape, much injured, attributed by VERMIGLIOLI, Vita di Pinturicchio, p. 113, to Pinturicchio ; is painted in Perugino's manner, but may be due to Spagna.

Rome. Galleria Doria.—Room II. No. 80. S. Sebastian at the pillar (half life-size), named Perugino, is a fine panel by Marco Basaiti.

Rome. Galleria Borghese. No. 34.—Virgin with the Child erect on her knee ; wood, oil, named Perugino. The hard execution and glassy colour might prove it to be by Gio. Battista Bertucci of Faenza.

Rome. Gallery of Pictures at the Capitol. No. 78.—Wood, oil. Virgin and Child in a niche, between SS. John Baptist, Paul, and Peter and Andrew, John Evangelist, and Francis (under life-size). This is not by Perugino, but reminds one of the painters of Bologna and the Marches, being a mixture of Cotignola and Francia. The three saints, the Baptist, Paul, and Peter, are by a different hand from the rest. A long inscription closes with the date of 1513.

Rome. Gallery of Pictures at the Capitol. No. 127.—Called Perugino. Round of the Virgin and Child, feeble and red in tone, by a follower of Lorenzo di Credi.

Bologna. Gallery. No. 197.—Originally in the Cappella Vizzani at S. Giovanni in Monte (VASARI, vol. vi., p. 40 ; ORSINI, Vita, ubi sup., p. 197). The Virgin in glory ; wood, oil. The Virgin in a tender attitude holds the naked Infant with graceful action. Her glory of cherubs' heads is supported on clouds. She is attended by two angels in flight. SS. Michael, Catherine of Alexandria, Apollonia, and John Evangelist stand in devotion below. The S. Michael is a little slender and stiff, but has a good face. The movement of S. Catherine's head is finely foreshortened, the Evangelist grandiose in movement as in the fresco of the Cambio. The flesh-tones are powerful and well fused, and of a lower substance than the draperies. The picture belongs to Perugino's fine time, being brighter in colour than the altarpiece of the Vatican (1496), browner than the Madonna of S. Pietro Martire (1498). The arrangement of the group of the Virgin and Child is very charming and original, condition excellent, signed : "PETRUS PERUGINUS PINXIT." The figures are life-size.

Bologna. S. Martino Maggiore.—Assumption, by Perugino; according to MEZZANOTTE, pp. 37–8, and ORSINI, p. 199, is by Lorenzo Costa.¹

Venice. Academy. No. 265.—Previously in the Manfrini Collection. Christ Washing the Feet of the Apostles. This piece is certainly not by Perugino, but by a Lombard, and has something of Boccaccino.

Venice. Collection of the Duchess of Berri.—Round, Virgin, Child, and youthful Baptist, feeble and not by Perugino.

Venice. Manfrini Collection. No. 322.—Round, wood, oil. Virgin with the Child, reading from a book held by an angel, with a second angel in rear, of small merit, by a feeble Peruginesque following the school of Manni and Eusebio.²

London. National Gallery. [No. 181].—Wood, tempera. The Virgin, Child, and S. John. Landscape distance; bought by Mr. Beckford at Perugia. This panel, of pale bright tone, is very carefully executed and signed on the border of the Virgin's dress: "PETRUS PERUGINUS." If it be admitted that Spagna was Perugino's pupil and the companion of Raphael, one might suppose that he had a share in this work, which shows more conscientiousness than freedom of hand. Still it has much of the spirit of the master.

London. Lord Taunton.—Formerly at Stoke Park. Wood, oil. Christ, supported on the tomb, reminiscent of that of S. Agostino, inscribed: "SEPULCRUM CHRISTI. PETRUS PERUSINUS PINXIT." Originally in Venice and, before it was retouched throughout, undoubtedly one of Perugino's fair creations.

London. Collection of Alexander Barker, Esq.—Predella; tempera on canvas, in five parts, numbered at Manchester Nos. 70–4. "Noli me Tangere," conceived without the religious poetry of the earlier time. Christ stops in His walk, leans His left hand on a stick, and listens to the Magdalen, who kneels in prayer. In the distance between the two, the sepulchre guarded by angels, right and left a couple in converse. The warm tone of the tempera is like that of the predella of the Transfiguration in Perugia Gallery, or that of the Louvre distemper of 1505.—The Resurrection. Christ rises with the banner out of the sepulchre, as in the Rouen predella. In the distance to the left the guard runs as in the Vatican Resurrection and Munich predella (in the latter the position in the picture is reversed). In the distance to the right, another guard, seated, sleeps with his hands on his shield. In the foreground, right, a fine youth asleep leaning on his target, counterpart of that in the Resurrection at the Vatican called the portrait of Raphael, and with a slight variation, like the same figure, bearing the name of Raphael on the target, in the Munich predella. In the foreground to the left, a young soldier in helmet and breastplate as in the Vatican Resurrection and Munich predella, but with a shield behind his left arm (at the Vatican there is no shield; at Munich the shield is on the right arm).—The Samaritan Woman at the Well. The Saviour, conventional and ill-conceived. The Samaritan woman, graceful in movement.—The Baptism of Christ. The usual arrangement, but in that respect as well as for proportions more particularly akin to the fresco of the Nunziatella at Foligno.

² [No longer traceable.]

The distance a fine landscape.—Nativity, the familiar composition of that subject, with a neat type of the Virgin, warmly coloured and firmly handled.¹

London. Late Northwick Collection. No. 257.—No. 75 at Manchester, and originally at Lucca, wood tempera, life-size. The Virgin and Child, under a dais festooned with corals and flowers, between SS. Jerome and Peter, hasty, brownish red in flesh tone, and somewhat dimmed by age. The type of the Virgin is poor (mantle much restored).

London. Dudley House.—Two rounds of the Virgin and Evangelist in one frame, with a modern inscription: "PETRUS PERUSINUS PINXIT." Unimportant, and of the school.

London. Collection of the late H. A. J. Munro, Esq. (Mrs. Butler Johnstone).—Wood, oil. Crucifixion, the Virgin and S. John, and SS. Jerome, and Francis kneeling at the sides. This picture is assigned to Perugino, but has the character of Tiberio d'Assisi (small).

Same Collection.—Small panel. S. Francis receiving the Stigmata; is in the style of Timoteo Viti.

Hampton Court. No. 355.—Portrait of a lady, bust; wood, oil. School of Francia and Lorenzo Costa; recalls Boateri, though beneath him in execution (see a Holy Family by this rare Bolognese at the Pitti).

Hampton Court. No. 233.—A female Saint bearing a Cross. Wood, oil, the flesh tint abraded. This piece is also Bolognese, and brings to mind the manner of Chiodarolo, another follower of Francia and Costa.

Hampton Court. No. 582.—Portrait of a gentleman, small panel, representing a man in full front dressed in black, with a bridle bit in his hand. It is not by Perugino, nor by any Italian.

Dulwich. Gallery. Nos. 306-7.—S. Antony of Padua and S. Francis. These two predella saints are part of Raphael's altarpiece for S. Antonio di Perugia, and have been properly catalogued under his name after having been long under that of Perugino.

Bowood. Seat of Lord Lansdowne.—Virgin and Child; wood, oil, half-length; much injured by restoring. A feeble production of Perugino's followers.

Panshanger. Seat of Earl Cowper.—Wood, oil, half-length; life-size portrait of a man, aged about fifty, of melancholy face, but regular, and somewhat long, form. He stands leaning both hands on a book on a parapet. Behind him a landscape. This portrait, at first sight suggesting the name of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, is hard in drawing, without brightness or transparency, and of a low livid tone. The shadows are dark and tending to purple, with a sudden transition from them to the lights. These would be characteristic features of Innocenzo da Imola.

Gosford House. Seat of Earl Wemyss (Scotland).—Virgin, Child, and youthful Baptist in a landscape, much injured (wood, oil, half the size of life). This seems to be by an imitator of Perugino.

Paris. Louvre. [No. 1565].—Half-length, Virgin and Child between SS. Joseph and Catherine (replica, with the exception of the S. Joseph, of that at Vienna, Belvedere, Room III., Italian Schools, No. 12), injured in the lower parts, but broad and warm.

Paris. Louvre. [No. 1566].—Round, of S. Paul, hasty and feeble, light, and of the master's late period.

Paris. Louvre. No. 441.¹—Nativity; wood. The composition may have its origin in the sketch-books of Perugino. It is the same as that of the Vatican Nativity known as "Presepio della Spineta," attributed to Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Raphael jointly, but clearly by Spagna. At the Louvre, the cartoon is reversed and the angels kneel. The character is that of the Adoration given to Raphael in the Museum of Berlin. The same remarks apply to the numbers at the Louvre registered in the "School" of Perugino—Nos. 447, 448, and 449.

Paris. Louvre. Musée Napoleon III. (ex-Campana Collection). No. 196.—Now classed in the Umbrian School, at Rome called Perugino. Eleven Apostles in a boat. There is something Venetian here, as the catalogue justly states.

Caen. Museum. No. 2.—Wood, oil. S. Jerome Penitent, in a landscape, less than half the size of life. At the foot of the Cross before which the saint kneels, one reads with difficulty: "PETRUS PERUSINUS PINXIT." Completely flayed.

Nantes. Museum.—Two panels (rounds) representing the Prophets Jeremiah and Isaiah. (Not seen, but, no doubt, part of the altarpiece of S. Agostino. See antea.)

Bordeaux. Museum. [No. 147].—Virgin and Child between SS. Jerome and Augustine (not seen by the authors), probably the same described by CONSTANTINI, Guida, p. 138, as in S. Agostino of Perugia, and said by him to be by a pupil of Perugino.²

S. Petersburg. Collection of Count Sergei Stroganoff.—Half-length, Virgin with the Infant standing on her knee, in a landscape (wood, transferred to canvas), pretty and graceful; taken from a design by Perugino, but in the mixed mode derived from him and from Raphael by a later scholar, such as Eusebio di S. Giorgio or Gerino da Pistoia in his youth, indeed not unlike the latter's manner in an altarpiece of 1509, at Pistoia (see postea, "Gerino").

S. Petersburg. Collection of H.I.H. the Grand-Duchess Marie, widow of the Duke of Leuchtenberg.—A Virgin and Child composed like the foregoing (wood, figures one-third life-size), and evidently of Perugino's school, is to be found here (injured).

Same Collection.—Christ in the tomb supported by two female saints, and S. John Evangelist (wood, small). The composition is Perugino's, the execution by a journeyman.

Vienna. Belvedere. [No. 32].—Wood, oil. Virgin, Child, and two female saints, replica, with the exception of the female saint to the left of the Madonna, of No. 443, at the Louvre. The colour is bright and powerful signed: "PETRUS PERUSINUS PINXIT." A replica again is No. 340, at the Pitti of Florence (an old copy).

Vienna. Belvedere. [No. 24].—Baptism of Christ (small), a copy of no great age (wood).

Vienna. Lichtenstein Gallery.—The Nativity (round, wood, oil). The Virgin kneels in prayer before the Infant supported on a sack by an angel on His knees. To the right the shepherds dance. The same idea as to composition as at the Pitti (No. 219) and as in the Pavia piece in the National

Gallery. The landscape is more like Raphael's than Vannucci's. The forms are clean, the faces fairly expressive, and the handling is careful, though below that of Perugino, and nearer to that of Eusebio or Domenico Alfani. On the ground to the right one reads in gold the inscription: "PETRUS FERRUSINUS (sic) P."

Vienna. Harrach Gallery. No. 235.—Wood, round. The Virgin and Child, S. M. Magdalen and another Saint; adaptation as to arrangement of the subject in the Louvre panel, No. 443, repainted, but an imitation of Perugino with the modern signature of: "PETRUS PERUGINUS FEC. MDVIII."

Dresden. Museum. No. 22.—Head of a young S. Crispinus; rude work in the style of Melanzio.

Dresden. Museum. No. 23.—S. Roch, a pretty little thing, but not by Perugino.

Berlin. Museum. No. 146.—Wood, oil. The Virgin enthroned with the Child in benediction, between SS. James the Less and Antony the Hermit, Francis and Bruno. Perugino's design and type by some one in the shop, perhaps by Tiberio d'Assisi. The colour is dull and hard.

Berlin. Museum. No. 140.—Round of the Virgin and Child, between two angels, by an imitator of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo.

Berlin. Museum. No. 138.—Round. Nativity, better than No. 140, but raw and poor; of Perugino's school.

Munich. Pinakothek. Cabinets. No. 581.—Tempera, wood, called Raphael. Baptism of Christ, usual arrangement, much injured and repainted. Amongst the drawings in the Staedel collection at Frankfort, there is one of the Baptism of Christ, with an angel at each side. This drawing is assigned to Pietro Perugino. It differs somewhat from the picture at Munich. On the back of this drawing is a S. Martin dividing his cloak and giving it to the beggar (the latter wears the horns of Satan). These figures are drawn like those of Raphael in his youth, to whom Passavant would give them. There is no ground in this for attributing to Raphael the Munich Baptism, which is clearly by Perugino. Purchased from the Inghirami heirs at Volterra, and transferred, in 1818, to Ludwig I. of Bavaria.

Munich. Pinakothek. Cabinets. No. 593.—So-called Raphael. The Resurrection. The Saviour rises from the tomb (Vatican and Mr. Barker's predella). To the right the soldier runs away. In the foreground, right, the sleeping guard, on the border of his shield twice repeated: "RAFAEL SANTIUS." This inscription is of doubtful originality, the piece being much injured and restored. The sleeping soldier to the left is the same as in the Barker predella. The signature of Raphael, even though considered genuine by PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. i., p. 64, cannot be sustained, the panel being obviously Perugino's.

Munich. Pinakothek. Saal [No. 1034].—Wood, oil. The Virgin, life-size, stands between SS. John Evangelist and Nicholas, in rear of the Infant, who lies on the middle of the foreground; fine, very devotional, and of bright transparent flesh tone. The child very plump. Purchased in Paris in 1815.

Munich. Pinakothek. Saal. No. 550.—The Virgin and Child; wood, oil, much damaged by cleaning. Disagreeable mask of the Virgin; not a good production of the master. Bought at Florence, in 1831, for King Ludwig I.

Munich. Pinakothek. Saal [No. 1034].—Vision of S. Bernard. There is a copy of this Vision in S. Spirito at Florence, the original being given by VASARI to Raffaellino del Garbo (vol. vii., p. 193). But the picture here is a genuine Perugino, much altered by cleaning, youthful and fresh in the forms, and powerful in tone. Bought of the Capponi family at Florence in 1829-30 for King Ludwig I.

Altenburg. Lindenau Collection. [Nos. 114, 115].—S. Helen—wood, oil, in a niche; S. Antony of Padua—wood, tempera, in a niche; both life-size, and perhaps a part of the sides of the altarpiece at the SS. Annunziata de' Servi in Florence. These are pleasing and of Perugino's later time; hasty and slight in execution (the tops of the niches have been cut down).

Frankfort. Stael Gallery. [No. 16].—Wood, oil. The Virgin holds the Infant on her knee. He turns towards the young S. John, in prayer, to the Virgin's left. The figures are finely proportioned and grandly designed. The tenderness and feeling in the Infant and Baptist rival those imparted by Raphael to the Terranuova Madonna at Berlin. The sky is slightly injured.

Brussels. Museum. No. 273.—Round of the Virgin and Child; wood. Not in Perugino's manner.

Brussels. Museum.—Not catalogued. Virgin, Child, and S. John, almost life-size; very poor, and with difficulty to be ascribed to a follower of Giannicola Manni.¹

Perugia.—Duomo, frescoes in Cappella de' Oradini, destroyed in 1795 (ORSINI, Vita, ubi sup., p. 185).

A fine work by Perugino—though generally ascribed to Raphael—is the so-called "Galitzin Triptych" of the Crucifixion with Saints, in the Hermitage Gallery at St. Petersburg. This work was once in S. Domenico at S. Gimignano.

CHAPTER XI

BERNARDINO PINTURICCHIO

PINTURICCHIO, the partner of Pietro Perugino, has been described by Vasari with unusual bitterness as more favoured by fortune than gifted by nature or education.¹ Rumohr mitigates the severity of this judgment, at the expense of Pinturicchio's character, and says, we must discriminate between the fresh creations of his early time and the empty dexterity of a later period in which everything is sacrificed to the lucre of gain.² Yet his youthful productions are missing, and there are no clear traces of works undertaken on his sole account previous to the completion of the Sixtine Chapel.³ No certainty is attainable regarding his birth, unless we accept Vasari's statement that he was fifty-nine years of age when he died.⁴ Assuming this, he was born in 1454, and his independent career began at thirty. He was christened Bernardino, to which were added Betti (Benedicti) Biagi; but his acquaintance often called him Sordicchio because of a deafness and the paltriness of his appearance.⁵ He was best known, however, as Pinturicchio; and he probably commended the use of this alias, in order that he might be distinguished from a Perugian contemporary, also called Bernardino, whose mediocre pictures are often confounded with his.

Pinturicchio is the genuine representative of Perugian art as it was felt and carried on in the ateliers of Bonfigli and Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. He never mastered the difficulties of oil medium, but remained almost invariably true to the system of tempera and to the customs of the old Umbrians. His Virgin and Child in the collection of Sir Anthony Stirling in London is one of the first links that connects his manner with that of his predecessors. It is the earliest of his works with which we are acquainted, a panel in which forms and types, style of drawing, and handling, only differ so far from Fiorenzo's, that they receive an additional

When Pinturicchio went to Rome, he did so as Perugino's partner. Vasari says, that they laboured in company at the Sixtine,¹ and the probability of this statement has already been discussed. As the chapel approached completion, perhaps before it was finished, Pinturicchio had gained access to Cardinal Domenico della Rovere, whose most pressing care after his elevation to the purple (1479)² had been to erect a palace in Borgo Vecchio, on the front of which his arms were painted by Pinturicchio.³ His next object was the adornment of a chapel dedicated to S. Jerome, the first of its kind in S. M. del Popolo which Sixtus IV. had begun rebuilding,⁴ on the plans of Baccio Pontelli. On the altar-face Pinturicchio placed the Adoration of the Shepherds, with his patron in full robes on his knees before the new-born Christ. In five lunettes he represented scenes from the life of S. Jerome, introducing a number of slender personages into them with such skill as one might expect from a man who had witnessed the progress of Perugino. He gave a graceful movement and a fair shape to the Infant Saviour in the mode afterwards repeated at Spello and elsewhere. His landscapes are already a medley of rocks of fretful curves tunnelled into holes, and clothed with spare verdure, a permanent feature in him, and essentially characteristic of the Umbrian.⁵

About the time when these frescoes were completed, Giovanni della Rovere, Duke of Sora and Sinigaglia, died (1485). He had also built an oratory in S. Maria del Popolo, with the intention of being buried there. His monument, as well as the rest of the sacred space, was decorated by Pinturicchio, probably at the request of Domenico, or of Cardinal Giuliano, the deceased's brother. At the altar, the Virgin and Child are enthroned between SS. Francis, Augustine, and two other friars, the third Person of the Trinity above in a lunette half-length, giving the blessing, the whole in a rich white marble tabernacle, bearing the Della Rovere arms.

³ VASARI, vol. v., p. 268. The palace was contiguous to that which Bramante afterwards built for Raphael on the Piazza Rusticucci. See Leo X.'s brief ratifying the sale of Raphael's house in 1520, a record in which the exact position of Domenico's palace is described. *Giornale degli Archiv. ⁵ In the distance of the Nativity, the procession of the Magi is given. To the right, the hut with the ox and the ass. The blue mantle of the Virgin is repainted. The blue dress of one shepherd, the yellow one of another, the heads of all, are in ruin. The blue starred ceiling with its new colour increases the bad effect created by the damaged condition of the fresco. The incidents from the life of S. Jerome are much damaged.

THE ELEVATION OF ENEA SILVIO PICCOLOMINI TO THE PAPACY AS PIUS II.

PINTURICCHIO.

Duomo, Siena.

To the left, the Virgin is taken to heaven by angels, whilst the Apostles stand about the tomb. In the pointed alcove of Giovanni's monument Christ is supported in the sepulchre by two angels, and in the remaining lunettes five scenes from the life of the Virgin are depicted. These pieces are in a framework of fictive architecture—columns supporting a real cornice and resting on imitated plinths that start from a skirting filled with chiaroscuros. Between the plinths a feigned panelling encloses simulated bas-reliefs in monochrome, of S. Peter before the Emperor at Rome and his Crucifixion, S. Augustine surrounded by various personages, the Martyrdom of S. Catherine, the Accusation and Decapitation of S. Paul. In the midst of once rich ornaments of foliage and children in the vaulted ceiling are the remnants of four busts of prophets and an angel playing, in rounds, almost obliterated by damp.¹

Whilst the failings handed down by Fiorenzo are illustrated in the feeble aspect and drooping shoulders of the Virgin at the altar, the lower attainments of a pupil are apparent in the small heads, in the thin forms, and broken draperies of the angels of the Assumption. The Nativity is a composition often repeated later by Pinturicchio's disciples at Siena. The scenes from the lives of the saints, in monochrome, are the best in the chapel as regards arrangement, action, and proportion of figures. They reveal Pinturicchio's contact with Signorelli and the temporary transmission of some of his energetic feeling into the weaker frame of his Perugian contemporary.²

Cardinal Costa was another dignitary who had founded a chapel in S. M. del Popolo after he received the hat, in 1479.³ For him Pinturicchio furnished half-lengths of the Doctors of the Church in four lunettes, and a scutcheon supported by two children in a fifth—all much abraded by the effects of time.

The most important and successful of Pinturicchio's commissions in this church was, however, the laying out of the choir-ceiling, at the request of Giuliano della Rovere,⁴ which he did with masterly distribution and pleasant colouring. The Coronation of the Virgin in a large central medallion; the Four Doctors of the Church standing in niches in the angles, with a recumbent Sibyl in a shovel-frame above them, and an Evangelist in a round between each Sibyl are a telling proof that Pinturicchio possessed the Umbrian taste for decoration, in the absence of higher qualities essential to the production of great masterpieces. His labours in S. Maria del Popolo were closed in the chapel of Lorenzo Cibo, founded in 1486, but afterwards renewed by a second cardinal of the same name.

The family of which Lorenzo was a member was one of the most potent in these years at Rome, because its head occupied the chair of S. Peter under the name of Innocent VIII. Scarcely less enterprising as a builder than his predecessor, Sixtus IV., this pontiff raised the Palace of Belvedere from its foundations; and in the rooms subsequently transformed by Pius VII. into the gallery of statues called Museo Pio Clementino, Pinturicchio covered the walls with a panorama of the principal cities of Italy, the entrance-door being adorned with a fresco of the Madonna.¹ The changes introduced since then have left but formless vestiges behind, respecting which one can only say that the Perugian character of Pinturicchio's time is still traceable in them.

A more complete destruction awaited the frescoes executed for Sciarra Colonna in the Palazzo di S. Apostolo, and an altarpiece of the Madonna ordered by Innocent VIII. for a chapel in S. Pietro.²

In the midst of these occupations Pinturicchio was perhaps surprised, in the spring of 1491, by the reappearance of Perugino in Rome, in the employ of Giuliano della Rovere. The protracted and fruitless negotiations between Vannucci and the Orvietans, which now took place, ended as we have seen by the call of Pinturicchio to Orvieto, where he agreed to paint two Prophets and two Doctors of the Church, near the choir of the cathedral. Having finished these, as, in the absence of the figures themselves, we infer from the record of a payment of fifty ducats,³ he was put to further works in one of the tribunes, which, it would seem, consumed a great quantity of blue and gold. The superintendents discovered, indeed, to their dismay that they had exhausted the means of purchasing more. In the absence of these indispensable materials, Pinturicchio protested that he could not go on any longer, and in a legally drawn up paper (Nov. 17, 1492) declared himself free from any responsibility that might attach to him in consequence of his not fulfilling the contract within the specified time. One of those growling spirits, which are so frequently to be found in councils like that of Orvieto, was for turning Pinturicchio out at once, as a squanderer of the Church moneys and an incapable artist. But more generous views prevailed ; and Pinturicchio remained. Three weeks, however, expired before an order was placed on the minutes (Dec. 14, 1492) "for raising funds to buy blue and gold for the ceilings" ; and it is probable that, rather than be idle any longer, Pinturicchio took horse and returned to his old residence at Rome.¹

During his absence, Alexander VI. had been elected to succeed Innocent VIII., and had ordered a suite of rooms in the Vatican to be built for his special use. Pinturicchio was instantly engaged to decorate the first that was ready, and not only finished it, but five others at intervals within two years. This suite, known as the Apartamento Borgia, has undergone very little alteration since that time. The first room, or Sala, exactly beneath the present Hall of Constantine, was denuded of Pinturicchio's frescoes by order of Leo X., and redecorated by Giovanni da Udine and Perino del Vaga.² Five others, occupied at present as a library, are still in their original condition. Of these, three, communicating with each other through the Sala, are lighted severally by one window opening on the Cortile di Belvedere, and are longitudinally divided by an arch resting on pilasters ; the fourth has also a window facing the Cortile, but no division ; the fifth faces the Cortile at a less obtuse angle than the rest.

First Room, next to the Sala of Giovanni da Udine and Perino. On the wall facing the window, and divided into two lunettes, the Annunciation and the Nativity, with the papal arms between them, in a rosette supported by three angels. In the two lunettes to the right, the Adoration of the Magi and the Resurrection, with a fine kneeling portrait of Alexander VI. in the latter. In one lunette, to the left, the Assumption and a cardinal kneeling by the tomb, about which the Apostles stand. In one lunette, above the window, the Ascension, and in the two ceilings a tasteful ornament of animals and devices on a blue ground, and eight half-lengths in round. None of the compositions are remarkable. Some, as the Nativity and Ascension, are ill-arranged. A certain breadth in the draperies of the Annunciate Angel reveals Pinturicchio's partial familiarity with the Florentine examples of Domenico Ghirlandaio or Lippi. Coarseness characterises many forms in the Nativity. A certain rudeness is apparent in the execution, and the dull grey colour is but slightly relieved by light and shadow. Coldness and lifelessness are combined in the colour and figures of the Adoration. Want of style and minuteness of detail are to be noted in the draperies of the Resurrection, and the Redeemer is altogether poor. The Ascension, being in the dark, is doubtless by assistants. The best preserved subject is the Adoration, the worst the Resurrection.

Second Room. This room is better done than the previous one, not only with respect to composition, but as regards the successful design and the correct handling of the several parts. The ceilings are filled with mythological incidents in triangular spaces formed by diagonals, with the papal arms as the central intersection. In the vaulting of the arch which divides the room, episodes are neatly placed in gilt stucco ornaments. Opposite the window the whole field is occupied by S. Catherine arguing before Maximian, the latter well proportioned, the former delicate and dignified, the action in both not too highly strained. Amongst the listeners in turbans and quaint costume, one presents his back to the spectator and points to a passage in a book held up by a kneeling page. Most of the heads seem portraits. The draperies are ill-cast and bundled into superfluous straight folds. The buildings in the background are gilt stucco, and an arch in the distance stands out in relief. Two lunettes of the wall to the right of the foregoing are filled with S. Antony sharing bread with S. Paul the Hermit, and the Visitation. The first is well put together and powerfully coloured, and the movement of the Saints breaking the bread are natural and lively. In the second, there is more beauty in single groups of females spinning and sewing than unity in the distribution. An aged woman seated and a girl twirling a reel as she walks, are particularly deserving of attention. The wall to the left contains the Martyrdom of SS. Barbara and Giuliana, and S. Barbara flying from her father. A fountain in the former is raised and gilt. The S. Barbara in the latter is graceful, slender, and rather affected. Above the door on the same side is a half-length of the Virgin surrounded by cherubs' heads on gold ground. She is teaching the Infant to read in an open book. The head is said to be the portrait of Giulia Farnese, but VASARI's description (vol. v., p. 269) includes a portrait of Alexander VI. in adoration which is not to be found here. Above the window, there is a plain and well-intended composition of S. Sebastian not without breadth in the nude, but much restored, more so, indeed, than any part of these paintings which have all undergone more or less retouching.

Third Room. The lunettes of this room are entirely occupied by allegorical impersonations of Grammar, Dialectics, Rhetoric, Geometry, Arithmetic, Music, and Astrology which are dealt with in a higher style of art than before, with a touch here and there of Peruginesque character. The heads are frequently successful in selection of type, the draperies often of satisfactory flow; yet one still traces in most parts the pupil of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. A figure which most recalls Perugino is one holding a sword in its right hand, and a golden ball in its left, with a head reminiscent of those in the Hague Madonna at the Louvre. In front are children and adults; amongst the latter one bearded and draped in the flowing folds of a mantle after the fashion of Vannucci. Music is of a refined form, enthroned and playing the violin, whilst two angels in rear supporting a tapestry, two boys playing on the steps, and others around similarly occupied, are handsome Peruginesque conceptions. This fresco alone might prove that Pinturicchio was the assistant of Perugino in the Moses and Zipporah at the Sixtine Chapel. The sacred and profane subjects in the vaulting of the arch, the parting of Jacob and Laban, Lot's departure from Sodom, an allegory of Justice, Trajan and the widow, and another episode, are not in Pinturicchio's manner, and, if originally by him, have been altered by a painter of the close of the sixteenth century.¹

Fourth room. The frescoes here have hitherto been omitted without just cause from the catalogue of Pinturicchio's works in the Appartamento Borgia. They consist of twenty-four half-lengths. In the centre of the ceiling are the words: "ALEXANDER BORGIA P. P. VI. FUNDAVIT," and on a cartello in the ornament are the ciphers: "MCCCCLXXXIIIH."

Fifth room. The walls are divided into three lunettes, each containing a male and female couple in converse seen to the knees. Most of these are repainted. In the spandrls of the springing curve of the ceiling are the Planets, with small allusive incidents beneath them; as, people fishing below the Luna, persons reading and talking under the Mercury, and (severally, accompanying the Venus, Apollo, Mars, Jove, and Saturn), a wedding, a pope and a king seated, a fight for the possession of a female, a hunt with falcons, and a massacre. As compositions, these subjects, where uninjured by restoring, rival the beauty of those in the Cambio of Perugia, and are adorned with equal taste. In small rounds are the papal arms and other pictorial illustrations. The spirit of these pieces differs but immaterially from that of the rest of the series. The name of the Borgia, "A. P. M. VI." on a cartello in one of the curves, shows that they date from the same period; and they may be assigned to Pinturicchio.²

Vast as these decorations are, they were completed between the close of 1492 and the middle of 1494, an interval which might at first sight appear too short for one person, were he to spend every day without rest; yet Pinturicchio did not devote the whole of his time to it. He was subjected by the Orvietans to a pressure like that previously exerted on Perugino; and though a brief from Alexander, dated the 29th of March 1493, required them to wait till "his palace" was done;³ they succeeded in bringing him back for a while, so that the Pope was obliged, in March 1494, to send for him again.⁴ During that year and 1495, the rooms of the Vatican received their last adornments, and a large series, of which not a wreck remains, was painted in the Castle of S. Angelo.⁵

² [All these frescoes were done under Pinturicchio's guidance, but the execution is, in many instances, evidently due to his assistants. According to Mr. Berenson, only the following are from his hand:—

First Room (beginning east entrance).—Assumption (in great part); Annunciation (in great part); Nativity (in small part); Resurrection (only the portrait of Alexander VI.).

Second Room.—Stories of SS. Giuliana, Barbara, Antony Abbot, and the Hermit Paul (in great part); Visitation, S. Catherine disputing with the Doctors (entirely by him); Ceiling decorations (in small part).

Third Room.—Arithmetic, Geometry (both in great part).]

The secret of Pinturicchio's fecundity lay, as Vasari truly says, in the great practice which he had gained, and in the employment of numerous assistants;¹ and this very facility in carrying out great commissions at a quick pace, for patrons desirous of obtaining and enjoying whatever they undertook without delay, may be the true cause why he was so much in request. His performances at Rome were those of a man without genius, living at a period when great precepts were generally known and used. They were good as representing the skilled labour of art, without great claims to admiration as embodying exceptional talents. As a composer, he had no fertility of original thought. He was biassed by different influences at various times on that account; but these did not enable him to conceal his deficiencies, although he frequently succeeded in single episodes. He had, in the main, the faults and the qualities of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo, corrected later by the companionship of Perugino. A more pleasing system of landscape-painting and more meditative types were, no doubt, derived from the latter, yet Pinturicchio never seriously rivalled Vannucci. His very best landscapes are overcharged with details, and full of minute touches; and his contemporaries, who were certainly not partial to the works of the Netherlanders, taunted him with being a Fleming in habits.² His models of Virgins are, like Fiorenzo's, slender, yet not free from heaviness—modest and timid, yet not completely refined; those of children and angels are in the same character, combining sentiment with coarseness, the heads covered by more than luxuriant crops of frizzly hair. Pinturicchio adopts the Umbrian moulds from custom, and sometimes gives them a pleasing tenderness, but the heart is not engaged in the work as it is in Raphael's. As a portrait-painter he excels, and he gives with fidelity the features and expression of his sitter. His draperies are very full, but seldom perfectly cast; and it often happens that the folds are both numerous and out of place. His drawing is broken, asserting its form less by curves than by frequent junctions of lines at angles of varying obtuseness. In perspective he naturally acquired what Perugino knew, and he followed the progress of his age as an architectural draughtsman. Ornament is applied with skill, but the combination of gilt stucco with fictitious relief is open to serious criticism.³ With less excuse than Crivelli, Pinturicchio continued an old and time-honoured custom of the Umbrians, at a period when it contrasted too strongly with the general spirit of the age to be permissible any longer. His dresses are, on the same principle, overladen with rich borders. He was far too busy during his lifetime to give much thought to oil medium, and as he had not the constancy to perfectly acquire, he seldom attempted, its use; he therefore tinted walls, as he did panels, on the system of Fiorenzo and Bonfigli; and without any of Perugino's feeling for colour. Gaudy liveliness, or sombreness are the two extremes most commonly met with in his pictures. The vehicle is copious, and the brush full, so as to produce layers of thick substance and rough surface. The flesh is stippled over verde, and enlivened even at the outlines with red according to the oldest methods of tempera.

Pinturicchio deserves, and is likely to hold no higher place in history than Spagna. Both were of the same capacity. But Spagna, being younger, was enabled to master the changes in the technica which Pinturicchio neglected, and was not precluded by habit from imitating Raphael.

In 1495, Bernardino was repaid for the industry and skill exhibited at the Vatican and in the Castel S. Angelo by a lease of lands at Chiugi near Perugia, subject to an annual payment of thirty corbe of grain, which was commuted at a subsequent period.¹ During this or a later stay, he covered a chapel at Aracœli with frescoes in a purer and better style than any other that he had brought to completion in Rome. The date of these is not ascertained, but the chapel is said to have been founded to solemnise the fortunate extinction of a feud between two families.² It is called Cappella Bufalini to this day, and may have been adorned at the request of some one of that house holding an office in Rome, as the Bufalini did who signs his name to the decree of 1495, granting lands to Pinturicchio near Perugia.³ The theme illustrated by these frescoes is the life of S. Bernardino.

To the right as one enters, the Saint kneels in prayer with a cloth about his hips, surrounded by his friends preparatory to taking the vows as a Franciscan monk. On the spandril of an arch in the convent where the scene is laid, an angel bears a buffalo's head, the cognisance of the Bufalini. In a round above the arches is the Virgin and Child, and at an opening resembling a window above her, the Eternal amidst angels giving a blessing. In the space next to the Vows (beneath the chapel window) the Saint discourses and points towards heaven, in the presence of four brethren and friends, all apparently portraits. Near that again, he is accompanied by a friar and sees in ecstasy a vision of the Crucified Saviour. In an opening above, a peacock stands on the sill. On the wall to the left, in the lunette, the Saint, in the hairy dress of a penitent, is in the wilderness reading a book, and observed by a group of people on the foreground. Below, his body is exposed on a bier with women on the left and men on the right, amongst the latter, two traditionally known as portraits of Bufalini and his son (?). On the altar face, the Saviour in glory, attended by two seraphs, shows the stigmata, whilst four winged players stand on clouds under Him. Two angels, beneath these, suspend a crown above the head of S. Bernardino, erect, in the act of preaching, between SS. Antony of Padua and Louis. The scene is laid in the country about Siena, a view of the city filling a part of the distance. Four Evangelists are in the triangles of the ceiling; and on a border in monochrome beneath the whole series are imitations of bas-reliefs representing a triumph, figures of men on horseback, nude females held by guards, naked captives in bonds, and an emperor on a triumphal chariot. Amongst the accompanying ornaments, heads of emperors are interspersed, and two angels hold the ribands of a panel on which the name of Jesus is written.

None of Pinturicchio's frescoes illustrate more completely than these his tendency to receive impressions from the works of his contemporaries. The Evangelists, assigned without valid reasons to Francesco di Città di Castello,¹ fully represent Pinturicchio's original style. They are not free from faults in type and drapery; but the partial coarseness of the first, and formlessness of the second do not conceal the painter's individuality, or his derivation from Fiorenzo. In the Apotheosis of S. Bernardino we are often reminded of Alunno, whilst in other places we think of Perugino or of Signorelli. The spirit of the latter is indeed singularly marked in the monochromes of the borders. Sometimes the draperies are broadly cast, or float with natural curves in a breeze; sometimes they are paltry. A pleasing face gives charm to one angel, coarse features detract from the beauty of another. In action and attitude, a figure like that of S. Antony of Padua is striking for its propriety and truth. The movement of another, such as the S. Bernardino kneeling in a hip-cloth, is equally remarkable for rigid awkwardness and bony dryness. In general, at Araceli, the compositions are better conceived than usual; but the dramatis personæ, though marshalled with more art than before, are too often stiff, straight, and lean. The dim grey of flesh-shadows and thick body of colour are more like Alunno than Fiorenzo.²

² In the ceiling, the lower part of S. John Evangelist is obliterated. The two angels at the sides of the Saviour in glory are much injured. Of the four lower ones, the first on the left has no head. The faces are reminiscent of those of Fiorenzo

Other frescoes of uncertain date at Rome might be added to the list of those completed there by Pinturicchio, the most interesting being the Eternal and Evangelists in the ceiling of a chapel, now the sacristy, at S. Cecilia in Trastevere,¹ and a Virgin and Child between SS. Stephen and Lawrence, inside the choir of S. Lorenzo fuori le Mura.² At S. Croce in Gerusalemme, a semidome decorated with scenes from the life of S. Helen and the Eternal in benediction;³ and at S. Onofrio, a tribune containing a Coronation of the Virgin and scenes from the legend of the Cross, have been classed without proof in the same catalogue; but the latter is very properly noted by Vasari amongst the works of Peruzzi,⁴ and the former seems a medley of Bonfigli, Signorelli, and Pinturicchio, such as might be expected from one of the numerous inferior Umbrians who acted occasionally as journeymen in the capital at the close of the fifteenth century.⁵

On leaving Rome, about the beginning of 1496, Pinturicchio returned to Perugia, where he entered into a contract on the 14th of February with the brethren of S. Maria de' Fossi, now S. Anna, for an altarpiece, to be delivered within two years.⁶ On the following 15th of March he proceeded to Orvieto, under an agreement to paint two Doctors of the Church in the choir of the Duomo; and he remained there till the 5th of November, when he received his last payment and dismissal.⁷ Unlike Perugino, who corresponded with the Orvietans and never did anything for them, Pinturicchio left numerous specimens of his art in various parts of the building, but it is surprising how few of them have survived.

and Perugino. But the movement of one on the extreme right tuning his viol, is like one by Signorelli. The angel to the left holding the crown over S. Bernardino, is handsome, the angel to the right less so. The draperies of the S. Antony of Padua are well cast. The broadest style of handling to be found in the series is in the lunette where the Saint sits in the wilderness dressed in a skin. The condition of the whole chapel is remarkable, although some parts have suffered from time and restoring. The resemblance of some figures to those of Perugino in the Moses and Zipporah at the Sixtine have perhaps caused the wall paintings of the Cappella Bufalini to be assigned to Signorelli, because, it may be recollected, the Moses and Zipporah has been also attributed to him. [Opinions differ regarding the real date of the Bufalini Chapel frescoes. By some critics they are considered to be earlier than they were supposed to be by the authors.]

² Here also the style is that of the Appartamento Borgia. The painted architectural ornament with busts of saints in rounds and scutcheons is ruined by repainting. The S. Stephen is injured from the same cause.

We look round the choir, and amongst the scenes from the life of the Virgin by Ugolino d'Ilario, a S. Gregory, and some prophets and angels bear the impress of his manner, yet they are so rudely handled and so dull in tone, in consequence of original neglect or of subsequent injury, that were there no records, one might believe Pinturicchio never visited Orvieto at all.¹ The effects of time have been equally disastrous to the frescoes which he undertook in a chapel of the cathedral at Spoleto, where a small tribune contains the Eternal on clouds amongst angels, a Virgin and Child between SS. John the Baptist and Stephen, and an Ecce Homo, all more or less verging on total obliteration.²

About the beginning of March 1498, if Pinturicchio punctually performed his obligations to the Brotherhood and chapter of S. Maria de' Fossi, the altarpiece of the Virgin, Child, and Baptist, with its side panels, pinnacles, and predella, were delivered, and it is but fair to say that no one was now more solicitous to furnish careful and thoroughly finished work. If we consider the time in which this masterpiece³ was produced, and think of the numerous graceful variations on the same theme, composed by Perugino and Raphael, with the suggestive help of Leonardo, we are struck by the old-fashioned Umbrian air of Pinturicchio's conception. The Virgin sits in a wide and highly ornamented niche bordered with "grotesques" as they were called at this time, a head of Medusa in the key of the arch, a griffin and a satyr on the arms of the chair, candelabra with pendant corals on the capitals of the pilasters. With a sentimental bend of her small veiled head, she keeps watch over the Child, resting on a cushion on her knee. He holds a pomegranate in His left hand, and grasps with the right a slender cross, presented by the youthful Baptist. An awkward affectation marks the action, gait, and costume of the latter, who stiffly comes forward in a yellow tunic, leggings, and buskins. A book lies on the ground, together with a brace of apples and nuts. The Virgin's face is youthful, her hair falling in abundant tresses on a drooping shoulder, her arms disproportionately short, the drapery festooned, with the branching loops of fold. The child is puny, heavy of head, copiously furnished with hair, sharing these peculiarities with the Baptist near him. At this advanced period of Pinturicchio's career, he produces a picture every part of which recalls the style of Fiorenzo, in character, type, and drawing. It is warm in tone, successfully fused in the flesh-tints, delicately finished, and happily harmonised in strongly contrasted hues of drapery, but without unity in composition. The landscape is touched up in the distant trees with gold, and done with a minuteness worthy of Memling. The handling is tempera of abundant impasto, stippled up in the verde, with yellow hatchings in light, and red in the half shades. A similar delicacy of finish, and copiousness of detail are in the S. Augustine and the S. Jerome of the side panels. A half-length of the Saviour, well proportioned but lean, is supported in the tomb by two angels in languishing attitudes of sorrow. Youthfulness, freshness, and even elegance are marked in the half-lengths of the Virgin and Angel Annunciate; and severe gravity, sometimes heaviness, in the six Evangelists and Saints of the predella.¹ Gay, gaudy hues are everywhere predominant. The altarpiece is, in a word, the most careful that Pinturicchio ever finished, and at the same time that in which he introduced the greatest feeling.

² These frescoes are in the first chapel to the right of the entrance. The Eternal, seated on a cloud, gives the blessing in an almond-shaped glory of cherubs' heads, a figure in Pinturicchio's manner and softly coloured. Of the two angels at the sides one is almost gone. The Ecce Homo is scarcely visible; the Child and saints in a similar condition. The frescoes of the Baptistry at Spoleto are by another hand (see postea "Spagna" and "Jacopo Siculo"). [Mr. Berenson, among others, accepts as by Pinturicchio the frescoes of the Madonna, Child, and Saints, God the Father and Angels, and the Dead Christ, in the first chapel to the right in the Duomo at Spoleto.]

It is equalled in this respect by the Virgin and Child in the Duomo of Sanseverino, which falls short of its companion only in the roughness of its distemper handling. The masks are full and fleshy, and gravely sedate without being ideally select; that the portrait is correctly taken from nature, and that the landscape is minute to a surprising extent. It is a picture which illustrates of itself the derivation of Pinturicchio's style from that of Fiorenzo, and the improvement produced by the lapse of years, and by familiarity with Perugino.² Its date may be approximately that of the Holy Family at S. Maria de' Fossi. Both were probably produced at Perugia.

Pinturicchio, having received a grant of land at Chiugi in payment for his labours at Rome, had settled in his native town, as the best place for the pursuit of his art, and the most convenient for administering his property. He was fortunate enough in finding patrons, but he soon discovered that he had made a bad bargain with the Borgias, because his rent swallowed up the greater part of his revenue. Having complained of this to the Apostolic Chamber, he was lucky enough to find immediate response; and the Cardinal of S. Giorgio replied (July 28, 1497) to his address in the name of Alexander VI., commuting the dues in kind to an offering of two pounds of wax, but limiting the commutation to a term of three years.¹ He had, no doubt, had occasion during a long stay at Rome and from a constant connection with churchmen, to convince himself that their money-dealings were often attended with delay and misunderstandings; he now experienced the inconvenience of transacting business with the papal agents at Chiugi, who distrained on his property in defiance of papal briefs. He was too confident, however, of his interest to submit to this injustice, but complained again, and had the satisfaction of discovering that a reprimand had been addressed to the overseers at Chiugi, and of obtaining restitution of the produce which had been unjustly taken from him (October 24, 1497).² In the following year (May and October 1498) he had the additional pleasure of obtaining the extension of the first commutation for the whole time of his lease, and a brief of Alexander VI. confirming possession of the lands at Chiugi to him and his descendants even though he should omit the yearly presentation of two pounds of wax.³

In the Pietà, the angel to the left supports with both hands the arm of the dead Christ. The angel to the left does the same. Abundant locks cover their heads, which are like those of Fiorenzo. They wear collars of pearls. The blood flows from the lance wound. The colour is rich and juicy. The Angel Annunciate is young and one of the best by Pinturicchio, reminiscent of one by Alunno at La Bastia. There is much gentleness and grace in the Virgin. The S. Mark of the predella is full of character. The S. John Evangelist is coarse and heavy. All the predella figures are half-lengths.

His prospects being thus improved, Pinturicchio determined to build himself a house, and thus proclaimed his intention of living out the rest of his days in Perugia.

Nor was the help of the Borgias withheld from him even on this occasion. As Cesar, Duke of Valentino, overran the Romagna in 1500, and was visited by the artist in his camp at Diruta, he issued an order from thence, dated the 14th October 1500, requesting the vice-treasurer Alfani to get permission for Pinturicchio to sink a cistern in his house at Perugia. But this is not so interesting as the Duke's statement, "that he has again taken to his service Bernardino Pinturicchio of Perosa, whom he always loved because of his talent and gifts; and he desires that in all things he should be considered as 'one of ours.'"⁴ It is clear from this that Pinturicchio had been employed at Rome by the son of Alexander VI. Whether he reaped any further advantage from the connection is hard to say, though it seems likely that the Duke of Valentino was too much absorbed from that time forward in his purpose of carving a principality out of Tuscany to think much of painting.

We are too little acquainted with the relations between Pinturicchio and Perugia at this period to describe their relative position at Perugia. But it is obvious that Vannucci held a higher rank than his friend, having been called from Florence to the Audience of the Cambio when Pinturicchio might have been engaged on the spot, but there is no suggestion in books or in tradition of the existence of any jealousy or rivalry between them. Both had their patrons; both had frequently more orders to execute than they could well attend to.

Whilst Vannucci was finishing the Cambio, Pinturicchio was beginning a series for Trojolo Baglioni, protonotary and prior of the collegiate church of Spello.¹

In this remote locality, visited twenty years later by Perugino, the wall paintings of Pinturicchio are slowly mouldering away from the effects of damp. The Annunciation, the Nativity, and Christ disputing with the Doctors, are the subjects of the walls; four Sibyls are depicted in the ceiling; they are highly characteristic of the master.

The composition of the Annunciation, essentially Umbrian in its conception, and rich in the luxuriant architectural adornment peculiar to the Perugian school, is brightly coloured and carefully executed. The palace in which the Virgin is surprised by the angel as she reads at a high desk, is vast. Its fenced garden is bounded by an arch and colonnade, through which one sees a distant view of the hills about Spello. The attitude of the Virgin is chaste and calm, her features pleasing, with a regular forehead, a slightly hooked nose, and prim mouth; her form a little dry and lean, but fairly, if not perfectly proportioned. Gabriel's is a handsome apparition reminiscent of the angels in the altarpiece of 1496; a noble improvement on the types of Bonfigli and Fiorenzo, gaudily dressed however, and gorgeously attired. A gentle expression in the soft features of the Eternal appearing in the vaulting, in a glory resting on a cloud, gives Him a somewhat feminine appearance, and the long thin face, enclosed in lank falling hair, is like a creation by Alunno. The dresses, the ornaments, and the architecture are all in true harmonies.

The Nativity is a much less successful effort, and creates the impression as if Pinturicchio felt himself incompetent to fill the space effectively. He overloads the ground in front of the penthouse; yet each figure is without connection with its neighbour. S. Joseph erect; the Virgin, two angels, and three shepherds, kneeling, are in a semicircle of which the centre is occupied by the Child, of graceful form, stretching its tiny arms to its mother. To correct the stillness of this group, a youth is introduced to the left in violent action, dragging up a goat as a companion offering to the basket of eggs held by his brother shepherd. The procession of the Magi advances from afar, and other incidents fill the landscape, whilst on the clouds ten gentle angels stand and sing a chorus. Except in these, and the Virgin and Child, feeble coarseness of shape, stiff and awkward action are frequent, and the draperies are too obviously arranged to be natural. The ornament and gilding obtrude more than usual under such circumstances, and the sacrifice of mass to details in the hills and edifices becomes too apparent.

The Christ among the Doctors before the Temple is a novel interpretation of a scriptural incident, and gives Pinturicchio occasion to remember Perugino's fresco at the Sistine in arranging a court with a floor of parti-coloured marbles and a temple. In the centre and somewhat in rear of the rest of the company, the youthful Saviour disputes with the audience at His sides, whose books strew the ground. One on the left is seen from behind addressing Christ. Near Him Trojolo Baglioni, with a follower, holding a purse, stands listening. To the right is another group, in front of which S. Joseph points out the Saviour to the Virgin. A reminiscence of Signorelli may be traced in the comparative grandeur of her forms, whilst her mien is modestly composed. S. Joseph has a double-balled nose and wizened aspect.

Pinturicchio appears to have considered himself at Spello as the direct competitor of Perugino, whom he imitates in his distance and accessories. A life-size portrait of himself hangs on a wall in the Annunciation beneath a shelf on which volumes are lying. The panelling under it is inscribed with the words: "BERNARDINUS PICTORICIUS PERUSINUS"; and between the strings of beads that fall from the frame, a palette and brush, his cognisance, are added. It would not be easy to find a more perfect contrast than that afforded by the two self-drawn likenesses of the partners in art at the Cambio and at Spello. Vannucci is florid and fleshy; Pinturicchio sallow and lean. Pietro is jocund and healthy; his friend looks sour and sickly. The pinched features of Bernardino are indeed those of an habitual sufferer. His eye is small and sunken; his nose broadly barrelled, but parted at the end by the splitting of the cartilage; the cheeks deeply furrowed and gathered into a few marked wrinkles. The upper lip is short, the chin long and dirty from lack of shaving, but a melancholy air in the face may be due in part to the abrasion of colour, and the scaling of the surface. Pinturicchio also indicates the time in which he finished his work by the date "MCCCCI." on a pilaster of the Annunciation;¹ but the chapel of the Sacrament

¹ A ditch has been sunk outside the wall of the chapel to draw off the damp, but with very slight result. The Annunciation is the least damaged of the series. Each subject arched at the top, in an architectural border and pilaster richly covered with grotesques.

In the Nativity, the landscape and foreground are worked with almost Flemish minuteness. There are grasses and weeds on the foreground, a bottle and pack saddle. A peacock is on the top of a ruin, the ox and the ass at the base and in front of the penthouse. The draperies are all touched up with gold. The hatching is not the only one he decorated. He painted a half-length of the Virgin and Child above the altar of the sacristy, and the same subject on an altar in the church, both a little less than life-size, and in the same style as the large series—leaving to his assistants other and less important commissions in different parts of Spello.¹ He had been elected in Perugia a decemvir in succession to Vannucci, and took office on the 1st of April 1501; ² so that either he finished the frescoes before that date, or after his retirement from office, on the 1st of June.

Shortly after their completion, Pinturicchio was invited to Siena by Cardinal Francesco Piccolomini to prepare for the decoration of the library in the Duomo.

Ever since the elevation of Æneas Sylvius to the papal chair under the name of Pius II., the Sienese had treated the family of Piccolomini with exceptional liberality. The interdiction which excluded all nobles from the magistracy had been raised in their favour. Their wealth was great, their influence paramount; and a clever propensity on their part to rise in the highest preferments of the Church, expanded that influence in the shadows of yellows and blues has been blackened by damp. The base and left side of the fresco are most damaged; and some pieces in the distance and elsewhere are scaled. In the Dispute, two statues are placed in the porticoes at the side of the Temple. The second figure to the right of the Saviour, in a grey dress, holds a scroll on which the word: "PINTORICCHIO" may be read. The face is not that of the painter. Baglioni is a man of fifty attempting a smile, in a purplish dress and cap. Four little figures are in the opening of the Temple. The perspective here, as in the other frescoes, is good. The figures on the left side are dimmed by damp. But in addition to the natural causes of damage others are superadded. The whole chapel has been restored. The diagonals of the ceiling are covered with arabesques on gold ground. The Sibyls sit reading on thrones behind which the sky is seen. On an antique altar near the Erythrean, the lines of an inscription are illegible. The Erythrean sits reading, the European with her hands joined in prayer, the Samian looking up. The Tiburtine prophesies in a dancing attitude. The frescoes of Spello have been published by the Arundel Society. [In a niche of the old sacristy of S. Andrea is a fresco of an Angel, a very pleasing fragment, undoubtedly by Pinturicchio.]

On the hills outside Spello lies the ex-convent of S. Girolamo. In the choir of the church is a fresco of the Marriage of the Virgin, the usual Perugian composition with a temple in the distance inscribed: "CAPPELA SČI JOSEPI." The figures are feeble, round-headed, with small circular eyes, all tinged with a pale colour without relief. Draperies and hair are done in Pinturicchio's manner; and what little shadow there is yields a reddish hue. It is a second-rate fresco such as Matteo Balducci might have painted, with some character akin to that of Gerino da Pistoia.

In the cloister chapel, a Nativity by a follower of Pinturicchio's school—and ruder than the foregoing, a Virgin, Saints, S. Sebastian, and other figures—half-ruined fresco in a ground-floor chapel.

Near S. Girolamo, a room, of old sacristy to the church of S. Andrea, but now a shop for the sale of wood belonging to the ex-convent, contains a Virgin adoring the Infant on her knee between SS. Jerome and Sebastian—a common fresco of the Perugian school in the mixed style of Pinturicchio and Spagna.

In the cloister, further, a S. Sebastian of which the head alone remains—also a Virgin, Child, and S. Roch, coarse and reminiscent of Tiberio d'Assisi.

alike over Rome and Siena. Francesco Piccolomini, the nephew of Æneas Sylvius, had lived for a long time at Rome where his palace, near that of the Orsini, was celebrated for containing the antique group of the Three Graces.¹ As early as 1485 he erected a chapel in the Duomo of Siena, and lined it with Ligurian marbles quarried and carved expressly for him by the Milanese Andrea Fusina.² Michael Angelo received a commission, in 1501, for fifteen statues, of Christ, the Apostles, and two angels, for its internal ornament.³ By its side he began, in 1495, the erection of a library, in which he proposed to place all the books bequeathed to the family by Pius II.,⁴ the marbles of the entrance and outer face being entrusted to the Sienese sculptor Lorenzo di Mariano,⁵ the bronze doors (1497) to Antonio Ormanni,⁶ the wood-carving of the inside (1496) to Antonio Barili.⁷ Pinturicchio was to paint the walls and ceiling, and signed a contract to that effect on the 29th of June 1502.

It is difficult to suppress a genuine surprise at this last determination, nor is it easy to determine by what canons of taste Cardinal Piccolomini was governed when he patronised at one and the same time two men who may be said to have stood at opposite poles in art. A prelate who was fond of classic sculpture and could appreciate the value of the antique, who was about to transfer the Three Graces from his palace at Rome to this very library, would naturally admire the creations of Buonarrotti; but that he should immediately afterwards pen an agreement showing that he was partial to the peculiar Umbrian style of Pinturicchio, is a contradiction that still requires explanation.

One of the first conditions to which Bernardino bound himself was, that so soon as he should have settled to painting in the library he would undertake nothing else, either at Siena or elsewhere. The ceiling was to be as brilliant and gay as possible, designed with fanciful spacings, colours, and subjects, in the style "at this day called grotesque," the shield and arms of the Piccolomini being in the centre. On the walls were to be ten stories illustrative of the memory of Pius II., the "figures to be laid in with fresco, and retouched à secco," "the cartoons and their transfer to be done by himself, and all the heads finished with his own hand." In consideration of all this, the Cardinal consented to pay 200 ducats at Venice for the purchase of gold and colours, and 100 ducats at Perugia for the transport of baggage and hire of assistants, 50 ducats for the completion of each compartment, and the rest at the close. Besides, Pinturicchio was to have a house gratis to live in near the Duomo, wood for scaffoldings, lime, and sand; and corn, wine, and oil, according to his wants, from the overseers of the Cardinal. All that he was called upon to do in addition was to give security for the advance of three hundred ducats, upon which he immediately returned to Perugia, taking with him the descriptions furnished by Cardinal Piccolomini.¹

Pinturicchio had necessarily nothing more pressing to do there than to despatch his family and tools to Siena, where he had a prospect of residing some time. But he had also to look out for aids at Perugia, and we have no doubt that he is correctly described by Vasari as having engaged many of the apprentices and workmen in the school of Perugino.² We shall find that amongst these young Raphael was probably included.³ Time elapsed, however, before all matters in connection with this change were regulated, and it was spring of 1503 before the labours at Siena commenced. The ceiling was the first part of the library that was taken in hand, and some months went by before its elegantly relieved frames were coloured and interspersed with pictures and monochromes representing mythological incidents. In compliance with the contract, the arms of Piccolomini were emblazoned in shields on the ceiling, and the introduction of the cardinal's hat into them determines their date.

Cardinal Piccolomini was elected on the 21st of September 1503, at the conclave which met after the death of Alexander VI., and took the name of Pius III. Had his arms been placed in the ceiling after that time, they would have been decorated with the tiara and not with the cardinal's hat.⁴ Anticipating the approach of death as early as April 30, 1503, the Cardinal made a will in which he expressed a desire "that the works allotted to Pinturicchio should be carried on by his heirs, if they were not perfected in his lifetime."⁵ We may therefore conclude that the ceiling of the Piccolomini library was begun and finished between May and September 1503. The death of Pius, on the 18th of October, interrupted the further progress of the undertaking and forced Pinturicchio to seek other patrons. He was fortunate enough to find one in Alberto Aringhieri, a Knight of S. John of Rhodes, who then filled the office of rector in the cathedral of Siena ; for whom, by the middle of 1504, he had carried out a series of frescoes in the circular chapel of S. Giovanni in the Duomo.¹ It pleased Alberto to be represented young as he took the habit of a Knight of S. John to the left of the entrance, and to the right as an old and bearded man in civic dress. Both figures kneel ; between them are two compartments with the Nativity and Decapitation of S. John ; in an upper course, the Baptist in the Desert, the Baptism of Christ, the Visitation, and the Sermon of John. Three of these pieces were in such poor condition at the close of the sixteenth century, that they were renewed by Francesco Rustici, in 1608,² and the rest are damaged from various causes.

But, whilst Pinturicchio was busy on these frescoes, and waiting for the settlement of the Piccolomini succession, he was also painting for Andrea, the brother of Pius III., a picture in the family chapel at S. Francesco. It was ready in September, and exposed to public view in November (8th) 1504, a great scandal being caused by the celebration of a mass at the altar to which the canons were forced by Pandolfo Petrucci in spite of the interdict flung over the city by Julius II.³

In the meantime, Andrea and Giacomo Piccolomini had probably administered to the will of their brother Francesco. In September 1504 they renewed the contract with Michael Angelo for the statues of the chapel in the cathedral of Siena ;⁴ and they probably went through the same formalities with Pinturicchio.⁵ Yet the frescoes of the library, if resumed at all in the spring of 1505, did not exclusively occupy him ; and in March (13th) he furnished the cartoon of "Fortune" for the floor of the Duomo.¹ Nor did chance seem as yet to favour the energetic prosecution of a great pictorial enterprise on the part of the Piccolomini, as in June the death of Andrea entailed fresh delays and difficulties.

⁴ The contract is of the 15th September 1504, and recites the original of 1502.

There is no certainty whether Pinturicchio remained in Siena during the summer, autumn, and winter of 1505.² A lease of land at Chiugi, made to him in July 1505 by order of Julius II., would rather suggest the likelihood of a journey to Rome or Perugia;³ and a wish to reside in the latter city is apparent from the registry, at that very time, of Bernardino in its guild of painters.⁴ In summer or autumn, however, he returned to Siena, where his wife bore him a son in November, who was christened Julius Cæsar, after a Perugian lawyer of that name, to whom the property at Chiugi was afterwards sold; and he took the most active steps to render his stay a permanent one.⁵

It was the opinion of Pinturicchio's contemporaries at Siena that he excelled Perugino in the art of painting, though he was far from possessing the good sense and prudence of Vannucci, and he was noted for the emptiness of his talk.⁶ It is worth while indeed to note the amusing pomp and bombast of a petition for immunities, addressed to the Balia of Siena in March 1507, in which this feature in Pinturicchio's character is illustrated.

"Bernardino Pinturicchia, who now addresses the most respected officials (of the Balia), is the servant of your Lordships, and not the least (known) amongst renowned painters, for whom, as Cicero has written, the Romans in early times held but little. Yet after the increase of the empire in consequence of the Eastern victories, and the conquest of the Greek cities, they called the best from all parts of the world, not hesitating to seize all the finest pictures and sculptures that they could discover. They admitted painting to be supreme, similar to the liberal arts, and a rival of poesy. And artists being usually esteemed by those who govern republics, the said Bernardino has elected Siena to be his home, hoping to live and reside there; (therefore) confiding in the clemency of your Lordships and considering the adverse nature of the times, the smallness and diminution of profits and the weight of his family; having heard also that craftsmen taking up their abode here receive grants of immunities, he prays exemption for thirty years from all taxes whatever, whether present or to come. . . ."

This petition was favourably heard by the Balia, on the 26th of March 1507,¹ perhaps through the influence of the Piccolomini, perhaps also through that of Pandolfo Petrucci. It was but one of a series of distinctions extended to him at Siena, having been preceded by a grant of lands at Montemassi in 1506.²

During that year and 1507, he had the good fortune to complete the Piccolomini library.

The first of ten compartments into which it is divided represents the departure of Æneas Sylvius for the Council of Basle in the suite of Cardinal Capranica. The next are :—

Æneas received by James the First of Scotland as envoy from the Council of Basle. He is crowned a poet-laureate by Frederic III. He appears as ambassador of the Emperor before the throne of the pontiff Eugenius IV. He escorts and presents to the Emperor his bride, Infanta of Portugal, at the gates of Siena. He receives the cardinal's hat from Calixtus III. in the Vatican. He is carried in processional pomp after his elevation to the pontifical chair under the title of Pius II. He presides at Mantua, the assembly in which a crusade was proclaimed. He canonises S. Catherine of Siena. He gives the signal for the departure of the crusaders from Ancona.

In pictorial decorations of great compass some parts are necessarily better than others, whether it be that the draughtsman labours at one time with peculiar elasticity and vigour, at another with a certain languor ; or the transposition of the drawing to the wall is alternately confided to a more or less gifted disciple. The master himself seldom keeps the same level in composition. The ten frescoes of the Piccolomini library vary for this reason in perfection of distribution and in vigour of handling. Still, as examples of Umbrian industry they are the most successful creations of Perugian art. They have the local stamp of that school, and show us Pinturicchio following the path opened by Bonfigli and Fiorenzo. During the career of the first, it seemed likely that some of the broader features of Florentine composition would be transplanted into Umbria ; but the sequel proved that the soil was not entirely favourable ; and Fiorenzo, by degrees, reverted to the gentler, more meditative manner of his countrymen. Pinturicchio, who followed, and who had occasion to admire the frescoes of the Ghirlandaio, Botticelli, and Lippi, felt their power in a slight measure so long as he remained in Rome, but showed no further signs of their action when he retired from thence. He is more completely Umbrian at Siena, which is close to Florence, than he was in the Eternal city. Whilst creative genius is but slightly traceable in him, he is evidently disposed to assimilate all the pleasing qualities peculiar to the latitude in which he works. Without losing his own originality he does not remain uninfluenced by the later productions adorning Perugia at the opening of the sixteenth century. It is surprising how much freshness and softness he maintains, and how much he reminds us of the earliest examples of Raphael's skill. VASARI was obviously struck with this impression when he visited the Piccolomini library; and he was induced by its vividness to assign "the designs and cartoons" wholly to Sanzio.¹ He had seen specimens of both, which he thought were by Raphael, and this confirmed him in his idea; but he had not compared them with the frescoes, or he would have seen that these are conceived, and in every case technically, in the system of Pinturicchio.² The character of Bernardino allows us to think that he would be willing to take advantage of the precocious talents of such a youth as Raphael, if only in giving him rough sketches from which to make more finished drawings; and the resemblance of style between those of young Sanzio now at Venice and others which repeat scenes depicted in the Piccolomini library strengthens the belief that he did so. Of the latter, one reproducing the departure of Æneas Sylvius with Cardinal Capranica is in the collection of the Uffizi, pencilled on whitish grey paper, and outlined with pen, shadowed with touches of bistre, and lighted up with white. The squares by which the transfer of the composition to cartoon was made, still chequer the surface. There is little or no difference between this magnificent piece and the fresco, except perhaps in the landscape. Another, of similar execution, in four parts pasted together and somewhat rubbed, belongs to Signor Baldeschi at Siena, and differs from the wall painting in more than one particular. The attitude of Æneas between the Emperor and Infanta is changed in the latter, and the figures of the middle distance on a background of hills is replaced by a view of the Camollia Gate at Siena. In the sky to the left are the words: "QUESTA È LA QUINTA" . . . to which earlier writers add . . . "NO. V. . . AFAE";³ but it is supposed that the lines are more modern than the drawing. A third at Chatsworth represents Æneas before Eugenius IV.⁴ Were Raphael's name to be withdrawn from these sheets, it would be necessary to reconstruct a catalogue of his designs. At Venice there are figures which seem counterparts of those we have described, especially as regards feeling. The same hand

³ Com. VASARI, p. 296.

⁴ A curious mischance prevented the authors from seeing this drawing at Chatsworth; but it is described by GEHEIMERRATH DR. WAAGEN, in Treasures, vol. iii., p. 454.

traced them all. One point alone remains obscure. If any one should inquire what has become of Pinturicchio's drawings, the answer would be very unsatisfactory. He must have made many, yet all those attributed to him are unworthy of his skill.

Coincidences of an equally remarkable nature are apparent in other, and those amongst the best, frescoes of the Piccolomini library. The Coronation of Æneas is a beautifully arranged subject. The Emperor is enthroned to the left in a fine court in front of a triumphal arch. He places the crown on the head of the poet laureate in the presence of the nobles of his court, the knights of his suite and their pages. The gentleness and affected grace which characterises Raphael's sketch-book at Venice¹ and his pictures in the period of 1501-4 are noticeable in many parts of the fresco. The predella of the Vatican, which formed part of Raphael's Coronation of the Virgin, offers the most curious analogies with it. Not only is the group behind the young king, in the Adoration of the Magi belonging to that predella, in the same spirit as that on the right in the Coronation of Æneas at Siena; but a youth in a light dress turning his back to the spectator and looking round, as he leans his hand on a stick, is the same in both pictures. Single figures in each are conceived in Raphael's manner, such as the kneeling king in the predella, a type in Fiorenzo's mould reminiscent of Perugino and Pinturicchio, draped with their peculiar cast of fold.

The inferences from all this are clear. Raphael is necessarily connected with the production of these frescoes.² Sanzio must have been in contact with Pinturicchio. It is only a question of when and where. Without taking Raphael from the school of Perugino to place him in that of Pinturicchio, we suppose that circumstances occurred which made it possible for the younger to join the elder artist at Siena. It is even likely that they may have been together before; that when Pinturicchio worked the ceiling of the library he gave his rough sketches in part to his assistant to make up into drawings after the fashion so graphically described by Vasari in his introduction, and with the help of studies for single personages and drapery. Raphael was capable of performing a duty of this kind; and Pinturicchio would not be disinclined to employ a youth who might have learned much from the example of Perugino after the successful termination of the Cambio Hall. Raphael, in the outset of his career being more remarkable for genuine feeling than for perfect art, snatched, one should think, at an opportunity to increase his knowledge by visiting the atelier of more than one master. There are pictures at Perugia, such as the Virgin, Child, and Saints from S. Girolamo, now in the Gallery, betraying a contact not only of Pinturicchio with Raphael, but of both with Spagna. It has been assigned to all three separately, and there is reason for each theory. The Virgin has all the freshness of Sanzio, the angel to the left points to Perugino, that to the right and a S. Francis to Spagna, the rest, including the landscape, to Pinturicchio. But the technical handling is not the old one of tempera, to which Pinturicchio was faithful during his lifetime. The colour is moistened with oil, and used according to the system of Raphael at the period just preceding his adoption of the Florentine manner, the time when Sanzio and Pinturicchio might exchange ideas; and the former take from the latter the dry, lean, and somewhat bony forms which are to be found in the Milan Sposalizio.

The most telling proof, however, of the companionship between the two artists is this. When Cardinal Francesco Piccolomini found that his library had been completed (independently at least of the paintings on the walls), he caused the Three Graces to be brought to Siena.¹ They remained for a considerable time the ornament of the library, and are now in the Academy of Arts. They are all mutilated, the central one having lost its head and the left leg below the calf, those to the right and left being deprived of an arm each. Raphael sketched two of them, treating the form with a certain freedom, but copying the movement exactly in the sketch-book now at Venice;² at a later period he produced the Three Graces, now at Dudley House,³ on the antique model. It is thus probable that Raphael and Pinturicchio were at Siena together in 1503, and that they had parted before the frescoes of the walls were undertaken. That these were only finished later, is shown by the frequent reproduction of the Piccolomini arms, either with the tiara, or with the cognisance of Castile and Aragon, granted by the two Kings, Ferdinand and Henry, to Giacomo and Andrea, the brothers of Pius III.

The Piccolomini library is fairly preserved, though slightly retouched in some places and discoloured in others. It is one of the few halls in Italy that has retained its original character. Each fresco is enclosed in an arch, the vaulting of which is seen in perspective, supported on fictive clustered pillars with capitals of gilt stucco, resting on plinths. The pictures are gracefully united by angels supporting scutcheons on the plinths; and in spite of their coarseness in consequence of the execution being left to assistants, they add much to the unity and harmony of the whole series. The best composed fresco of the ten is that of Æneas and Cardinal Capranica proceeding to the Council of Basle, in which Piccolomini on horseback in front is conspicuous. Great care is lavished on its foreground of herbs and flowers.¹ The embassy before James I. is richly put together, and more than usually characteristic of Pinturicchio in the minute detail of the landscape behind the throne and screen. Some of the faces and even whole figures are reminiscent of Perugino's at the Cambio.² An elegant carriage and Raphaelesque freshness may be noticed in most of the personages in the Coronation; though here and there want of firmness in pose and tread are striking. But this failing is partly concealed by the prettiness of the groups. Piccolomini before Eugenius is also fine; whilst in the meeting of the Emperor and his bride the distribution is artful, and the liveliness in the arrangement of the middle ground is praiseworthy; the only drawback being the profuse application of gilt-work. The investiture of the hat is like Benozzo Gozzoli's "Augustine in his chair at Rome," a wall painting at S. Agostino of S. Gimignano. The subsequent pieces are less masterly. The general tone is bright, but without massiveness or power, and therefore less attractive than Perugino would have made it. The keys of harmony are gaudy and the surface rough, and much of the ornament is, as usual, raised.³ On a pilaster to the left of the first subject, and in two scrolls on the ceiling above the seventh and eighth, the initials B. R. have been interpreted as those of Bernardino and Raphael, but they are probably intended to perpetuate the memory of Romano Bembo, one of Pinturicchio's helps.⁴

Outside the chapel, and to the left of the high portal in the Duomo, Pius III. receives the papal crown inside a lodge filled with people, in front of which two vast groups of spectators are parted by a halberdier. They are kept in order by horsemen, whilst trumpeters proclaim the decision of the conclave. With the exception of the Pius, which is a statue, the rest is a fairly preserved fresco, disharmonised by the bleaching of the foreground. At the hours when light is thrown over the wall, one sees that Pinturicchio devoted more of his own personal labour than was his usual wont.⁵

beginning of 1508, is indicated by the facsimile of a letter introduced into the "Virgin, with the Child and Saints" in the ex-church of the Minorites of Spello. The letter, written by Gentile Baglioni from his castle the Rocca di Zocco, is dated April 8, 1508, and urges Bernardino to return to Siena, where his presence is desired by Pandolfo Petrucci. It proves that the Spello altarpiece was finished in the summer of that year. As a work of art it adds little to Pinturicchio's fame, being carried out with great attention to detail, but without aerial perspective or vigour of relief. Nor is it easy to understand how the infant Baptist on the steps of the Virgin's throne should be assigned to Raphael.¹ Pinturicchio had done better things at an earlier period, such as the Holy Family ordered by the nuns of the convent of Campansi,² the Virgin in Glory between two Saints in Mont' Oliveto, near S. Gimignano,³ the Coronation of the Virgin at the Vatican, originally in the church of La Fratta near Perugia, and the Assumption in the Naples Museum, commissioned for the neighbouring convent of Mont' Oliveto.⁴

The probability of Pinturicchio's visit to Rome in 1508 has already been spoken of in the lives of Signorelli and Perugino. On his return to Siena in 1509, in company with the former, who stood as godfather to his son,⁵ he received from the heirs of the Piccolomini the small sum of 14 ducats and a half, remaining due for the pictorial labours undertaken for that family.⁶ He then probably entered the service of Pandolfo Petrucci, in whose palace he left a series of subjects in fresco. We have seen how these decorations, which were but the continuation of similar ones by Signorelli and Genga, were allowed to fall into neglect, and how the only remnant of them is the Ulysses and Penelope, or Lucretia and Collatinus, now in possession of Mr. Barker in London.⁷ The last authentic picture of Pinturicchio is a beautiful cabinet-miniature of Christ carrying His Cross, now in the Palazzo Borromeo at Milan, finished in 1513. In that very year he died, it is said of hunger, at Siena on the Vincenzo at Siena (VERMIGLIOLI, p. 182). On Oct. 8 of the same year he sells property to Pandolfo Petrucci (Com. VASARI, vol. v., p. 280). In 1511 he sells his Chiugi property (VERMIGLIOLI, App. xlv.), and buys another at Siena (MARIOTTI, p. 219, and VERMIGLIOLI, p. 182).

11th of December, and was buried in SS. Vincenzo and Anastasio, now Oratorio della Contrada dell' Istrice.¹

The following catalogue completes the classification of Pinturicchio's works :—

*Spello. Ex-church of the Minorites.*²—The Virgin and Saints of 1508 has been alluded to in the foregoing life. The Virgin supports the naked Child on her knee. He clutches His mother's dress at the bosom, and casts His right arm round her neck. Two cherubs' heads and two flying angels in prayer are at her sides. The Virgin's face is small for her frame. The Infant Saviour is long and lean, and strained in attitude. A pleasing mask is that of the angel in flight to the left. The Baptist, holding a reed cross, sits writing on the step of the throne, in a forced position. In front of him is a desk with a pair of nippers and other instruments, and the letter of Baglioni. To the right stand S. Francis, a good type, and S. Lawrence with the gridiron, reading. In the border of his dress a rich embroidery represents the Crucifixion. To the left, S. Andrew, and S. Louis in prayer. The throne and its steps are minutely ornamented. The method of drawing recalls that of Perugino. The colour is slightly abraded in some places, and with this exception the altarpiece is fairly preserved. The distance is a landscape (wood).³

*Spello. Ex-church of the Minorites.*²—On the front of the pulpit in this church is a half-length of the Redeemer in a round (oil) much darkened by time and restoring. A flaw cutting the elbow and pit of the stomach has been filled up and coloured. The panel is also vertically split in half. The hips of the Redeemer, who holds a banner, are in a red cloth. The type is good, recalling those of Fiorenzo and Benozzo, lean too, and probably executed by Pinturicchio about 1500.⁴

tunic. The ground is overgrown with herbs and flowers; a fountain is in the middle ground. In the distance to the right is S. Jerome in prayer, and to the left a friar, S. Joseph behind the Virgin holding a barrel and bread. The head of the latter is well modelled, but somewhat pinched in features, his forms precisely defined. The action of the Baptist is a little affected, the youthful Christ heavy in frame and limb. The colour is rich, the touch clear and firm, the ornament minute and profuse; and the panel is one of the exquisite ones of Pinturicchio, dating about the time when the first Piccolomini frescoes were completed.¹

*Siena. No. 353.*²—Wood. Nativity. The Child, in a pretty movement, lies on the foreground, pinguid in form; near Him, left, the Virgin, pretty and plump, like one of Spagna's Peruginesque Madonnas. S. Joseph, on the right, of paltry aspect, sits behind the Infant, and, raising its veil, causes it to awake and look round at the Virgin. In rear are two shepherds in prayer, in the sky three injured angels. In the distance the angel announces to the pastors. To the left an edifice. The panel, in its old gilt frame, is broken and angular in drawing, the colour washy and of slight relief. It seems to be of Pinturicchio's later time, carried out in part in his atelier by Matteo Balducci or some other.

Monte Oliveto, near S. Gimignano.—Virgin enthroned between two saints (life-size, wood, distemper), ascribed by RUMOHR to Pacchiarotti (Forsch., vol. iii., p. 45), but, more properly, by GAYE (Carteg., vol. ii., p. 434) to Pinturicchio. It is to be borne in mind that this master had many journeymen at Siena (Matteo Balducci amongst others), and that his style was not without influence on Pacchiarotti. We do not trace the hand of any pupil in particular at the Piccolomini library, nor can we do so in the panel at Monte Oliveto. Like the foregoing, it still hangs in its old frame. The Virgin sits on the clouds, and prays. Rays issue from her almond-shaped glory in which there are eleven cherubs' heads. The distance is one of Pinturicchio's usual ones. To the left in front kneels a Pope of slender frame with the Twelve Apostles in the embroidery of his stole. To the right, a kneeling bishop. The touch is very careful in every part, the colour rosy and light and fairly relieved by light and shade, the draperies straight. The landscape has the green freshness of spring. The general aspect is that of a bright but opaque miniature.³

*Siena. S. Maria degli Angeli*⁴ (better known as Il Santuccio).—A Nativity called Pinturicchio (TATA, Guida, ubi sup., p. 104; FALUSCHI, Guida, ubi sup.; and VERMIGLIOLI, p. 184), of a low tone and flat, and more like a work by Pacchia than any other Sienese.

Rome. Vatican.—Originally at La Fratta, near Perugia (wood), a Coronation of the Virgin with the Twelve Apostles below in two groups (life-size), and five friars, including S. Francis praying on their knees in front. This picture has been catalogued by ORSINI and MEZZANOTTE, Vita di Perugino, pp. 127–8, as by Vannucci. It has become untransparent and heavy from successive varnishes, but was originally a fine Pinturicchio of about the year 1500. The figures are pleasant and of a youthful mould.¹

⁴ [The church alluded to is that of S. Galgano, not S. Maria degli Angeli. The picture is of the school of Piero di Cosimo (Olcott, Guide, p. 286) or, according to Mr. BERENSON, by that master himself (see Florentine Painters, 1909, p. 166).]

Rome. Vatican.—Marriage of S. Catherine. Small tempera panel, quite like a Pinturicchio.²

Rome. Galleria Borghese. Nos. 49, 51.—Scenes from the life of Joseph, part of a "cassone," hastily handled in the manner of Pinturicchio.

Rome. Vatican.—A Pope at the mass between S. Jerome and S. Thomas receiving the girdle, a small Umbrian panel of a reddish tone, reminiscent of Pinturicchio and Spagna.

Florence. Pitti Gallery. [No. 341].—Adoration of the Magi (wood). On the base of this small picture are the arms of the Vitelli of Città di Castello. The distance is very rich in episodes. A dull tone, unsatisfactory drawing, and rude touch, create doubts as to the authorship of Pinturicchio. It may be by one of his pupils.³

Florence. Galleria Lombardi.—Wood. Virgin and Child with a pretty and careful landscape distance; a small and fair creation of the master.⁴

Florence. Collection of the Duca Strozzi.—Christ on the Mount, with the three Apostles asleep in the foreground. This is a small panel in Pinturicchio's style.⁵

Florence. Torrigiani Gallery. [Nos. 11, 13, 23].—Wood. Incidents of a Marriage, small and not without merit, in the master's manner, but handled without his usual power, and perhaps executed by a pupil or imitator such as Tiberio d'Assisi.⁶

Naples. Museum.—Originally in the Cappella Paolo Tolosa at Monte Oliveto, near Naples (VASARI, vol. v., p. 170). Assumption (wood, tempera). Three angels at each side of the Virgin, S. Thomas in the middle of the foreground with the Apostles about him. The figures are a little under life-size. The tempera is injured and hard from repeated varnishing. Some heads are still fine, and the piece was originally a good one.

Città di Castello. Duomo. Sacristy.—Wood, tempera, figures half life-size. Genuine half-length of the Virgin holding the Infant erect in the act of benediction, with the youthful Baptist at one side. Landscape distance, much injured by the scaling of the flesh.⁷

Città di Castello. S. Gio. Decollato.—In this church is a banner with a figure of S. John. It has been given by VERMIGLIOLI to Pinturicchio (p. 79), but is a low-class production already noted elsewhere (see school of Signorelli, antea).

Perugia Gallery.—Lunette, transferred to canvas, first in the convent of S. Anna, represents the Virgin and Child, but has been injured.⁸

Same Gallery.—A S. Dominic; is of Pinturicchio's school.

Perugia. S. Pietro.—Annunciation, in a chapel to the left as one enters, assigned to Pinturicchio, but see postea in Spagna.

⁸ [Not by Pinturicchio.]

Milan. Palazzo Borromeo.—Wood. Christ on the way to Golgotha. He carries His Cross, assisted in front by a man drawing it forward with a cord. An executioner pushes Him from behind. As He walks, the Saviour turns round to the Virgin on the left, who follows the procession, attended by the Maries. In the distance Golgotha appears. The officers of the execution raise the crosses. A castle crowns a hill, and flights of birds are in the heavens. On the border one reads: "QUESTA OPERA E DI MANO DEL PINTURICCHIO DA PERUGIA MCCCCXIII." This miniature panel, which seems to have been in Pinturicchio's atelier at his death, is equal in freshness, carefulness, power, and richness of colour to the works of his best time. The females move with a grace akin to that of Perugino. The Christ is noble in action whilst the naked man pushes Him, but other figures are strained and somewhat angular in drawing. There is great richness in the ornaments and landscape.

Gubbio. Duomo.—Nativity, in an arched rectangle supported on pillars, in the ornament of which one reads: "LEONE X SEDENTE." VERMIGLIOLI assigns this (p. 112) to Pinturicchio, though it is clearly of a later time by some itinerant limner in possession of a tracing belonging to the master. The picture is in oil, sharply outlined, incorrectly drawn, and dusky in the shadows. The painter seems the same who worked imitating Spagna at Viterbo.

Viterbo. Chiesa degli Osservanti.—Here is also a Nativity. The style is that of Spagna's pupils, such as Jacopo da Norcia, or the Perugian Orlandi, who was assistant to Sinibaldo Ibi.¹

Assisi (near). Torre d'Andreù. Church of S. Bernardo, two miles from S. Maria degli Angeli.—On the high altar is a distemper on panel representing the Presentation of Christ in the Temple (eleven figures), with S. Bernardino kneeling in the middle of the foreground. This is a mediocre production by a pupil.²

Bettona (near). Ex-Church of S. Simone.—The walls of this abandoned church are filled with paintings in the mixed manner of Pinturicchio and Spagna (see the latter, postea).³

Amelia (near Spoleto). Church of ex-Convent of the Minori Reformati.—Wood. Altarpiece. Virgin and Child between S. John Baptist and S. Francis, in the mixed character of Pinturicchio and Spagna, and possibly by Tiberio d'Assisi. In a lunette is the Eternal between two angels (gold ground in part repainted).

Dresden. Museum. [No. 41].—Wood, tempera. This is a portrait of a youth, with long hanging hair in a red cap and dress, by Pinturicchio. The distance a landscape.

Berlin. Museum. [No. 143].—The Virgin and Child (wood, tempera), the most favourable specimen of Pinturicchio in this Gallery.⁴

Same Gallery. [No. 134].—Annunciation (wood). Umbrian in character, but of small importance, and damaged in the flesh tints.

³ [These frescoes are now in the Municipio at Bettona, and are, according to Mr. Perkins, characteristic works of Tiberio d'Assisi.]

⁴ [Mr. Berenson does not give this to the master.]

Berlin. Museum. [No. 136].—Bust portrait of a youth in a black cap, with fair hair, rough in surface and too feeble for Pinturicchio.

Same Gallery. [Nos. 142, 149].—Episodes from the life of Tobias. These are good and interesting, but they exhibit marks of Tuscan, mingled with the Umbrian, education.

Same Gallery. [No. 132].—Adoration of the Magi. Originally in S. Caterina of Faenza, and painted for the Manzolini family of that place. We shall give reasons for assigning this picture to Giovanni Battista (Bertucci) of Faenza.

Vienna. Esterhazy Gallery. [No. 49].—Tiberius Gracchus, given to Pinturicchio, but probably by some follower of Signorelli (see antea, school of Signorelli).

Attenburg. Lindenau Gallery.—Wood, oil. Panels representing busts in rounds and figures of Virtues in variously shaped panels, originally part of a ceiling, said to be by Pinturicchio, and certainly like a production of one of his scholars such as Balducci.

Schleissheim. Gallery. [No. 1116].—Virgin and Child, between SS. Jerome and John. A poor imitation of Pinturicchio and much repainted.

Paris. Louvre. [No. 1540].—Virgin and Child, no doubt by Spagna (see postea).

Paris. Louvre. Nos. 172, 173¹.—The Judgments of Solomon and of Daniel, catalogued as of the school of Perugino (wood). These are fairly composed and carefully executed in Pinturicchio's manner, and, if not by him, might be by Tiberio d'Assisi.²

Same Gallery. [No. 174].—Virgin and Child in the same class as the foregoing, perhaps a little better.

Same Gallery. [No. 175].—Virgin and Child, half-length, in a glory of cherubs. A poor work, somewhat like a production of Mainardi's school.

Same Gallery. [No. 181].—Wood, arched. Nativity assigned to Pinturicchio, but by one of his disciples, coarse and much repainted.

Same Gallery. [No. 182].—Virgin, Child, and Donor (wood), much retouched, but in the manner of the foregoing.

Same Gallery. [No. 1417].—Virgin and Child between S. Gregory and another saint, more in Pinturicchio's style than the above.³

London. National Gallery. [No. 693].—S. Catherine and a kneeling monk, with a landscape background. This is a fair example; but the figures are a little feeble.

Same Gallery. [No. 703].—From the Wallerstein Collection. The Virgin behind a parapet, on which the Infant stands. A minute but somewhat cold and restored specimen of Pinturicchio's skill.

³ [Mr. Berenson gives this to Pinturicchio himself.]

Other pieces in this Collection of Umbrian character are of less importance than the above.

London. Dudley House.—A Baptism between SS. Augustine and Ambrose. A Friar preaching. These small fragments of a predella are either by Pinturicchio or one of the assistants in his school.

Ireland. Brinsley Morley, Esq.—The Death of Hector and the Taking of Troy, assigned to Pinturicchio in the Dublin International Exhibition. These two little panels are not purely Umbrian in character, the technical execution being reminiscent of the Florentine school, as represented by the art of Sebastian Mainardi.¹

A few words on Bernardino of Perugia.

The Marchese Ricci published a valuable work in 1834, entitled : Memoirs of the Painters of the March of Ancona. In the course of his search for documents and proofs in support of his narrative, he discovered that Bernardino of Perugia or Pinturicchio (as he supposed) had begun to reside at San Severino in 1509, and that he had done, in 1524, an altarpiece, now in S.

Domenico of S. Severino representing the Virgin and Child, between SS. Severino, Domenico, Rosa, and Venanzio.¹ At a later period, Signor Giuseppe Ranaldi, to whom Marchese Ricci had been indebted for the discovery of records justifying the foregoing statements, furnished Vermiglioli with a fuller notice of them, from which it appears that Bernardino of Perugia made scutcheons for the magistrates of S. Severino in 1502-3, and completed other labours in the following order: 1509, a Standard for the Duomo of S. Severino (existing in Vermiglioli's time, and signed: "BERNARDINO PERUSINO PINXIT. HOC OPUS FIERI FECIT PIERANTONIUS DE GENTILIBUS ACCIACCHAFERRI PRO SUA DEVOTIONE, 1509.") 1513, Pennons. 1514, a panel ordered in 1512 for the church of S. M. di Mercato, and an altarpiece for the chapel of the Public Palace. 1519, He is taxed with other citizens.² Colucci (Antichità Picene ap. VERMIGLIOLI, p. 74), notices an altarpiece at La Bastia, near Fabriano, which he describes as signed: "BERNARDINI DE PERUS. PINXIT."

We have not seen any of the pieces noticed by Ricci and Vermiglioli, nor have we visited La Bastia, near Fabriano, which is a different place from La Bastia, near Perugia, but we have seen other pieces of interest in this inquiry.³ Premising that Bernardinus of Perugia, who was still living in 1519, cannot be Pinturicchio who died at Siena in 1513, we note first a Marriage of S. Catherine assigned by Vermiglioli⁴ to Pinturicchio, in—

Perugia. Church of the Convent of S. Catherine.—Second altar to the right (wood, tempera, almost life-size). The Virgin enthroned with the Child, who takes the ring from S. Catherine. S. Peter stands to the left; S. Mary Magdalen and S. Benedict to the right. In front, the young Baptist holds the reed cross. Four angels fly above the throne, two of them with flowers, two playing instruments. Umbrian character is apparent in the length, leanness, and affected action of the frames and heads. The outlines are mechanically and incorrectly drawn, the draperies without style. The colour, of a dull neutral tint and of a dry thin substance, is slightly relieved by red shadow. The treatment of this picture and its peculiar hatching recall to mind the works of Carlo and even of Vittorio Crivelli, whose influence extended to the painters of S. Severino.⁵

The group of the Virgin and two children prettily conceived, and recalling, in that sense only, Raphael's in the altarpiece of S. PERKINS, this altarpiece, which represents the Madonna and Child with Angels, and is dated 1498, is still in existence at Bastia, and is one of Bernardino's earliest recognisable works, in which he clearly shows himself to have been a pupil or follower of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo (see Rassegna d'Arte, April 1906).]

ment also recalling those of Raphael, but by an artist unable to realise them. The costumes are fanciful, and gold is profusely employed. The execution a little less rude than the above, yet the manner similar.¹

Perugia.—In private hands, but originally in S. Severo. A Virgin and Child, with a saint in front, and two more at the sides. Two angels attend in rear. Similar to the last.

London. Dudley House.—Wood, tempera, a third life-size. Virgin holding a bird by a string, the Infant Christ in her grasp, within an arch decorated with fruits and flowers. Like the preceding, with a mixture of the schools of Squarcione and Crivelli.

The painter of all these pieces is an Umbrian who preserves the stamp of his countrymen in the character, type, and action of his figures. The handling, the system of tempera, costumes, and copious gildings are those of the San Severini, of Carlo and Vittorio Crivelli. Either he went early from Perugia to Sanseverino, or he was born there.² One traces the effort of a follower of Crivelli to assume the Perugian manner rather than that of a Perugian desirous of appropriating that of Crivelli.³ The place where the records of Bernardino of Perugia have been found is S. Severino. The pictures above described are like those of the San Severini and Crivelli, and those amongst them which are in the Gallery of Perugia are attributed to Bernardino of Perugia. We therefore possess enough to determine the style of Bernardino who was so long confounded with Pinturicchio. Yet, we must not forget that another picture exists under the name of Bernardino of Perugia. It is in

Paris. Louvre. [No. 289].—Subject—the Crucifixion, with numerous figures. Orsini assigns it (Guida di Perugia) to Pinturicchio, with the date of 1518. It is an Umbrian work in oil, by a man of a coarse fibre, but full of power and life, a contemporary of Giambattista Caporali, Cocchi, and Paris Alfani, but not the same artist as the author of the foregoing series, unless he completely altered his manner.⁴

A few lines also for Matteo Balducci.

This third-rate artist was born at Fontignano, and is known by a contract of 1509 (in which his name appears in the capacity of a witness) to have been in connection with Pinturicchio (Com. VASARI, vol. xi., p. 164). He had, however, gained no great proficiency there when Pinturicchio died. In 1517, he was bound apprentice to Bazzi for six years (Doc. Sen., vol. iii., p. 72). GUALANDI published a contract and payments for an altarpiece by him in S. Francesco di Pian Castagnaio in Montamiata 1523-4 (Memorie, ubi sup.,

² [Bernardino doubtless went from Perugia to the Marches. He is now known to have held a species of art school or academy for many years in San Severino.]

³ [The reverse was the case; as MR. PERKINS has pointed out (see Rassegna d'Arte, Aug. 1907), the altarpiece of Bernardino at La Bastia, near Fabriano, is sufficient to prove him a pupil or follower of Fiorenzo in his earlier years.]

ser. ii., pp. 17, 18). There are returns of his property in Città della Pieve for the year 1543, and he was a municipal councillor in that place in 1550 and 1553 (MEZZANOTTE, Vita di Perugino, ubi sup., p. 286).

Matteo Balducci is the author of the following pictures :—

Siena. S. Spirito. Cappella de' Borghesi.—Altarpiece (wood, oil), assigned (FALUSCHI, Guida, p. 142; TAIA, Guida, p. 111) to Matteo di Giovanni. Assumption of the Virgin. By the side of the tomb, below the glory, S. Francis and S. Catherine of Siena, and in front two infant angels. Two seraphs at the side of the glory bear flowerpots. In a lunette, the Eternal in benediction in a halo with cherubs' heads. The Virgin's face is softly expressive, but the figures generally are feeble, and the colour is dim, washy, and without relief. The angels in front of the tomb resemble those at the base of the plinths in the Cappella Piccolomini. Balducci is therefore an Umbrian of the school of Pinturicchio.¹ The predella of this picture, representing the Virgin with the Dead Messiah on her lap, with S. John Evangelist and the Magdalen, S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, and S. Catherine, is in the same style as the altarpiece, and now in Siena. Academy.—No. 213. There are further in the collection—No. 311: Half-length of the Virgin and Child between SS. Bernardino and Catherine. No. 307: An Angel in Adoration (small panel). No. 321: Virgin and Child between SS. Jerome and Francis. Nos. 310, 316, 312, 318: The two first, in tempera, figures of Justice and Faith; the two last, in oil, Fortitude and Charity.

Siena. S. Maria Maddalena.—Nativity (small), an Umbrian composition on the model of Pinturicchio, of a light colour, and feeble in character, variously assigned to Perugino and Pinturicchio.

Same Convent. Virgin and Child, and youthful Baptist, reminiscent of Pinturicchio, and perhaps by some other of his pupils than Balducci.

Paris. Louvre. Musée Napoleon III. No. 195.—Virgin, Child, and Saints, classed in the Umbrian school, careful, but feeble tempera, in Balducci's manner.

There is no trace of the influence of Bazzi on Balducci in all these pieces.²

¹ [There are no conclusive documents to support the traditional attribution of this picture to Balducci. Taking it as a starting point, however, MR. BERENSON has been able to gather together a large number of works which he ascribes to the same artistic personality (see his Central Italian Painters, 1909, pp. 137–139).]

² [At least one critic has expressed doubts as to the Balducci who was Pinturicchio's assistant and the Balducci who was apprenticed at so late a date to Bazzi, being one and the same person. Surely, if Balducci was capable of painting the works now attributed to him, it is rather surprising to know that he apprenticed himself to Sodoma, from whose influence the above-mentioned works, at least, are quite free.]

CHAPTER XII

LO SPAGNA

THE most interesting figure amongst the Peruginesques, Raphael always excepted, is that of Giovanni di Pietro, known in his own time and by posterity as Lo Spagna. The darkness which conceals the history of his birth overspreads the greatest part of his career. There is no knowledge of the period when he joined Perugino. His life is a blank until 1507 [?], when he appears for the first time as an independent master at Todi.¹ The qualification of Spaniard appended to his name in a document of that period leaves no doubt as to his nationality; but the artistic education which he received was purely Italian; and he seems to have been bred to the profession of a painter under Perugino and Pinturicchio.²

As such he is a candidate for a share in the execution of the ceiling at the hall of the Cambio, or of the double altarpiece at S. Francesco al Monte, ordered of Vannucci in 1502. The style which characterises his authentic works in Spoleto may be traced in the Martyrdom of S. Sebastian of 1505 at Panicale, and in a fresco of the same period in S. Agostino of that place.³ He was the companion of Raphael at Perugia during their joint stay in the school of Perugino, and after Sanzio began to labour on his own account in Città di Castello. His manner is a mixture of the Peruginesque and Raphaellesque, without the high qualities of either; and its earliest development is to be found in the youthful and somewhat feeble Nativity at the Vatican, called the Madonna della Spineta, from the convent near Todi, for which it was commissioned.⁴

There is very little in this composition calling for special remark.

³ See antea, Perugino's life.

⁴ Gallery of the Vatican, assigned by VERMIGLIOLI, Bernardino, ubi sup., p. 42, to Pinturicchio; by ORSINI, Life of Perugino, ubi sup., p. 104, to Vannucci; and in descriptions of the Vatican, to Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Raphael. The latter theory seems countenanced by PASSAVANT, vol. ii., pp. 5, 449, when describing a head of S. Joseph amongst the drawings of the British Museum. The drawing, however, cannot be by Raphael, being too loose. On the back of the sheet is a figure of S. Sebastian, in which Spagna's hand, following the style of Perugino, is more apparent. But caution is required before assigning either the head or the S. Sebastian to Spagna. The former is not exactly the same as the head of S. Joseph in the Spineta altarpiece.

The Infant, lying on the foreground, with its fingers in its mouth; S. Joseph to the left, on one knee, expressing surprise by startled action; the Virgin to the right, resigned and in prayer; two angels in rear between them and a third in immediate attendance behind the mother of Christ, form the principal group. In the middle distance, two shepherds, and others on foot and on horseback in a landscape; to the right, the penthouse and cattle; in the air, three angels, erect, singing from a long scroll—this is all. The peculiar traits in the piece which distinguish Spagna are the long head, neck, and shoulderless frame of S. Joseph, the square and lanky shape of angels, curt proportions of hand and foot, and overcharged drapery. Superadded are gravity of demeanour, an ashen grey coolness of tone, equal finish of parts in fore and background, minuteness of detail without great relief by light and shade. The picture, though painted in oil, looks washy and pale. It is the first impression of an arrangement repeated with variations in the altarpiece of the Ancajani at the Berlin Museum.¹ This abraded distemper may be compared with the Spineta Nativity, and will prove that the Virgin, Child, and attendant angels are lined in both from different sides of the same cartoon.

The Berlin altarpiece is an Adoration of the Kings, and was painted for Ancajani, who lived fifteen years (1478–1503) Abbot of Ferentillo, near Spoleto. It was placed in the church of S. Pietro attached to that monastery, and was only removed for the purpose of being restored in the year 1700. That it should have been attributed to Raphael's youth is due to the Peruginisque mode of its distribution and drawing, and its Raphaelesque accompaniments of type and drapery. Yet, on close inspection, its cold carefulness produces an impression different from that of a Raphael. Purity, delicacy, and refinement are the qualities usually assigned to the figures.² It would be truer to say that they are carried out with honesty of purpose and minuteness of detail, but with less feeling or selection than are usual even in Sanzio's earliest performances. Their setting and air are such as might be realised by a man without great originality of power, of the passionless diligence for which Sassoferatto was remarkable at a later period. The mould of the faces is broadly imitated from that of Raphael, but without his candour and lightness of grace; with more than his usual stiffness, but none of his sentiment. They are simple blocks without waving lines of beauty. The male heads are long in forehead and jaw, pinched and withered in features, often vulgar like those of Pinturicchio; those of females and angels are round and plump, but of an unhealthy fleshiness, unnaturally projected from the neck, with round noses and small prim mouths, a family likeness being traceable through them all, and proving conventionalism and want of vigour in the artist. The drapery is drawn together by hand, and made to fold where nature would have left it plain and hanging. It is for this reason surcharged, broken or festooned. Without entering into detail, one may note the heavy squareness of the Virgin and of the young king erect on the right, the bony dryness of the kneeling one, and the gaunt leanness of the angels. All the hands and feet are short in shape and cramped in the Umbrian fashion. The landscape, a vale, on the rocky sides of which the king's suite descends, is a mixture of Raphael and Pinturicchio. The colour, abraded down to the cloth, leaves the drawing bare, and seems to have been originally of a pale yellow, slightly shadowed with grey.¹

The two altarpieces of the Spineta and of the Ancajani, executed for convents in the vicinity of Spoleto, where Spagna usually lived, naturally suffer by comparison with pictures by Perugino and Raphael; yet they are of the greatest interest as evidence of the process by which an industrious and conscientious workman succeeded in combining the manner of his master with that of his comrade, and laid the foundation of a prosperous career by steadiness and attention. The mode in which he concentrated the individuality of Raphael, Perugino, and of Pinturicchio in productions of his own is further illustrated in the large panel of S. Girolamo at Perugia,² where a vast inlaid throne, protected by a rich dais, is occupied by a beautiful Virgin and Child full of Raphaellesque freshness. A S. Jerome in sweeping draperies stands reading intently at one side, with S. Anthony behind him. S. John the Baptist on the other looks round towards the throne, to which he points, and S. Francis pensively pauses as he holds a book in both hands. The style, which reveals Spagna in the two first and in the angel above them, is modified by a reminiscence of Pinturicchio in the two last, whilst an angel, hovering to the left over the pair, resembles one by Vannucci. In the minute detail and symmetry of the distance, in the finish of the ornaments on ¹ The angles of the frame contain two Sibyls, SS. Benedict and Seolastica. The ornament of the frame, which is of Spagna's time, has been renewed or retouched.

A drawing (No. 62, MS. Payne Knight, Brit. Museum), is preserved, and has been assigned by PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. ii., p. 547, and WAAGEN, Treasures, vol. i., p. 226, to Sanzio. It is described as a study for the young king standing to the right in the Ancajani altarpiece. The attitude is not exactly the same, however, and the drawing is inverted. But this is a feeble school work.

The character of Spagna is more decidedly apparent in (No. 63, MS. Payne Knight, Brit. Museum), a drawing of a group of horsemen and two figures on foot, in black point on slightly tinted yellow paper, with the lights in white. This sheet, once assigned to Raphael, is now under the name of Pinturicchio. The style is that of Spagna.

the throne, in the cast of drapery in general, one is also reminded of Pinturicchio; but the hand is that of Spagna, whose talent is not sufficient to yield anything of great originality, and who supports himself as he best can by grafting on the old style of Vannucci and Bernardino the younger one of Sanzio, and thus produces a cento of no disagreeable kind, but still without the breath of independent genius. Most striking is the use of oil medium on the system pursued by Raphael at the beginning of his change to the Florentine manner, the pale colour being laid in on a white ground. Equally so are the leanness, dryness, and length of forms, and the bony development of articulations and extremities resembling those of the Milan Sposalizio.¹

But the companionship of Spagna and Raphael is still more apparent in pieces now preserved in private English collections. In a charming little panel in oil at Stafford House in London, Christ crowned with thorns is depicted in the act of carrying the Cross. He bends slightly under the dreadful load. His face, of a fine tone, is turned towards the spectator, and the delicate hair of head and beard waves lightly in the breeze. A clear sky verging to pale yellow where the distant hills impinge upon it, an undulating country of varied hues with trees of simple branch and leaf, form a total so completely impregnated with Raphael's spirit that the picture bears his name.² The Saviour, indeed, is full of tender resignation; the touch is exquisite, the colour warm and pleasing, the landscape bright. The whole is worthy of Raphael, yet really by Spagna imitating Sanzio. The type and forms are less select and grand, the pose less simple and natural than Raphael's. The figure betrays an overstudied elegance, and the drapery an unnecessary repetition of folds in one direction. The colour is more remarkable for softness than force, more careful than bold and masterly. That which in Raphael is a natural gift, the undefinable something which gives its charm to everything he does, is wanting.³

Mr. Fuller Maitland's collection is enriched with another attractive specimen of Spagna's imitative capacity; an adaptation on a small scale of Perugino's Christ on the Mount,⁴ with the Redeemer in profile, the three sleeping apostles in the foreground slightly changed in attitude,

² [No. 61.] The catalogue of Stafford House contains a statement that the picture was formerly in the Riccardi (Medici) Palace in Florence, and that it was originally painted for the private chapel of Giovanni de' Medici, who was afterwards Leo X. An elaborate yellow grey monochrome ornament gives richness to the small pilaster framing (wood, oil).

the angel sent back into the distance, and the soldiers in rear in quiet action. Raphael is also credited with this picture. It has not, however, the ease and unstrained action, the sweetness and freshness, the charm of life which please in Sanzio even when his figures are least happy in proportions or general aspect. Nor is the colour in Mr. Maitland's panel treated with the great master's accustomed ease, or bright with his vivid and transparent tone. It has not the pure harmonic chord which vibrates to the depths of the spectator's heart. The difference between this Christ at the Mount and one that Raphael might have produced, is that which must always be discerned in comparing the creations of two men, one of whom is replete with genius, whilst the other is not.

Spagna, the least favoured of the two, is the author of Mr. Maitland's Christ on the Mount. Yet Mr. Passavant, in speaking of it as one of Raphael's youthful efforts,¹ supports his theory on a passage in Vasari, in which it is stated that a highly finished panel representing the subject was ordered by Guidubaldo of Urbino, and after many vicissitudes became the property of the monastery of the Camaldoles of Urbino.² From thence Mr. Passavant relates that it was taken to Gubbio, and preserved there in the family of the Gabrielli, one of the members of which had been prior of the Camaldoles; and thence to the Palazzo Gabrielli in Rome. But the whole of this story rests on a fanciful basis. The picture of Mr. Fuller Maitland is that which was in the Palazzo Gabrielli at Rome, but it is not that which Vasari mentions, unless we assume that he described it incorrectly. He distinctly states that the Saviour prays on the Mount, but that the apostles are asleep in the distance. At Mr. Maitland's the apostles are on the foreground. But, even were it true that this very work was done for the Duke Guidubaldo, the name of Raphael would still be incorrect, and we must assume that Spagna executed it in oil at Raphael's request.³

The catalogue of the Spagnas in this class is hardly exhausted with the notice of a graceful and exquisitely finished little Virgin and Child, a distemper in the mode of the Ancajani altarpiece, exhibited under the name of Perugino in the Gallery of Rovigo.⁴

² VASARI, Life of Raphael, vol. viii., pp. 7, 8.

⁴ [No. 42.] Gallery of Rovigo. This is a half-length with a vertical split through the Virgin's face, a little restored, of a pleasing warm colour and somewhat flat. The Virgin's gilt nimbus is new. Wood, 15 inches by 13.

[Both Mr. Berenson and Mr. Perkins look upon a Madonna and Child with SS. John Baptist and Jerome, in Mr. Johnson's Collection at Philadelphia, U.S.A., as a possible early work of Spagna (see F. MASON PERKINS in Rassegna d'Arte, August 1905; and B. BERENSON, Central Italian Painters, 1909).]

As early as 1507, Spagna begins to leave more certain traces of his passage through the towns surrounding Spoleto. In September of that year he promises a Coronation to the church of the Reformati of Monte Santo di Todi, and agrees to imitate the altarpiece of S. Girolamo at Narni.¹ He stipulates for time, and is only ready to deliver in 1511. As at Narni, where the painter is an assistant in Domenico Ghirlandaio's atelier,² the Saviour crowns the Virgin, on clouds supported by cherubs' heads, under a conical canopy held up by seraphs, in the centre of a company of angels, prophets, and sibyls. On the meadow, below, S. Francis kneels in the midst of a score of saints, prominent amongst whom are SS. Jerome, Louis, Bernardino, and John the Baptist. The arching of the upper part is a border with cherubs' heads; and three niches in each pilaster contain SS. James, Mary Magdalen, Louis, Giovanni Capistrano, Catherine, and Bernardino. A better proof of the subordinate talent of Spagna can scarcely be found than is here afforded. The clever and conscientious Spaniard, who commonly imitates the manner of the Umbrians, is now willing to take an entire composition from a Florentine; and he does so with comparative success, moulding the figures according to his own familiar type, and tinting them after his own fashion. It is not difficult to select some fine forms and heads, particularly in females and angels, but in general his tendency is to exaggerate the usual length of the human frame; and he often fails to give it the proper life and breadth. The round faces are not unfrequently vulgar in look and in feature, and there is a want of breed in the coarse feet and in the large long palms of short-fingered hands attached to thick-set wrists. His study of drapery is superficial, and the result too often unmeaning festoon. The flesh-tints also are not those of healthy individuals in whose veins the red blood flows, on whose cheek it mantles. They are pale and sickly, shadowed with earthy grey, and therefore slight in relief. They are untransparent and raw.³ Spagna's adaptation of Perugino's

³ Three of the male saints in the glory to the right are discoloured by sunlight. The picture is 9½ feet by 7¾, wood, with the "MDXI" at the base. The figures now in the pilaster frame seem the same as those in Dudley House. But they are in oil, whilst those of Dudley House are distemper pieces. The pilaster saints at Todi are more modern in appearance than the rest of the picture, and perhaps they are copied from older ones. They are at all events replicas of those which belong to Lord Ward.

manner was thus incomplete, as he did not master the science of colouring, nor compensate for its absence by feeling. His cold and mechanical treatment seems incompatible with the attainment of perfect atmosphere.

In order to copy the Narni altarpiece, it was necessary that Spagna should visit that place. Two saints, the Beato Bernardino da Feltre and S. Anthony of Padua in S. Girolamo of Narni, might prove that he had been there, though they cannot be taken as good specimens of his skill.¹

At Todi, it is said that he painted six of the cathedral chapels; and the remnants of a Trinity in fresco transferred with success to a wall in the Duomo, shows that when he worked there, his style was in its prime and of the fullest breadth.²

In the Coronation, which he completed immediately after 1511, on the model of that of Todi, for the Franciscans of S. Martino near Trevi, he repeated many saints in reversed position, as he had learned to do in the school of Perugino, and he reduced the total number of personages considerably. He placed a very graceful Magdalen and S. Catherine at the sides of the foreground, and in the distance a view of the convent and church of S. Francesco at Assisi, as seen from the mill on the old road from Sterpeto to the sanctuary. His drawing and colour on panel remain unchanged.³

² The Eternal, under life-size, is broadly treated, as likewise the fleshy form of the crucified Redeemer. There is some heaviness in the proportions, which are however correct. The drapery is festooned. The flesh stippled over verde, of a reddish tinge.

A S. Bernardino da Feltre on panel in the interior of the convent of Monte Santo is less able. This is a panel about two feet high, split vertically down the middle. The Saint holds a banner on which one reads: "CURA ILLIUS AB MONS PIETAT." The painting is a little flat and hard. [According to MR. PERKINS this is a school-piece (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907).]

A more successful production of the same period is the fresco of the Assumption, dated 1512, in the dead-house of the convent. It is far less crowded than the Coronations, and abler in conception and design. The Virgin in her almond-shaped halo stands in a grand and natural attitude, and the cherubs in the glory are worthy of Perugino. Two angels in prayer at her sides would be charming, were the long stiff frame lined out with grace equal to that of the heads. As it is, the stiffness strikes one as akin to that of the planets in Perugino's ceiling at the Cambio of Perugia. SS. Jerome, John the Baptist, Francis, and Antony of Padua, looking up as they kneel, are amongst the finest things of Spagna, the latter especially full of inspired tenderness. The cast of drapery is excellent, especially in the saints in monkish dress, and the pale yellow flesh-lights are fused with ease into the reddish stippling of the half-tones and shadows. Yet the failings traceable through the Spineta and Ancajani altarpieces upwards are not entirely absent.¹

More curious, however, and perhaps of greater interest, are the frescoes in the church of the Madonna delle Lagrime at Trevi. In a lunette, S. Ubaldo in benediction sits between rows of kneeling monks, whilst an angel holds up an open book out of which he reads, and others attend with his crosier and mitre. In the Deposition from the Cross, beneath the lunette, as in the chief personage of the lunette itself, a distant reminiscence of Raphael may be discovered. The Deposition is taken from that in the Borghese Palace at Rome, or from one of the numerous drawings sketched previous to its completion. But at Trevi the composition is transferred to the wall in Spagna's manner, the figures being slender and square, and carried out with his cold and unwearying diligence.² On the pilasters of the altar, two canvases contain S. Catherine of Alexandria, and S. Cecilia, in natural proportions, both nicely posed and drawn, with a fair share of elegance and refinement in their appearance.³ Had not Spagna renewed his companionship with

² These frescoes are injured by a flaw running down the centre of the wall. Part of the angel holding the crosier has scaled away with the lime of the wall. The head of Christ in the Entombment is rubbed off and retouched, and that of a spectator nearest to the man carrying the Saviour's body at the shoulders is new. The Virgin on the left is in great part damaged. Indeed the whole of the left side of the wall is in a bad condition. A Saint is painted in a niche to the left of the Entombment, a S. Joseph in another niche to the right. Above are two half-length Prophets in medallions on mosaic ground.

³ S. Catherine holds a book and a sword. Her face is a little vulgar. The blue background is repainted and opaque. The S. Cecilia plays the pipes. Her head is neatly attired, and the feet and hands are better drawn than usual. On the ground are a flute, tambourine, and music. The flesh is not so well preserved as in the S. Catherine, and the shadows have become black. But Spagna's execution of the figures in tempera is better than usual. Both are life-size. [Now in the Municipio.]

Raphael at Rome, he could scarcely have done anything so redolent of the great master; but the question arises, where may Spagna and Raphael have met again. Could they have seen each other at Florence or at Rome? Proofs of Spagna's residence at Florence are not forthcoming; nor is there direct evidence of his stay at Rome, but the existence of certain frescoes there might circumstantially confirm it.

The summer residence of La Magliana, enlarged by Julius II., was frequently used in the sixteenth century for parties of pleasure. A chapel in the interior of the edifice, erected under the superintendence of the Cardinal of Pavia, was adorned with frescoes of the Annunciation and Visitation, a Martyrdom of S. Felicity, and the Eternal in benediction. Although damage of various kinds has been done to these wall paintings, in the first instance by the opening of a door between the Virgin and the Angel of the Annunciation, and by a breach of large dimensions in the Martyrdom; in the next place by the transfer of the remains to canvas in S. Cecilia at Rome; there is enough left for forming a judgment upon them. The Annunciation and Visitation are like designs by Perugino carried out by Spagna. The grouping, movement, and types are affected, tender, and graceful. The Virgin's head in the Visitation is distinctly Peruginesque, and the two angels at the sides, with their arms across, recall those in song in the sky of the Spineta Nativity.¹ The most important variation of these pieces from one by Perugino is in the drawing, the faulty nature of which points directly to Spagna. In the Annunciation, lively movements are marred by the exaggerated manner in which the extremities are cramped. The drapery also is like that of Perugino's declining years, or that of the Coronation and Crucifixion of 1502 at S. Francesco al Monte of Perugia. The colour is that of the Entombment at Trevi, of a pale yellow flesh shaded with greenish grey, without much relief or mass of chiaroscuro. The handling is also like Spagna's. The Martyrdom of S. Felicity is scarcely recognisable in its mutilated condition. But the composition is exactly that of Raphael, as engraved by Marc Antonio, though the execution apparently remained in Spagna's hands, as the colour resembles his in the Entombment of Trevi.

The Eternal is a noble conception, in the spirit of Raphael's best time. The splendid turn of the Father's frame as He looks down from the glory by which He is surrounded, with His left hand open, and the right raised above the forehead in token of blessing, is full of swing, whilst the two angels at His sides casting flowers from out of the clouds, are admirably conceived. These figures are so fine as to leave no room for doubting they were designed by Raphael, of the same stamp as the

Sacrifice of Abraham, Moses and the Burning Bush, and the Dream of Jacob, in the Hall of Heliodorus at the Vatican, or the mosaics at S. Maria del Popolo. But the composition is not carried out by its creator. It is drawn with some hardness and want of feeling. The draperies are an adaptation of Raphael's grand cast without the necessary study of the forms beneath it. The handling is cold, the colour pleasing, but wanting in atmosphere and relief, and treated without breadth.¹ Spagna, not Giulio Romano, or Penni, would have worked out a sketch of Raphael in this way. It might be that in the Annunciation and Visitation he used a cartoon of Perugino's school, taking for the two other frescoes one from Raphael. The impression in general seems to be that the whole series is by the same artist. Spagna's imitation of Perugino and Sanzio would thus be very tangibly proved.²

After much wandering in this wise between the capital and cities in the valleys of the Tiber and its confluent, Spagna determined to settle permanently in one spot with his family, and he chose Spoleto for this purpose, perhaps because his wife, who was a native of those parts, desired it, perhaps because the town was centrally situated with respect to places in which he found most employment.

Before the death of Julius II. in 1513 he had painted the arms of that pontiff for the Public Palace at Spoleto in the usual form, with two fine compositions of Charity and Clemency at the sides, and Justice in a lunette above them.³ It is curious to mark the resemblance between the first of these subjects and Marc Antonio's engraving from Raphael's Charity. One sees how much more successful Spagna was when he imitated Sanzio than when he took Perugino or Pinturicchio for his models.⁴ He doubtless adorned the whole of the space in part filled up by these arms; and the whitewash on the walls may yet conceal some of his frescoes.⁵ Almost every year brings to light some specimen of his skill in Spoleto; and lately a fine life-size Virgin and Child of

² [There is no doubt as to Spagna having visited Rome. The frescoes of Apollo and the Nine Muses, now in the Capitoline Gallery at Rome—whence they were removed from this same villa of La Magliana—are certainly by his hand. These works were evidently unknown to the authors at the time they wrote.]

³ [Now No. 40 of Pinacoteca.]

⁵ Above a door in this hall, two angels in a niche (fresco) seem also by Spagna.

good movement and powerful tone has been recovered above the first altar to the right in S. Ansano.¹

A Crucifixion may also be seen in a very bad condition at the sides of the Oratorio di S. Pietro Martire in S. Domenico;² a Virgin and Child amongst saints, and other wall paintings, in the ex-monastery della Stella.³

Spagna's masterpiece of this period, however, is the fresco of the Infant Christ erect with the orb, on the lap of the Virgin, seated between SS. Jerome and Francis, Catherine and Brizio, once a portion of a decoration in the citadel of Spoleto, and since taken down for transfer to the Palazzo Comunale. A scutcheon in the lunette is held up by children of ungainly aspect, yet reminiscent of the Raphaelesque, and the pilasters are neatly dressed with arabesques. Great freshness and a pleasing air give charm to the Infant Christ and to the Virgin and Saints. A clear, well fused, and transparent colour adds to their beauty, yet a general coldness is prevalent, and there is some want of expression and feeling in the slender figures.⁴

Equally important are the altarpieces of the Cappella S. Stefano in S. Francesco at Assisi, which was completed in July 1516, and the frescoes in the cell of S. Francis⁵ at S. Maria degli Angeli. The irregular hexagon of the latter is filled with portraits of saints chiefly of the Franciscan order in various action and natural gesture, conversing or in thought, and the more successfully wrought as models were not wanting to Spagna when he composed the groups. They are drawn with great firmness of hand, rounded successfully and coloured in a powerful and rich tone.

In the same place are school frescoes, perhaps by Jacopo Siculo, much injured, of SS. Agatha and Barbara, an Assumption of the Virgin, with headless Apostles below it, and in an upper hall, a Virgin and Child between SS. Augustine and Peter Martyr, with an Eternal in a lunette.

⁴ An inscription beneath the fresco tells how it was removed from the citadel in 1800. There are abraded spots in the lower part of the faces of S. Jerome, S. Francis, and the Virgin, in the neck of S. Catherine and the mouth of S. Brizio. The Virgin's dress has also partly scaled away. The pilasters supporting the cornice and lunette are pleasantly adorned. [Other works by Spagna in the Spoletan Pinacoteca are No. 34, Two Putti; No. 43, Madonna and Child with SS. Lawrence and Brizius.]

Some heads are full of life and animation and almost attain a Florentine plasticity of relief.¹ The altarpiece at S. Francesco of Assisi is the best of its kind that Spagna ever produced. It recalls Raphael in the narrow oval of the face and the elegant shape of the Virgin, who sits on a high throne between SS. Catherine of Alexandria, Francis, and Roch, a friar, S. Chiara, and S. Louis the king. Of the latter the head is fine and interesting. The S. Catherine is dignified in attitude and chaste in mien, and the draperies are broader and better than usual. The Infant Christ is well proportioned, though perhaps a little feeble of limb. Two angels kneeling on clouds are in pretty attitudes of prayer.²

After his return from Assisi, Spagna received the freedom of the city of Spoleto (Dec. 7, 1516), "in consideration of his trusty and honourable character during a long residence," his fee for this privilege being a painted cloth for the table of the Public Palace.³ On the last day of August of the following year he was elected captain of the Guild of S. Luke.⁴

From that time till 1521 his career glides noiselessly on, and leaves no trace behind. Still it has its regular and not uninteresting chronology. We resume acquaintance with him in the church of S. Maria d'Arone, where he decorates an apse and semidome in company with Vincenzo Tamagni. In the latter a Coronation of the Virgin, with the usual array of saints, sibyls, and angels, reminds one of Spagna, whilst a Nativity and a Death of the Virgin on the circular face of the apse, and four saints in pilasters, seem the work of Tamagni imitating Lippi and Michael Angelo. The words: "RESTAURATUM IN HONORE VIRGINIS MDXXI" in the border of the semidome and those of "VINCENTIUS DE SCO GEMIGNANO ET JOANES DE SPOLETO FACIEBANT," under a window-sill, leave no doubt as to the authorship or as to the period, but the lower frescoes being clear imitations of those of Fra Filippo, and the inscription making allusion to a restoration, suggest the probability of wall paintings having previously existed in S. M. d'Arone.¹

¹ The figures are all seen to the knees and fill a perpendicular space equal to three feet. They are on four sides of the hexagon, and enclosed by ornamental pilasters and a cornice, above and below. There is also a fine arabesque with children and monsters in the vaulting of the chapel entrance. The ceiling is blue, with stars. Amongst the saints to the left, S. Bonaventura, holding a red hat and pointing with the right hand, is injured. To the right an oblique split cuts the frame of a reading monk and the head of another figure. This fresco was restored in 1766 by Girolamo Stampa. See Glorie de la Sacra Porziuncula (Perugia, 1858), ubi sup., p. 83.

In the sacristy of S. Maria degli Angeli is a panel with a Virgin and Child, much in Spagna's manner.

The same subject of the Coronation in the semidome of the parish church of Gavelli, outside Spoleto, bears the remains of a mutilated date and Spagna's name. Beneath it, on the walls are figures of saints and the miracle of S. Michael on Mount Gargano. The Coronation is coloured in the style of the fresco in the Palazzo at Spoleto, and repeats the general features of those of Narni and Todi, the conical canopy being omitted. In the thickness of the fore-arch are the Evangelists and Doctors, in the sides above the vaulting, the Virgin and the Angel Annunciate. The best place in the middle of the curve is given to S. Michael trampling a monster under his armed heels, striking him with the point of his lance, at the same time that he holds a balance which the monster strives to turn on his side with the help of a grappling iron. In this unartistic concatenation of incidents we may trace the will of some rustic patron, but the figure itself, square in frame and round of head, betrays Spagna's want of style in drawing, though it is still essentially Peruginesque in general character. A S. Peter in festooned dress, a S. Paul near him in Raphaelesque movement, both feebly treated by assistants, are to the left of S. Michael, the miracle on Mount Gargano to the right.² On the walls of two large altar niches at the sides of the tribune there are frescoes of the Virgin in Glory with various saints on the foregrounds, S. Jerome being the principal one on the altar sacred to his name, S. Sebastian prominent on the other. At the foot of the first one reads: ". . . HOC SACELLUM PINGENDUM MANDAVIT ANNO D. M. D. XXIII"; at the base of the second ". . . ANNO D. . . ." The whole decoration of the Gavelli Church is evidently by Spagna and his aids; the hands of the latter being particularly visible in the round fresco at the altar of S. Girolamo; the period of the execution probably 1524.³

³ The fresco at the altar of S. Girolamo is very much altered by damp, especially in the upper part, where one sees a Virgin and Child and traces of Angels to the Clear evidence of Spagna's industry may likewise be found in the church of S. Giovanni at Eggi, where the tribune is covered with frescoes in his usual manner. There are remnants of a Baptism of Christ, between S. Roch and Sebastian in the apsidal curve, a Virgin and Child in Glory between two angels in the spring of it;—the first a very exaggerated imitation of Perugino and Pinturicchio, the second influenced by contact with Raphael.

On the face above the semidome the Eternal on clouds sends the Dove to the Virgin Annunciate on the right, the angel kneeling to the left, the latter also Peruginesque and in contrast with the Raphaelesque air of the Eternal.¹

Again in the tribune of S. Jacopo outside Spoleto we have S. James with incidents of his life, and a Coronation of the Virgin, the inevitable subject of Spagna in these parts. Imitating in Todi and Trevi, a school work of Ghirlandaio's atelier, he copies at S. Jacopo, actions of sibyls and saints from Fra Filippo's frescoes in the cathedral of Spoleto. Yet he still maintains to the last the careful system of handling and finish characteristic of his earlier years.² But in the side chapels of S. Jacopo, Spagna also laboured, and whilst the apsis is inscribed with the date of 1526, the lateral altar to the left bears that of 1527, at which date no doubt the S. Sebastian, between SS. Fabian and Roch, beneath a Virgin, right, those to the left having entirely disappeared. Below is S. Jerome between SS. Antony of Padua and Francis, the latter figures also nearly ruined by moisture. But the execution of this work is rude and is probably due to Spagna's assistants.

The Virgin in Glory at the altar of S. Sebastian is better. The Virgin is fair, though not perfect in proportion. The S. Sebastian bound to a tree, on the left, is a fine figure, stained by damp. The movement of S. Catherine of Alexandria next him, on her knees, is not without life. S. Apollonia also kneels (lower part damaged) and the Baptist, right, points towards the Virgin. The fresco is in an ornament, two Victories filling the sides above the arched glory.

² This fresco has been varnished and is consequently much injured. The left side of the semidome especially is altered by damp, the heads of S. John the Baptist and two others being almost gone. The blue mantle of Christ has partly scaled. The lower part of the figure of S. James in the middle of the apse is new. There is a Raphaelesque air in an Angel Annunciate within a medallion at the side of the arch of the semidome; and the Virgin opposite is a fine half-length. The S. James a little feeble. In the fresco to the right, which represents S. James restoring the two roast cocks to life, the figures are academic. In that to the left, where the saint rescues the hanging man, the figures are short in proportions. In the pilasters are a fine S. Lucy and S. Apollonia, near which on the vanishing faces one reads: "ANO DNI MDXXVI."

Child, and Angels, was completed.¹ It was not till 1528 that Spagna obtained payment for these frescoes. They were, however, about the last which he painted, and a record of 1533 is preserved in which his widow Santina receives a final balance of one florin for the pictorial decoration of the edifice. It would seem indeed as if he had died before 1530, when Dono Doni finished the altar opposite to that of S. Sebastian, covering the space with a Virgin and a S. Anthony of Padua between two saints.²

The following list will comprise the remaining genuine performances of Spagna, those in which his disciples had a part, and those that are without reason assigned to him.

Bettona, near Assisi. Collegiate Church.—Cloth. S. Anne, in an almond-shaped glory, shelters the Virgin and Child under her cloak, warding off darts that fall from the Eternal in an upper medallion. On the foreground of a landscape, in which is a view of Bettona, kneel SS. Crispoldo and Antony of Padua. In the spandrils of the arch encircling the upper group are two prophets in rounds. S. Crispoldo has a saw imbedded in his skull. There is much softness in this piece, which is tinged with Spagna's usual cold yellow colour; but the forms and faces are Peruginesque, reminiscent of those in a canvas (oil) at S. Bernardino of Perugia (now in Gallery) by Perugino. Much loss of tone has resulted from injury done to the banner (6½ feet by 4½).

Bettona (near). Church (abandoned) of S. Simone.—In this edifice are frescoes of a low class betraying the influence of Spagna, but see postea ("Tiberio d'Assisi").¹

Assisi (near). Church Alla Rocchicciola (seven miles from the sanctuary of S. Francesco).—Fresco in Spagna's manner, but somewhat feeble; the Virgin and Child between SS. Francis and Antony of Padua; in a triangular lunette the Eternal between two angels. (The Virgin's mantle new.)²

Terni (one mile outside). S. Maria delle Grazie.—Tempera on canvas about a plaster statue of the Crucified Saviour, hanging at the side of the choir near the high altar, but much injured. The Virgin, Mary Magdalen, SS. Francis and John Evangelist seem by Spagna.

Amelia. Cathedral.—Wood. Last Supper, a rude production of the close of the sixteenth century, to which undue attention was lately given. (A copy of it has been made for 400 scudi.)

Montefalco. Collegiate Church of S. Bartolommeo (misprinted S. Matro-meo in PASSAVANT'S Life of Raphael, vol. i., p. 510, and the error copied into VASARI, Com., vol. vi., p. 54).—S. Catherine between SS. Vincent and Nicholas (wood, 4½ feet high, gold ground, and split), with stamped nimbus. The best of these is S. Catherine, especially as to the head, but there is little relief, a fault extending to the other saints. The colouring is light and rosy, with thin verde shadows, coldly and carefully handled.

Extracts from a book of various memoranda and payments (MS.) in the Archivio Parocchiale of S. Jacopo of Spoleto.

² [This, according to Mr. Perkins, is a genuine, though fairly late, work of Spagna.]

The first impression created is that of a picture by an Umbrian striving to imitate the style of Fra Filippo's works at Spoleto. The hand is that of Spagna or one of his pupils, perhaps Bernardino Campilius (see antea, in "Fra Filippo").¹

Todi. Duomo.—Wood, oil. S. Peter, bony and ill-proportioned. S. Paul (wood, oil). Both knee pieces, split vertically, of Spagna's latest period, or by one of his disciples done at one painting with thin body of colour; the grounds here and there scaled off.

Deruta. Church of S. Anna, of old S. Jacopo del Borgo.—Remains of the upper part of a Crucifixion in fresco, i.e. Christ to the knee, the head of a Saint to the left, part of a head of the Magdalen, in the character of Spagna's advanced age.

Perugia. S. Pietro. Cappella S. Martino (upper floor of convent).—Semidome fresco. Eternal between angels, and Virgin enthroned between SS. Nicholas and Martin, landscape distance. The Eternal is Raphaelesque in movement, the angels at the sides Peruginesque in type. The Virgin has a small head and slender neck. She holds a plump Infant naked on her lap, whose forms are also reminiscent of Sanzio. The nude, however, is faulty, and the hands are short. Whilst the Eternal reminds one of Eusebio, the Virgin and Child recalls Spagna. The colour is warm, and like that of the Entombment at the Madonna delle Lagrime at Trevi; the outlines coarse. This fresco, first injured by damp, was lately mutilated by soldiers quartered in the building, who stabbed the heads with their bayonets. The name of Ingegno has been affixed to this work, but we await records to confirm his existence.

Same Church. Last Chapel to the left.—This chapel was at one period entirely covered with subjects. The Annunciation may still be seen (life-size) beneath a window, with arabesques in some lunettes, and a renewed figure of the Eternal in a blue starred ceiling. Assigned to Pinturicchio. The colour is now rough and red, and it is difficult to decide who laboured here, whether Pinturicchio, Eusebio, or Spagna.

Same Church. Choir.—Virgin and Child, with two angels, so restored as to forbid an opinion. (Assigned by CONSTANTINI, Guida, p. 25, to Spagna.)²

Perugia. [Gallery].—Lunette in its old frame (wood, oil). Eternal in benediction amidst angels. Colour grey, cold, slightly relieved, and of thin substance. This piece is like Spagna's at S. Jacopo of Spoleto. (Called Spagna. PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. i., p. 510; MEZZANOTTE, ubi sup., p. 235.)

Perugia. [Gallery].—Arched panel (oil, life-size). A fine figure of the Beata Colomba; in type and feeling reminiscent of the Peruginesque and Raphaelesque; of a bright tone, probably by Spagna.

Perugia. [Gallery].—Wood, oil. S. Margaret of Hungary between S. Margaret of Castello and S. Agnes of Montepulciano, grand, of olive tone, and done at one painting, a little square and broken in drawing, ruder in execution than the Beata Colomba, and with less relief, possibly by Spagna with the help of Manni.

Florence. Pitti.—In the passage called "delle Colonne," a Marriage of

¹ [This is, as I have already stated, a fine work by Antoniasso Romano (cf. F. MASON PERKINS, in Rassegna d'Arte, for August 1907).]

² [This is by Giannicola Manni.]

S. Catherine, between SS. Francis and Anthony, in Spagna's manner, but somewhat feeble (wood, oil, half-lengths, one-third life-size, dull, because spoiled by restoring).

Rome. Palazzo Colonna.—Wood, oil, split vertically in two places. S. Jerome Penitent, given by Verniglioli to Pinturicchio. It is all but life-size, and recalls Perugino's panel of the same subject at Caen. It is probably by Spagna, dimmed and damaged.

Spoletto. Hospital degli Esposti.—Nativity (wood, oil). This is almost an exact copy of the Spineta altarpiece; with the exception that the angels in the sky kneel, and the Virgin's head is draped. It was originally executed for a family at Norcia, and bears the following inscription: "QUESTA TAVOLA LA FACTA FARE COSTANTINO DE LOCCIO P. SUA DEVOZIONE. JACOMO DEJOVANO FRIO FECE LA PENTURA DE QUESTA TAVOLA SOMENTE. MDXXII." There is a family of Locci still existing in Norcia. As to the painter (?) one may ask, is the inscription to be read so that the artist's name shall be Giacomo di Giovanni Onofrio? This Giacomo cannot be the same as Jacopo Siculo, Spagna's son-in-law. PUNGILEONI, Raphael, p. 18, speaks of a copy of the Ancajani altarpiece by Jacopo da Norica. Does he allude to this Nativity? These are questions that may perhaps be solved at a later period. The picture is at all events a bad copy of Spagna's, of ignoble types and forms, and raw in colour.

Spoletto. Chiesa e Convento all' Arco di Annibale.—Tabernacle containing the Virgin and Child with two attendant angels between SS. John the Baptist, Jerome, Scolastica, and Antony the Abbot. This seems a school piece reminiscent of others in the same style at Eggi, Caso, and elsewhere.

Eggi. Oratorio della Madonna delle Grazie.—Fresco. Christ and Angels, with SS. John the Baptist, Sebastian, Roch, and Michael; below, the Virgin and Child. This has the defects of the wall painting at the altar of S. Girolamo in the church of Gavelli. Can it be by Orlando of Perugia, supposing him to be the author of a Nativity in the cathedral of Gubbio, assigned to Pinturicchio? (See antea, "Pinturicchio.")¹

Patrico (Church of), near Spoleto.—Wall paintings representing S. Maria di Cortona, between S. Roch and a saint in episcopals, a Virgin and Child, SS. Sebastian and Stephen. Again, the Virgin and Child, in a tree, and a saint. These, by aids in Spagna's atelier, are less defective than the foregoing at Eggi, but still seem by Spagna's journeyman at the altar of S. Girolamo in Gavelli. Feeble, of a brick-red tone.

Ferentillo. On the road from this place to Monte Rivoso is a tabernacle. In an external lunette, the Eternal between two seraphs. Inside the tabernacle, the Virgin erect with the Infant Christ. Four angels support a dais. On pilasters are S. Sebastian and a half-length of S. Roch. In the same character as at Patrico and Caso, but prettier in colour.

Ferentillo. S. Stefano.—Here is a Nativity (fresco) reminiscent of Spagna and Tamagni. On a pilaster are the words: "1559, DIE XXVI. XBRIS."

Caso (near). S. Maria delle Grazie.—The walls of this church are filled with numerous frescoes, some of which are drawn from Spagna's by his disciples. Several inscriptions bear the date of 1516; others that of 1522.

Caso (outside). Chiesetta, di S. Cristina.—This church also is full of paintings of various periods, many being by Spagna's pupils. In the semi-dome, an Eternal (lunette) between two angels and a figure of S. Cristina, with the inscription: "S. CRISTINA, V. M.—JOHANNI DE APPOLONIA F. F. P. VORO 1527."

Viterbo. Chiesa dei Frati Osservanti.—Wood, distemper. Nativity. Ill-drawn, but on the model of one by Spagna, and reminiscent of the Nativity in the Hospital at Spoleto, and the wall paintings of Patrico and Caso.¹ In a lunette outside this church, a Virgin and Child between SS. Jerome and Francis is in the same character as the above, perhaps a little better.

London. National Gallery. No. 282.—Glorification of the Virgin. This will be found (see postea) in the catalogue of the Bertuccis of Faenza.

Same Gallery. No. 691.—Wood. Ecce Homo. In this picture the character of Spagna is not sufficiently marked. It would, at all events, be an unsatisfactory specimen of his manner.

London. Dudley House.—Six saints in two frames (wood, distemper), originally in the Bisenzio Collection at Rome. In the first, S. M. Magdalen between SS. Louis and Giovanni da Capistrano; in the second, S. Catherine between a canonised friar and S. Bernardino da Feltre. These belong to the class which has been frequently attributed to Raphael's youth; the style and proportions being good, the movement refined. They want the softness and feeling of Raphael, but they are of Spagna's best time.²

Same Collection.—Wood, oil. Half-length of S. Catherine, part of a larger picture, in Spagna's spirit but injured by restoring.

London. Collection of the late Mr. Barry.—No. 96 at Manchester. Half-length of the Magdalen, with the box of ointment. Small, and perhaps by Spagna.³

London. Ex-Bromley Collection.—Crucifixion. (Not seen.)

London. Baring Gallery.—Wood, oil; under the name of Raphael. The Virgin (half-length) is seated in front of a low screen; the Infant standing on her lap and supporting itself with the elbow on the Virgin's bosom. Distance, landscape. The Virgin shows something of Spagna. The Child imitates those of Raphael in the Madonna del Cardellino, but it is also in the manner of Eusebio, in the Holy Family at S. Francesco of Matellica. A replica, somewhat later in date, is in the Munich Gallery (cabinets No. 597), under the strange name of Fra Bartolommeo. A Virgin and Child, called a Penni, at Stafford House in London, and stated to have been once in Lucca, is very like that of the Baring Gallery as regards stamp and handling.⁴

Hamilton Palace (near Glasgow).—Wood, quarter life-size. Virgin and Child between S. Antony and a female Saint carrying a lily. Injured by abrasion and restoration, but like a Spagna.

² [The latter is in Coll. of Sir J. C. Robinson, London. The former in Mr. Ludwig Mond's Collection, London.] ⁴

³ [I know nothing of this picture.]

⁴ [I have been unable to trace the Baring picture.]

*Scotland. Glentyan (Seat of Captain Stirling).—*1. Annunciation. 2. Nativity. 3. Adoration of the Magi. 4. Presentation in the Temple. Predella (tempera) by some one of the followers of Spagna.

*Paris. Louvre. [No. 1539].—*Wood. Nativity, called a Perugino, the exact reverse of that of the Spineta, with the three angels kneeling in the sky. This is by an assistant of Spagna, opaque and monotonous in tone, and hard in execution. It came into the Louvre after the sale of the Collection of Baron de Gérando, who had it presented to him by the city of Perugia, when he administered the civil authority there in 1811.¹

*Louvre. [No. 1540].—*Wood. Half-length Virgin, holding the Infant Christ with a scroll in its hands;—a prime picture by Spagna, as is suggested in the Louvre catalogue (though still classed as a Pinturicchio).² A pretty, and carefully executed example of the somewhat cold Spagna.

Louvre.—[No. 1568] Pietà. [No. 1569] S. Francis receiving the Stigmata. [No. 1570] S. Jerome Penitent (wood, oil). These are three fragments of a predella, catalogued in the "school of Perugino," but impressed with the stamp of Spagna's school.³

*Louvre. [No. 1573].—*Virgin and Child. Like the foregoing, but inferior, and a mixture of the styles of Pinturicchio and Spagna.

*St. Petersburg. Hermitage. No. 8. (Catalogue of 1863).—*Adoration of the Infant Christ, the Saviour on a cloth on the ground, the Virgin kneeling, and S. Joseph standing in rear in attitudes and expression of worship. SS. Martin and Barbara on their knees in prayer at the sides of the principal group. In the landscape to the right, the Procession of the Magi. The colour is dull and monotonous, because all the figures, having suffered from old abrasions, were at some remote period repainted; the result being loss of tone and alteration of the forms. There was also a transfer to canvas of this picture, which is described as originally in Castelfranco di Sotto, near Florence. Umbrian and Florentine character are both apparent; but the former predominates especially in the distance; the name of Spagna (his latest years), or of one of his immediate followers, would be correct.⁴

Whilst Spagna, at various periods of his career surrendered himself to the imitation of Raphael it was scarcely possible that he should give to his pupils any great or durable lessons. Being possessed of no great original power, he necessarily induced such painters as became familiar

³ [Mr. Berenson gives these to Spagna.]

⁴ [By Spagna are also a Madonna and Child with Angels, No. 603, in the Poldi-Pezzoli Museum at Milan, and a Madonna in the Museum at Naples. Mr. Berenson also ascribes the following to the master:—Ashridge, Lord Brownlow, S. Clare; Englewood, N.J. (U.S.A.), Mr. D. F. Platt, fresco of Madonna (in part); Florence, Pitti, No. 451 bis, Madonna and Saints; Frome (Somerset), Lady Horner, fresco of a Knight; London, Wallace Collection, No. 545, S. Mary of Egypt; Montefaleo, Marchesa Cappelli, Madonna and Child; Rome, Lateran Gallery, No. 68, Madonna and Saints; Prince Doria, two panels with figures of Muses; Marchese Visconti-Venosta, S. Catherine; Vienna, Baron Tucher, Madonna; Visso, Collegiata, frescoes, Madonna, Saints, &c.; Narni, Municipio, fresco of S. Francis, 1528. Mr. Berenson also attributes, as we have seen, the Sposalizio at Caen to Lo Spagna. See Study and Criticism of Italian Art (Bell, 1902), vol. ii., p. 1 et seq.]

with his ways to saunter in the same paths ; and we thus find his son-in-law, Jacopo Siculo, commingling the manner of Spagna with that of the Raphaellesques. It seems not improbable that Siculo should have been at Rome previous to Sanzio's death, and in company with Tamagni. The connection of the three artists at Spoleto is still more likely. Siculo is stated to have received the commission for decorating the Cappella Eruli,¹ now the Baptistery of the cathedral at Spoleto, in the ceiling of which four figures of Adam, Noah, Moses, and Melchizedek, above life-size, are depicted, whilst the walls are covered with scenes from the Old and New Testaments, and the border frames with arabesques and small compositions of the same sacred class. Here and there, Michaelangelesque character is accompanied by a system of handling and design reminiscent of Spagna. Elsewhere the great masterpieces of Raphael are recalled to mind ; and the space generally seems distributed with the symmetry and in the mode peculiar to Sanzio. The work might be assigned to the joint labour of Spagna, Tamagni, Dono Doni, and even Siculo.² It is the same sort of cento that may strike the eye in the front of the Palazzo

Melchizedek, an aged man with joined hands, near an antique altar, with a vase on it. The feet are drawn in Raphael's style (the lights on the arms retouched). Above, the word : "PREMIUM." Those beneath, illegible.

Noah, an aged man, nude, holding a vine with grapes in both hands, poor in head (two angels in a round renewed). Above, the word : "INTERUS" (?) ; beneath : "PENA."

Moses, in fine Raphaellesque movement, but injured by damp and restoring (two angels in a round completely ruined). Above, the words : "UTILIS PLANTA, PERVERSI FORTUS."

In the walls :—1. A S. Jerome, reminiscent of Tamagni and Dono Doni, with a lunette, in which Aaron is represented as high priest (some little figures in distance), all damaged. 2. Crucifixion, filling wall and lunette, a mixture of the styles of Spagna and Tamagni. Two angels at the ends of the cross not without feeling. 3. S. Michael weighing the souls, and S. Lucy (imit. Spagna), and in the lunette a figure with a long staff, and distant people. 4. (Above the entrance) Christ blesses Peter, the miraculous draught of fishes in the distance. In the lunette, Elijah ascends to heaven (ruined by damp). No trace here of the manner of Spagna. The whole of these frescoes, in cornice frames in which there are three rounds containing portraits. In the borders of the ceiling there are graceful little figures and arabesques on gold ground, and small frames enclosing :—1. Moses and the Burning Bush. 2. A Raphaellesque composition of the Entrance into the Ark. 3. The Sacrifice of Abraham. 4. The Creation of Man. 5. The Creation of Woman, in which the Eternal raises the rib which has already in part the human shape. 6. The Finding of the Cup of Benjamin. 7. A crowd of men on foot and horseback, and females looking towards the sea (? subject). At the angles of the ceiling are angels, some of which are new. All the lunettes and the ceiling are executed in a better style than the lower courses. Two hands must at least have been employed.

Arone facing the Duomo of Spoleto ;¹ or in the frescoes of an abandoned chapel in S. Francesco at Rieti.² The earliest independent production of Siculo to which an authentic character can be conceded, is a large domed panel on the high altar of the parish church of S. Mamigliano, from the lunette of which an Eternal gives the benediction to an enthroned Virgin and Child between the standing SS. Peter and John Evangelist and the kneeling Biagio and Mamigliano. The Virgin looks downward towards S. Biagio, whilst the Infant, stalking naked over her lap, looks round at S. Mamigliano, a Raphaelesque idea bringing to mind that carried out in the Virgin and Child of the ex-Rogers Collection. A well-fused colour of good impasto is somewhat darkly shadowed in grey tones. A long inscription above a predella in several parts closes with the words : " JACOBUS SICULUS FACIEBAT ;" and on the border of the lunette one reads : " SUMPTIBUS UNIVERSITATIS MDXXXVIII." ³

Beneath the second row of windows is a fictive bas-relief of sea gods and goddesses, some drawn in cars by horses, concluding with an incident of a fight—a most animated series.

Beneath the third row, the painting is gone, but between the windows there still remains a figure (female) with a sword (? Judith). Another female with one hand raised (? Justice). The whole front was clearly once painted in chiaroscuro with feigned architecture and a fine architectonic distribution, the figurative part full of life and motion.

Between the windows of each story there were figures like those at the highest story. Of these there remains one of a female with a tripod and fire in front of her between the windows of the lowest story.

The work has something of the manner of Beccafumi, but in a style less marked than his.

One sees the school of Raphael in the composition and arrangement, in the action and style of drawing, particularly in the small incidents on the basement. There is some exaggeration in the rendering of forms. The children have something of the character of those in the Eruli Chapel. The period of the execution is the first half of the sixteenth century, and the decoration is one of the best of this time (i.e. after Raphael's death).

As to handling, the drawing is engraved, and the hollow is filled up with black, not only in its outlines, but in the hatchings of the shadows. The mass of shadow is well defined, so that the relief and effect must have been good. Striving to reconstruct the whole mentally in its pristine state, one might name as the authors both Vincenzo da S. Gimignano and Jacopo Siculo.

² The subjects are : the Last Judgment, the Resurrection, Paradise, and Doom. Pilasters are adorned with arabesques.

recognised in an unsigned fresco, transferred to canvas and brought from S. Niccolò to the Palazzo di Spoleto. It represents the Virgin and Child in the same feeling as at S. Mamigliano; is graceful in grouping as well as rich and transparent in colouring.¹ An equally important but dim fresco of the same kind is in the last chapel to the right in S. Niccolò itself; a large piece that has been subjected to no restoring, though it is injured by dust. The Virgin with the Child in Glory is adored by several persons kneeling in a landscape between two erect saints of good and grand Raphaelesque outline.²

In later works, for instance in the Coronation of the Virgin of 1541, at the Annunziata outside Norcia, Siculo merely imitates with slight variation the arrangement of Spagna in the altarpieces of Todi and Trevi.³

In the Duomo of Spoleto the figures on the stalls of the winter choir seem feeble ones of Jacopo;⁴ and in the parish church of Ferentillo, two chapels the walls of which are covered with frescoes, dated severally 1540 and 1557, are like productions from the same hand or from that of men employed under his superintendence.⁵

² The Virgin is seated on a cloud, and holds the white drapery of the Infant with her right. There are cherubs in the cloud. The figures are life-size (wood, oil).

³ The colour and handling of this work are a little feeble. The predella plinths contain the Virgin and the Angel Annunciate, the predella itself SS. Jerome and Francis. On a "cartellino," to the right of the principal panel, one reads: "ANNO DOMINI NOSTRI JESU CHRISTI MILLESIMO QUINGENTESIMO QUADRAGESIMO PRIMO, DIE VERO VIGESIMO MARTII. JACOBUS SICULUS FACIEBAT."

In this church, at the altar of S. Elizabeth, are a Virgin, Child, and several Saints, feebly shadowed, of a light rosy tone, the figures ill-draped as one finds them in some of Tamagni's pictures at S. Gimignano. In the predella, the Angel and Virgin Annunciate, and Christ in the tomb. In the church del Rosario at Norcia is an Assumption (wood, oil) by a student of Spagna's manner, of a hard and dull yellowish colour. The angels sounding instruments are like similar ones by Cola dell' Amatrice. The Virgin is most like the creations of Spagna.

At Bettona, on the high altar of S. Antonio of the Minorites, is a canvas of the Virgin and Child attended by angels, like those in Spagna's frescoes at S. Jacopo of Spoleto. Below are kneeling saints, amongst whom SS. Crispoldo, Francis, Jerome. Distance, a city. On the predella, portraits of the donors and the following inscription: "PRO LASCITA JULIANI AQUILINI AD. M.D. DONA CIANCIA EJUS UXOR FECIT FIERI XLVII" (1547). This is a feeble piece in the style of the Norcia Coronation, and seems done by assistants. In the same class one might name the frescoes of SS. Agata and Barbara, and the Assumption, already noted in the monastery della Stella, near Spoleto (see antea, "Spagna").

⁵ The first of these in the third chapel to the right represents the Eternal in benediction, with (lower) SS. Lucy, Agatha, Catherine, Barbara, and Apollonia,

No other name besides that of Jacopo Siculo need be added to the list of Spagna's followers at Spoleto, except that of Bernardino Campilius, whose signature is written at length beneath a fresco of the Virgin adoring the Infant on her knee, to the left on the Piazza S. Gregorio, as one enters the town gate of Spoleto. The painter is a fourth or fifth-rate one, imitating Fra Filippo in the forms of the Child, and the Peruginesque side of Spagna's style in the draperies of the Virgin.¹ An altarpiece at S. Maria d'Arone representing the Virgin and Child between SS. Antony and John the Baptist, bears, if memory be not treacherous, the same signature; and there is a fresco in the sacristy of the church of the Nunziatella at Foligno, assigned to Mantegna, betraying his manner or that of Cola dell Amatrice.² The date 1502 on the fresco of the Piazza S. Gregorio gives a clue to the period in which Campilius laboured.

all long and lean figures. In the framing one reads the date: "1540. . DIE PRIMO OCTOBRIS."

In the fourth chapel is a fresco of the Incredulity of S. Thomas, and above it, the Virgin giving the Girdle. On a pilaster: "1557 . . . DIE PRIMO. . ."

In the fifth chapel a S. Antony, above which a Virgin and Child.

² The Redeemer, almost naked, is seated in death on a stone, supported under the armpits by the Evangelist and Virgin; S. Mary Magdalen in rear. This injured fresco at first suggests the name of some Veronese artist, such as Caroto or Liberale, but on closer inspection shows something of the manner of Spagna; and there is nothing more of the Mantegnesque than might be taken from the examples of Alunno.

CHAPTER XIII

MANNI, EUSEBIO, AND OTHER PERUGINESQUES

ONE of the active subordinates in Perugino's atelier is Giannicola di Paolo Manni,¹ a native of Città della Pieve,² whose place amongst the Perugians at the close of the fifteenth century it would be easier to determine if the pictures which he executed in 1493 and 1499 had been preserved.³ From records embodying the commissions for these works, as well as from others in which the production of a banner and pennons (1502, 1505) is noted, it would appear that Manni chiefly practised at Perugia,⁴ and that his performances must have been confined to that city. Yet his long life and the small number of extant things traceable to him, as well as the Peruginesque character which they display, lead us to consider him as a constant assistant to Vannucci. Although he probably enjoyed with Spagna the advantage of Raphael's company in the master's shop, he did not perceive that Sanzio's example might lead to progress and fame, and when further experience taught him the necessity of placing himself on a level with the changed spirit of Italian art in the rise of the sixteenth century, he seems to have felt a predilection for the school of Paccchia, a clever Siennese, who had modified his own style by contact with Francia Bigio and Andrea del Sarto. One of his youthful creations is, as we believe, a Virgin and Child under the name of Raphael in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge,⁵ previously in the collection of Archdeacon Hore. The naked Infant, erect on the Virgin's knee and grasping her dress at the bosom, turns towards the spectator with great gentleness and shows the whole of a somewhat small and gracile form. The Virgin, of regular shape and face, is softly meditative and Peruginesque. The minute drawing and a light, somewhat flat, colour tending to yellowish rosy betray more carefulness than feeling. For Manni it is a most beautiful production reminiscent of his education under Vannucci, and of the companionship of Raphael and Spagna.⁶

⁵ [Mr. Berenson gives this to Pinturicchio.]

⁶ Wood, half life-size, one of the hands a little injured, the rest well preserved. The distance is a pretty landscape.

The Saviour in Glory between the Virgin and Evangelist, with a crowd of adoring saints in erect positions in a landscape, is, after this of Cambridge, the earliest of his authentic panels with which we are acquainted. It adorns the Cappella Baglioni at S. Domenico of Perugia,¹ and shows that Raphael's grace was not lost upon him, yet that the influence of the young and rising artist was outweighed by those of Perugino and Pinturicchio.

But, whilst naming Manni in the same breath with the three greatest celebrities of the Umbrian schools, we must not forget his real inferiority. There is a pretty freshness in the glory of the altarpiece of S. Domenico. Some figures may deserve praise for good intention in movement; but most of them are lean and lank, paltry, or skinny and flabby in features. The hands are cramped and spidery, the faces at times of broken outline, or contoured in puffy curves. Some recall Perugino, others Pinturicchio. The draperies are generally involved and poorly cast. The colours are used with great thickness of impasto, but without relief, and a constant flatness pervades the waxy flesh and its grey shadow; nor does the use of oil-medium seem familiar. One sees the stippling and hatching of a man accustomed to tempera.

The sides of a Crucifixion in S. Domenico representing the Virgin and Evangelist, and the Magdalen with S. Sebastian, are better drawn and more successful than those of the Saviour in Glory at S. Domenico, and they are comparatively good specimens of proportion, attitude and expression.² They may take rank amongst his best efforts, together with a fresco of the Virgin and Child between SS. John Evangelist and Lawrence in S. Martino di Verzaro at Perugia—an altar-decoration in ¹ Now in Perugia Academy [Sala XVI., No. 30, painted in 1507]. It is stated in a MS.: "Registro della Chiesa di S. Domenico di Perugia" (compiled 1548): "Baglione della Baglione della fece pingere la tavola d' Ognisanti per mano di maestro Niccolò discipulo di maestro Pietro Perugino" (favour of Professor Adamo Rossi). VASARI says, too, this picture was by Giannicola (vol. vi., p. 56). It is on wood, in oil, and 7½ feet by 7, but the arched upper part is cut down. Four playing angels are at the sides of the circular glory. These and the cherubs' heads are reminiscent of Perugino's in type and movement. The outlines are broken as if they were cut out with scissors. The Saviour is lean with drooping shoulders, the Baptist in fine movement recalling Pinturicchio, the Virgin in prayer pleasing, with a plump face like those of Raphael's youth. An angel on the extreme right of the glory is posed in the attitude of one by Pinturicchio at Araceli, and fairly rendered. A S. Peter amongst the foreground saints seems inspired from that of Perugino in the Lyons Ascension. The mannered curves of some facial outlines are similar to those of Gerino of Pistoia, and like those of the Last Supper in S. Onofrio at Florence.

² These panels are now in the Gallery of Perugia [Sala XVI., Nos. 15 and 31], and the figures, on wood, of life-size. Much damage has been done to them by time and repainting, but their character is that of Manni, and, besides, it appears from the register of S. Domenico, already quoted, that they were done by him: "Questo M^o Niccolò fece ancora le quattro figure all' altare dell' Crocifisso." The work is cold, but of strong impasto, and one is struck by the resemblance of its waxy colour with that of a Virgin and Child between SS. Bernardino and Tommaso di Villanuova, dated 1500, in S. Agostino of Perugia (see antea, "Perugino"). [Now in Gallery.]

which fair relief and lively tones, free handling, and some approach to a good style of drapery may be noticed. It is not unnecessary, at the same time, to mark the redness which begins to pervade the surface of Manni's colour.¹ It may be found in the slight and broadly decorative pieces forming at one time the ornament of the organ loft in S. Lorenzo of Perugia; a round of S. Lawrence martyred,² two half-lengths of S. Peter and S. Paul, and a lunette containing Christ with the banner between SS. Lawrence and Costanzo.³ The date of 1513 on the first shows how long Manni clung to his purely Peruginesque style. He had been entrusted, in 1511, with the task of repainting the dial of the palace clock.⁴ In 1515 (June 27th) he bound himself to adorn the walls of the chapel of the Cambio.⁵ Like many other artists, Manni was unpunctual in his labours. He had received 45 florins as an advance long before the frescoes passed the preliminary stage; and in February 1518, a part of them only had been done. The authorities practically reminded him of his duty by threatening to fine him 150 florins unless he should finish them before the following August (1519).⁶ The shortness of this interval, and the necessity for speed may be the cause why some episodes in the Cambio Chapel are much more feeble than the rest. In the ceiling, the Eternal in benediction is surrounded by the Evangelists, the Apostles, and the Doctors of the Church; in the spandrels of two arches, the Libyan and Erythrean Sibyls; in the vaulting of the same, small frames enclosed in ornament, with scenes from the Old Testament. The lunettes, four in number, comprise the Birth of S. John, the Visitation, the Beheading of the Baptist, and the Presentation of his head. Three circles above the entrance-door are filled with busts of SS. Costanzo, Ercolano, and Lorenzo. On an altar stands a Baptism of Christ, on panel, with the Angel and Virgin Annunciate at the flanks; and on the paliotto or altar-front, medallions of the Virgin and Child, the Precursor, and two other saints.

It is easy to perceive that the chapel was not completed at one period. The ceiling figures are Peruginesque, but short and paltry, with a monotonous similarity of character in the heads. The angels are coarse and square—the general tone red. A more modern art is displayed in the lunette subjects, which are better composed. It is the time when Manni exhibits some relation to Pacchia, and for that reason suggests remini-

¹ This fresco has been injured by damp, and the Virgin's mantle is in great part new. The drawing is Peruginesque in style, but the chief merit of the piece is in the fairness of the proportions and movements. Some figures at the sides of the fresco are inferior to those under notice, and otherwise unimportant.

In the same church, on a wall to the left as one enters, is a feeble figure of S. Martin dividing his cloak, injured in the upper part and not equal to the foregoing. There is something in it too of the Leonardesque, and an impress as if from Eusebio.

² [This is still in the Duomo.]

³ [Mr. Berenson does not include this lunette or the figures of SS. Peter and Paul in his list of Manni's works.]

scences of Andrea del Sarto; yet the local colour is still reddish. The Sibyls are the intermediate link between the frescoes of the ceiling and those of the lunettes, and a child at the feet of the Libyan discloses an attempt to imitate Raphael. The altarpiece is very poor; and the paliotto seems due to Sinibaldo Ibi.¹

A picture of the time when the ceiling of the Cambio was brought to a termination, is the Enthroned Virgin with saints and angels, in the Louvre, under the name of Ingegno. The heavy red of the high surface colour, the feebleness of the types, and the mixture derived from Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Raphael point almost exclusively to Manni.²

The best of the master's later subjects is the Incredulity of S. Thomas in S. Tommaso at Perugia, a fairly grouped composition, lacking neither life nor freedom, but of a reddish flatness in the unglazed tones.³

² [No. 1372] at the Louvre. The drawing of this picture is poor. The Infant is heavy; the panel has suffered from over-painting, but one still sees Manni's red tone with shadows of a reddish brown. The types and action are similar to those in the ceiling of the Cambio Chapel. A predella, now at the Perugia Academy, dated 1512, represents the Martyrdom of some saints. It is difficult to say on what grounds it is assumed to be the predella of the foregoing. It is by Domenico Alfani.

The following may be classed under Manni's name:—Louvre [No. 1369], Baptism of Christ; [No. 1370], Assumption of the Virgin; [No. 1371], Adoration of the Magi. These are all parts of one predella, and good examples. In S. Agostino (Fraternity), at Perugia, a picture dated 1510 is assigned to Manni (MEZZANORTE, p. 226), but is by Sinibaldo Ibi (see postea). At Gubbio, a panel in the church of S. Pietro representing a Visitation, and other figures, with a monogram, not suggestive of Manni's name, is still attributed to him. It is injured, and has not (now at least) the marked character of the Peruginesque school.

Considering the prevalent redness of tone in Manni's works, one might assign to him a share in the large Assumption of Perugino at Corciano, and in the large altarpiece by the same at the Servi.

Frescoes said to be by Manni at Pacciano (ORSINI, ubi sup.), are not to be found there now. The Christ at the Mount mentioned by VASARI, vol. vi., p. 56, and noticed at S. Bernardino of Perugia by CONSTANTINI, Guida, pp. 318–19, is missing. Manni is registered in the Guild of Perugia, but under no specific date (MARIOTTI, Lett., p. 231).

Manni lived to a good old age, was in the magistracy at Perugia in 1527,¹ and died on the 27th of October 1544.²

Eusebio di S. Giorgio, his comrade in Perugino's school,³ did not rise above mediocrity. Bred in Perugia, a fellow-labourer with Fiorenzo di Lorenzo and Berto di Giovanni in 1501,⁴ he was made free of his guild immediately after Pinturicchio.⁵ His style approximates to Bernardino's in its least interesting features, whilst his system of colouring is a counterpart of Manni's; but he is fortunate at times in imitating the early Raphaelesque, and, in this, distantly emulates the example of Spagna. He was one of those whom Pinturicchio induced to join him at Siena; and there is a memorandum in the Siennese archives of a large money-payment from the latter to Eusebio in 1506.⁶ The altarpiece of the Epiphany, in the chapel of that name at S. Agostino of Perugia, betrays this connection.⁷ It is a panel, in oil, dated 1505 or 1506, with all Pinturicchio's leanness in the figures, his quaintness in costumes, his pompous affectation in attitudes, with great dryness superadded, and a ruddy even tone. Nothing can be more minute than the hair-outlines of the drawing, more thin than the plain surface of the colour. Eusebio in this instance is the miniature of Pinturicchio, with a tinge of the Raphaelesque. As a composer he is almost null. His stiff and pinched imitation of Sanzio may be noticed in the Annunciation, and S. Francis receiving the Stigmata, on the walls of S. Damiano, near Assisi; (R.), in the Duomo of Città della Pieve; SS. Bernardino and Sebastian (No. 27), SS. Costanzo and Ercolano (No. 29), and a Madonna and Saints dated 1507 (No. 30), Sala XVI., and a Dead Christ (No. 40) in Sala XVIII. in Perugia Gallery. He speaks also of pictures at Bletchingley (Coll. Bell), at Highnam Court, Gloucester (Coll. Parry), and of an Annunciation in Lady Harvey's Collection in London; in Paris, of a Madonna on a Cartoon by Perugino in Mdme. André's collection; of a Madonna in the Musée Vivenot at Compiègne (cf. Central Italian Painters, p. 192, 193).

Mr. Perkins ascribes to Manni a Head of Christ in the Magherini-Graziani Collection at Città di Castello, and a Pietà in the Convento del Pianto at Perugia (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907). A pleasing work by the master is a lunette of the Virgin and Child with Angels in the Choir of S. Pietro at Perugia, and the figure of the Virgin on the third pillar to the right in the Duomo of the same city is also probably by Manni. There is also an Annunciation (No. 1104) by Manni in the National Gallery at London.]

⁷ This picture is now in the Gallery of Perugia. [Sala XVII., No. 12.] It is given by VASARI to Eusebio (vol. vi., p. 55); on wood, in oil, 7 feet by 5½. The Virgin, on the right, points out the Child on her lap to S. Joseph, who stands near her, whilst the first king offers a cup, and the second stands with his back to the spectator. The foreground is a meadow with grasses and flowers; the distance, rock with grottoes. Two figures on horseback are in the middle distance. Four angels in the sky kneel and play instruments. They are not ungraceful, though small and feeble. The Child has a large round head and puffy frame. The date, "MDV . . .," is on the border of the Virgin's dress, near her foot. On the hem of the king's dress, who stands with his back to the spectator, are an S. and I., initials of Shibaldo Ibi. Yet the work is probably Eusebio's—certainly not, as some say, by Raphael. A part of the frame of the Infant Christ has scaled.

the date of 1507 and Eusebio's name authenticating the latter.¹ Nor is it improbable that he should be the author of a part of the Cappella delle Rose at S. M. degli Angeli, near Assisi, on the walls of which a number of Franciscan saints are depicted.² Eusebio's hand may be observed also in a S. Michael in the Casa Gualtieri at Orvieto, which we have seen Passavant attribute to Ingegno.³

Better than any of these is the Holy Family, with saints, carried out by Eusebio in 1512, for S. Francesco at Matellica. He improves the proportions and action of his personages, adapting to them so much of Raphael's charm as he can, and even adding something of the Leonardesque to his manner, all this with a meritorious carefulness of handling, and a soft fusion of pale tones. The predella, containing three scenes from the legend of S. Antony of Padua, not only recalls, but positively copies in parts Raphael's at the Vatican. It is of a thin and bright melting colour, and, being small, conceals the master's chief defects.⁴ At Perugia there are four or five panels in the monastery of S. Agnese

The friar looking at the miracle in the fresco of the Stigmata, is much injured. The drawing is not correct. On the border: "EUSEBIUS PERUSINUS PINXIT MDVII."

² On the wall, near the entrance close to the altar, are two figures of S. Elizabeth and S. Chiara, in proximity to which: "MDVI. DIE PRIMA AUGUSTI." On another wall are figures of SS. Bonaventura, Bernardino, Louis, and Antony of Padua, the heads of which are all damaged by stains. These parts of the Cappella delle Rose seem to be done in the style of Eusebio. The rest, we shall see, is by Tiberio d'Assisi.

⁴ The Virgin and Child recalls that of Raphael in the Connestabile Gallery, and still more that of Raphael [No. 141] at the Berlin Museum, which, with but slight differences, is a reverse of this one. The Baptist at her feet, in a little jacket of skin, is reminiscent of the children in Raphael's Madonna del Cardellino. His form is fleshy and somewhat puffy rounded. He sits holding the cross and pointing out a passage in a book (cut across forehead and right eye). S. John Evangelist and S. Andrew stand, SS. Antony and Bernardino kneel, at the sides of the throne, on the step of which is the inscription: "1512, EUSEBIUS DE S^{CO} GEORGIO PERUSINUS, PINXIT." On an upper border of the throne is the addition: "DIONISIUS PETRI BERTI FACIUNDUM CURAVIT." In the arched upper part, two angels hang the crown above the Virgin's head. In this picture again one notes, ex. gr. in the Virgin, Eusebio's tendency to give the line of the nose and mouth an oblique direction in respect to the oval of the face.

The predella represents, firstly, S. Antony setting the wounded leg in which three erect females (right) are copied from Raphael's Circumcision in the Vatican predella. Secondly, the Sermon of S. Antony in which a group (left) is also copied from the same piece by Raphael. Thirdly, the Miracle of the Ass kneeling before the Host. [According to MR. BERENSON there is a second picture by Eusebio at Matellica, a Madonna in the church of S. Giovanni; MR. PERKINS does not accept this as by the master himself, but gives it to his school (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907)].

originally forming one predella, which exhibit the same traits;¹ and the catalogue may be swelled by two more in the Academy, and an Adoration in S. Pietro.²

One might also claim for Eusebio the Virgin and Child of the Baring Gallery,³ in which a mixture of his style and Spagna's is apparent. It is quite likely that both were together in the Cappella S. Martino at S. Pietro of Perugia.⁴

In Tiberio, who is a native of Assisi, and whom Vasari does not mention among the pupils of Perugino, we have an artist of less feeling and of less power than Eusebio, whose scarce works are all dated in the first twenty years of the sixteenth century. His finest fresco, a lunette of the Virgin and Child, in S. Martino outside Trevi, is conceived in the spirit of that assigned to Ingegno at S. Andrea of Assisi, and thus connects him with the school of which Fiorenzo is the representative; but the square shape of the figures, the straight lines of draperies, and the sharpness of the colouring already reveal the germs of his decline.⁵ In two angels at the Virgin's sides, a reminiscence of Spagna may be discovered. At S. Francesco of Montefalco, where Tiberio painted a fresco of the Madonna between two saints in 1510, and in the Cappella delle Rose at ¹ These five panels are now in the Gallery of Perugia. They represent:—1. The Nativity. 2. Adoration of the Magi (copied from Raphael's Vatican predella). 3. Sermon of S. Bernardino. 4. The Samaritan Woman at the Well. 5. Two Saints,—all in the character of Eusebio.

² 1. S. Louis. 2. S. Chiara. In these a slight approach to the manner of Spagna. The Adoration at S. Pietro again reminds one of the predella by Raphael at the Vatican, but is attributed to Dono Doni; yet is not in the style that usually distinguishes the latter, i.e. mixture of Giulio Romano and the Michaelangesques. [This is now generally admitted to be an unquestionable work of Eusebio.]

We have noted (see antea, Perugino) frescoes in S. Agnese at Perugia in which Vannucci's mould and the handling of Eusebio seem revealed, also (see antea, "Spagna") frescoes in the monastery of S. Pietro at Perugia (Cappella S. Martino) in which Eusebio's name is also suggested.

³ Assigned, as we have seen ("Spagna"), to Raphael.

⁴ [Mr. Berenson ascribes to Eusebio a S. Sebastian in the Museum at Boston (U.S.A.); a predella, No. 1084, in the Buda-Pesth Gallery (magazine); a fresco of the Madonna, Child, and Saints in S. Francesco at Deruta; a Madonna and Saints of 1510 in Sir Hubert Parry's Collection at Highnam Court; a Madonna in M. Flameng's Collection at Paris; a Madonna in the Accademia di S. Luca at Rome; a fresco of the Virgin, Child, and Angels in S. M. della Pietà at Umbertide. The same critic ascribes doubtfully to Eusebio the Madonna, Child, and S. John, No. 147 of the Berlin Gallery, and the Standards of the Crucifixion and Creation of Eve in the Pinacoteca of Città di Castello—also the Assumption of the Gallery of Naples (this last, according to Mr. Berenson, on a design of Pinturicchio).]

⁵ The fresco is altered in colour by time, but the sharpness of the tones is peculiarly Tiberio's. The fresco is worked up on the old principle with red on green. On the border of the lunette are the words: ".GÁNES BAPTISTA MAGI DE TREVIO FECIT FIERI. TIBERIUS DE ASSI. . . ."

In the Dead House, which contains Spagna's fresco, there is a figure in Tiberio's manner, of S. Emiliano in episcopals, with a nun in prayer, near him. The rest of the space is whitewashed.

There are traces of the Umbrian style of Tiberio too in a S. Martin sharing his dress, on an altar to the left in the Dead House. The figures are, however, very paltry (see antea, "Pietro Antonio").

S. Fortunato in the same town, where he left five scenes from the life of S. Francis in 1512, he is more Peruginesque, yet emptier and more lifeless than at Trevi.¹ He is more successful in a full-sized S. Sebastian on a pilaster, rude and mechanical though it be, in the same edifice. A couple of angels attending a Virgin and Child, with saints, in the Cappella S. Girolamo at S. Domenico, near Assisi, reminds one again of Vannucci.² whilst the Madonna brings us back to the manner of the so-called Ingegnos, Amongst the saints, S. Chiara is striking as a mere copy of a figure by Simone Martini in the chapel of Cardinal Gentile at S. Francesco of Assisi.³ The incidents from the life of S. Francis, repeated in 1518 in the Cappella delle Rose at S. Maria degli Angeli, near Assisi, give no higher idea of Tiberio,⁴ and other productions to which his name might be attached are only to be registered for the sake of history.⁵ The ¹ Note the pilaster and border of this fresco. Note also the ornamentation of the throne, and the defective drawing of the extremities in S. Andrew (beard and hair in part renewed). The figures have no relief and the shadows are of a dull red; the outlines sharp and wiry. On the pilaster to the left are the words: "MAI FRANCESCO EVERILLUS SALVATUS UGUSTI," and on the border: ". PUS FECIT FIERI FAMILIA AGUSTI DE MONTEFALCO DIE XV MENSIS NOVEMBRIS AD. MCCCCCX. TIBERIÜ DE ASSISIO PFX." Looking carefully at this piece, it suggests the probability that Tiberio should be the executant of a Virgin and Child and four Saints [No. 146] in the Berlin Gallery, attributed there to Perugino.

In the chapel of the Roses at S. Fortunato, an Eternal and seraphs in the ceiling are a feeble imitation of Perugino. The following inscription authenticates the frescoes: "GRATIA DEI BËI FACTUM HOC OPUS AD MCCCCXII. XX. DIE MAII IMPËSIS CHILI SEIDE S. SEBASTIANI PRO AÏA SUA SUORUM ET DEFUNCTORUM. TIBERIUS DE ASSISIS PINXIT."

latest dates connected with Tiberio are of 1521 and 1524. In 1521, Fiorenzo and he appraise for Giacomo di Gherardo of Città della Pieve.¹ In 1524, he receives payment for the arms of Clement VII., on some monument at Assisi.²

Three authentic pictures by Sinibaldo Ibi mark him as one of the feeblest of the followers of the Peruginesque school, in the beginning of the sixteenth century. At Gubbio, where he was in company with Orlando of Perugia,³ he finished the Virgin and Child between SS. Sebastian and Ubaldo, in 1507, for one of the cathedral altars. Without any powers to justify his pretensions, he affects to rival the grace of Pinturicchio and the tenderness of Raphael, but the result is altogether poor. His Infant Christ is wooden. His S. Sebastian totters on the floor, and S. Ubaldo is a caricature of Manni. Mechanical outlines and dark strips of shadow, insufficient to relieve a flat red tone of flesh, are prominent faults.⁴

It is puzzling to be asked to assign to the same hand a Virgin of Mercy in the collection of the Marquis Ranghiasi at Gubbio, a canvas banner in which Raphael is imitated with a certain success and with much of the character peculiar to Timoteo Viti.⁵ We revert to the more certain inferiority of Ibi in an enthroned Virgin, Child, and Saints signed: "TIBERIUS DE ASSISIS P. P. MD XVIII," near Murelli, outside the suburbs of Perugia (Lett., ubi sup., pp. 209-10). [There is a chapel filled with frescoes by Tiberio at S. Fortunato, near Montefalco. Other frescoes by him are at Castelraldi.]

⁴ On the border of a conical canopy above the Virgin's head is the date: "AD. MCCCCCVII," and on the sides of the Virgin's throne: "SINIBALDUS PERUSINUS PINSIT HOC OPUS SEXTO KALENDAS OCTOBRI." Two angels kneeling on clouds at the sides of the canopy are full of Peruginesque affectation. The same is apparent in S. Sebastian on the right of the throne holding a dart. S. Ubaldo, in episcopal, is a grotesque caricature of the manner in which Manni details the human features. On the arms of the throne are the words: "HIERONIMUS DE . . NTIVOLUS P. P. FLO ET MADALËN SOÏI SUE."

of 1524, originally in a church on one of the islands of the Thrasimene Lake, and now in the left transept at S. Francesca Romana at Rome,¹ and in an Annunciation of 1528, lately preserved in the Audience of the Notaries at Perugia.² Less authentic, though in his mode, are the Madonna and Saints of 1510 in the hall of the Confraternità di S. Agostino,³ the Virgin and Child between SS. Peter, Catherine, Agatha, and Paul in S. Agostino,⁴ other subjects in the Gallery of Perugia;⁵ and a Virgin enthroned between the erect SS. Peter and Paul, the kneeling Francis, and Bernardino, in the convent of nuns of S. Bernardino at Orvieto.⁶

Sinibaldo Ibi is noted in the Guild of Perugia, and was one of the voters of a hundred at an election in 1527.⁷ He may claim to fill a space in the chronology of Italian artists like that held at the same period by Berto di Giovanni.

A curt entry in the register of taxes at Perugia proves that the latter was a householder in 1497. He made pennons for the trumpeters of the Magistracy in 1501, with Fiorenzo and Eusebio; is noticed in a record of 1507, and in documents of 1511-13 as companion in art to Domenico di Paris Alfani.⁸ In 1516, the nuns of S. Maria di Monteluca, near Perugia, renewed an old contract with Raphael for a Coronation of the Virgin, agreeing to pay him 120 ducats on the arrival of the panel from Rome in 1517, and binding Berto di Giovanni to furnish the frame

¹ It was originally in S. Secondo, on the Isola Polvесе, afterwards in the church of S. Antonio Abate at Perugia, and in 1813 carried away (MARIOTTI, Lett., p. 202; MEZZANOTTE, p. 282). It is now in S. Francesca Romana, at Rome, not dated 1532 (PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. i., p. 520; and GAYE, Kunstblatt, No. 86, 1836), but signed as follows on the front of the pedestal of the Virgin's throne: "SINIBALDUS PERUSINUS PINSIT MDXXXIII." The picture is high up, above a door, in the left transept of the church (wood, oil), figures half life-size, much cleaned and over-painted. It is defective in drawing and without relief. A lunette of the Eternal, once above it, is missing. The Saints at the Virgin's sides are four in number, including S. John the Baptist; and the head of that on the extreme right is repainted.

⁴ Wood, oil. On the step one reads: "AD. MCCCCCVIII. L. A. S. I. ." The last letters are like those in the Adoration of the Magi by Eusebio (see antea). The picture is light and unrelieved, more like Manni or Eusebio than Ibi.

⁵ Perugia Gallery. S. Francis (wood, oil), of a pleasing, but flat tone, and Virgin, Child, and two Saints, cold, poor, and injured.

and predella for 80 ducats.¹ It is historical that Raphael was unable to fulfil his promise to the nuns, and that the contract was not carried out till 1525, by Giulio Romano and Penni. Disappointed in 1517, by the neglect of Raphael, it would appear that the nuns employed some one to furnish a Coronation to take the place intended for Raphael's. At all events, there is a representation of the subject in a poor style, reminiscent of Ibi and Manni, on the altar once occupied by that of Giulio Romano and Penni in S. Maria di Monteluca.² It is dated July 25, 1517, and seems by the same hand as a S. John Evangelist in Patmos at S. Giuliana of Perugia.³ At the foot of the altarpiece of S. Giuliana is a predella with various subjects: two female saints, a S. John Evangelist, a Martyrdom in a caldron, and a Miracle. The style displayed in these small works is more modern than that in the figure of the Evangelist in Patmos above it.

When the Coronation originally ordered of Raphael was brought from Rome to S. Maria di Monteluca in 1525, the predella, including the Nativity, Presentation, Marriage, and Death of the Virgin, was delivered, it may be presumed, by Berto, who had contracted for it. This predella, dated 1525, is like a production of a later Raphaelesque, of a red-brown colour with strong shadows. It betrays the hand of one in the same relation, as Bagnacavallo is proved to have seen, to Raphael; but it is curiously like the predella of the S. John Evangelist in Patmos at S. Giuliana of Perugia. Are we to infer that the painter of the Evangelist and of the Coronation of 1517, who at that time imitated Ibi and Manni, is the same who, in the interval between that date and 1525, changed to a more lively and modern Raphaelesque manner? These questions must remain open for the present. It may be necessary in the meantime to note that an Eternal and a Virgin in the Naples Gallery, which seem fragments of one altarpiece, resemble in execution the Coronation of 1517 at Monteluca.⁴ We thus know but little really of

² The Virgin is crowned on a high throne, at the sides of which are SS. John the Baptist, Peter, Augustine (?) and Paul, SS. Jerome and Francis kneeling in front. On the throne step: "AD. M.DXVII, DIE XXV JULII." The forms are not pleasing, and there is no relief. The drawing is mechanically careful, but faulty. The flat colour shaded with grey, is a hard light red. The style recalls Manni and Ibi. MEZZANOTTE attributes the picture to Domenico Alfani (p. 252).

⁴ Naples Museum. Wood, oil, life-size. Represents the Eternal in a Glory of rays and seraphs (four), with a crown in His hands; wooden in form, raw in colour. Not numbered (wood, oil), in addition, Virgin, half-length, also with a crown in her hand. These two pieces, by a pupil of Perugino, exhibit the same style of art as the S. John and Coronation of Monteluca of 1517.

Berto di Giovanni; and the only additional fact connected with his life is that he laboured for the magistrates of Perugia in 1520, and was of the Perugian Guild.¹ His son Jerome is in its register also from 1523 to his death in 1543.²

Turning for awhile from the consideration of works by native Perugians, we shall not find a less remarkable extension of the influence of Perugino and Pinturicchio in Francesco of Città di Castello, or Thifernate, who reminds us in an Annunciation at S. Domenico of that place, of the class which Ibi represents, with longer proportions in the human frame, and draperies of more unnatural festoon.³ A similar subject in the sacristy of the cathedral,⁴ and a Virgin, Child, and Saints in the convent church of Tutti Santi,⁵ a Virgin and Angel Annunciate belonging to Signor Mancini,⁶ all in Città di Castello, betray an effort to mingle the Peruginesque with the grace of the youthful Raphael, whilst now and then a fibre as of Signorelli may be traced.⁷

A far more interesting and able man in this class is Gerino of Pistoia, whose education in an Umbrian atelier produced an art of a Peruginesque stamp. His character is cleverly drawn by Vasari, who says that he was a friend of Pinturicchio, a diligent colourist, and a follower of Vannucci.⁸ When he did the Virgin of Succour at S. Agostino of Borgo S. Sepolcro in 1502, he might already be considered a fair copyist of his master as regards type and proportion, drawing, and colour; ⁹ and there

³ This picture (wood, oil, figures almost life-size) hangs in the choir of S. Domenico. On the front of the floor one reads: "FRANCISCUS THIFER." Francesco is a low-class Umbrian painter, whose colours are given with high body, and slightly glaze, the tone being generally a little red. The outlines, which are also red, are broken and angular. The Virgin, strained in movement, has a long thin head curiously dressed in tresses. The hands are drawn and cramped in the Umbrian fashion. The angels in flight, at the sides of the Eternal in benediction, are obese in face; the cherubs in the glory round-headed. [Now in Pinacoteca.]

⁸ VASARI, vol. v., p. 276.

⁹ This is a canvas. It represents as usual the Virgin, erect, saving a child from the grasp of Satan, and threatening the evil spirit with a stick, whilst the mother kneels on the left, in prayer (life-size figures). The flesh of the child is bleached by exposure, and the drawing is bared, but there is no restoring. On the border one reads: "HOC OPUS PISIT GERINUS PISTORENSIS MCCCCCII."

is no reason to doubt that his talents were valued at that time and in that spot beyond those of others, as the remains of frescoes about contemporary with the Virgin of Succour still testify. Of these some are preserved in a passage leading to the sacristy of the Pieve,¹ and others are visible, though rapidly yielding to the effects of time, in a tabernacle at Fonte Secca di Borgo, outside the Porta Nuova of Borgo S. Sepolero.² In his fresco at the Pieve, which represents S. Barbara and a couple of other saints, he leaves the impression as of a tolerably gifted artist, partial to warm tones, more nearly related to Perugino than to Pinturicchio. In the tabernacle, the fine contours of an erect Virgin and Child between SS. Sebastian and Roch, give an idea of his power as an imitator of young Raphael and of Perugino. Without further inquiry, one might say of Gerino, in consideration of these efforts, that he was a second-rate Peruginesque, heading Manni and Eusebio, but inferior to Spagna.

In 1505 he is employed in the cathedral of his native city,³ and in 1509 he furnishes for the neighbouring church of S. Pietro Maggiore an altarpiece of the Virgin, Child, and Saints, that may still be seen there. Years have elapsed since he frequented the atelier of Perugino, and in the interval he has altered. The weight and breadth of the head in his figures become more conspicuous; the frames are smaller, and the draperies are more paltry. His art is thus more akin to Pinturicchio's; but his drawing and the soft fusion of rich and juicy tones disclose an increased tendency to study Raphael's early creations.⁴ This mixture of Perugino, Pinturicchio, and Raphael is most striking in the Last Supper at S. Onofrio of Florence, attributed by so many critics to Vannucci and Sanzio; and it is not unlikely that Gerino, with other pupils of Vannucci, should have had a share in its execution. He produces, indeed, something like it in the frescoes of S. Lucchese near Poggibonsi.

See for a panel in the style of the above a so-called Perugino in the Gallery of Count Sergei Stroganoff at S. Petersburg (antea, "Perugino").

He laboured in the convent of that name about 1513, and two scenes from the life of Christ with that date and his signature are preserved in a refectory, now turned to the profane uses of a canteen. They are hastily done, of strong colour, and mannered in drawing, though still Peruginesque, and showing the gradual descent of Gerino into the slough of conventionalism and ease.¹ In later years, a fresco of S. Agatha and S. Eulalia (1520), in S. Paolo, and a Coronation of the Virgin on the first staircase of the Palazzo della Comunità, at Pistoia, strongly show the feeble side of his character.² He is less Peruginesque and more Florentine, but weak as a draughtsman and no longer charming by richness of tint. The Virgin with Saints of 1529, originally in the Convento di Sala at Pistoia and now in the Uffizi, exhibits the progress of this final change more clearly still. The Perugian element is not entirely eradicated, but nearly so, and the tints are grey and dull. One could hardly tell, indeed, how the same Gerino should produce a piece so totally different from that of 1502.³ But the history of this gradual transformation teaches us that a man of second-rate powers may in his youth, and at a good school, be respectable in works which he no longer equals when he has lost the spur of rivalry and the advantage of daily studying the examples of a great master.

Without the feeling of Gerino for colour, but influenced in a certain measure by Pinturicchio and Vannucci, Giovanni Battista of Faenza, or Bertucci, as he is more commonly called, now claims a place in the

In the church of the fortress of S. Lucchese (on an altar to the right) is a panel, in tempera, representing the "Noli me Tangere," with the Eternal above in a circular glory, and in a border (in rounds) SS. Francis and Antony the Abbot. This piece is scaled in many places. It reminds one somewhat of Lorenzo di Credi, but it may be by Gerino or one of his school. [By Raffaellino Carli.]

A wall painting on one of the altars to the right, in S. Andrea of Pistoia has recently been uncovered. (It had been partially concealed by a canvas of more modern date.) It is much repainted, but exhibits something of Gerino. Subject: the Crucifixion (Christ in wood), with many Saints; in a lunette, the Resurrection. A S. James in S. M. dell' Umiltà is also assigned to Gerino (TOLOMEI, Guida, p. 93, and TIGER, Guida, p. 217). It is a canvas, dated: "MD."

class with which we are busied.¹ At bottom, Bertucci inherits the technical handling, the dull opacity of tone, and the rigidity of Palmezzano; but he also has a local stamp with some Umbrian sentiment; and his pictures are kindred of others by uncertain artists at Faenza.² The earliest of these is a Virgin and Child enthroned between two kneeling Saints, in the Pinacoteca of Faenza, an assemblage of poor dry figures of pale brown grey tone in flesh, by a precursor of Bertucci;³ the next a Nativity with Saints, and a Flight into Egypt, in the distance, in the same Gallery, equally careful in finish, but combining the same sort of poverty in forms and colour as the previous example, with something Peruginesque in the faces.⁴ An Adoration of the Magi in this collection follows, and exhibits more of Bertucci's character, being on a level in value with two frescoes of Saints in niches in the sacristy of the Servi at Faenza. The latter, however, though lean and slight, are not without dignity, and have a mixed Florentine and Umbrian air.⁵ A Christ on the road to Golgotha, and a Pietà, bright wall paintings removed from the refectory into the cloister of the Michelline of Faenza, are conceived in the Umbro-Peruginesque style, but not without expression or life in the features and action of the thinly built personages. The art is akin to Gerino's, and not improbably Bertucci's.⁶ Two Madonnas of the school might be named in the Communal Gallery at Forlì and in the Borghese Gallery at Rome.⁷ We come upon Bertucci with certainty in a "Majesty," inscribed and dated 1506, in the Municipal Gallery of Faenza. It is remarkable for tenuity in the engraved outlines, for the length and leanness, as well as overweighted head, of the figures, for the hardness of the drapery, and the redness of the flesh tones. In a lunette, the Eternal glances downward upon the portico, in the arches of which two angels, in the Umbrian mould of Perugino and Pinturicchio, hang the crown of heaven above the Virgin's head. Two more hold up the drapery of her cloak as she stands erect with the Child in her arms. In front

³ Wood, figures one-third the size of life.

⁵ These Saints are in niches with scalloped semidomes. They are in fresco and of life-size. One is the Beato Enea with a cross, a lily, and a book; the other is the Beato Giacomo Bertoni with joined hands. Both are in friar's dress. The necks and hands are thin and small.

⁶ The figures in these fragments are one quarter of life-size.

In the Borghese Gallery the Virgin and Child is assigned to Perugino, but is probably by Bertucci.

of her, two boys of slight proportions have each a foot on the step of her pedestal, one to the left looking up with joined hands, the other playing a mandoline.¹ Other pieces of the same sort, in which the rigidity of the Forlivese school is apparent, adorn the Gallery, ex. gr. two panels with SS. Hippolytus and Romualdo, Benedict and Lawrence in couples;² a Baptist in the desert,³ a Magdalen in a landscape,⁴ in all of which the colour reminds one of Palmezzano's for its flatness, rawness, and cold shadows; whilst the method of rendering form and drapery unites Umbrian peculiarities with the angularity of Cotignola. With such things before us, we cannot assign to any one else but Bertucci the Adoration of the Magi in the Berlin Museum, which has been catalogued under Pinturicchio's name, and the Glorification of the Virgin in the National Gallery attributed to Spagna. The first was commissioned for the Manzolini family in S. Caterina of Faenza;⁵ the second was for a time in the Ercolani Collection at Bologna. The Adoration is composed and drawn after the fashion of Pinturicchio's Sienese works, but tinted like Bertucci's, and filled with figures of his tenuous outline. The Glorification is still more remarkable.⁶ The Virgin and Child are not unlike Pinturicchio's in the altarpiece of 1508 at S. Andrea of Spello; but the two infant angels on the marble platform below are in the spirit of those placed by Bertucci in his picture of 1507. The glassy raw tones are likewise similar to those of the Faventine, who jumbles, in a lifeless cento, Pinturicchio, Spagna, and Palmezzano.⁷

The spread of Perugian art was not confined, however, to Umbria or the Marches. To the south it went as far as Naples; to the north it touched the Alps.

In the refectory of S. Maria la Nuova at Naples, an Umbrian composer, with slight power as a draughtsman or a colourist, has bequeathed to us a whole series of frescoes, which by some strange caprice or error have been given to the Donzelli. In a lunette, the Virgin receives the crown from the Redeemer, in the midst of angels. In a lower course, the Virgin and Child are adored by the Magi, in the presence of a numerous ⁵ VERMIGLIOLI, Vita di Pinturicchio, p. 28. The picture is [No. 132] in the Berlin Museum (wood, oil). The style of drawing, cast and detail of drapery, value of local tone, and technical execution, are all like those of Bertucci's Virgin of 1506.

suite ; and saints of the Franciscan Order kneel or stand at the sides of the principal scene. Beneath this, the Annunciation, and the Nativity fill the compartments at the side of a door. The spirit of the composition is that of Pinturicchio, the treatment as rude as anything produced by Tiberio d'Assisi.¹ But the artist is neither of these. His hand, or at least that of one intimately connected with him, is to be found in a more hasty and unskilfully treated Pietà, with an Adoration of the Magi, and numerous medallions beneath it, an altarpiece in a chapel of the convent church of Liveri, two miles from Nola. Some of the figures seem repetitions of those in the Adoration at Naples, the style of drawing and the colouring being equally, if not more, defective. The interest of this panel is great, because a "cartellino" on the right-hand foreground bears the words : "MAGISTER FRANCISCUS T. L. US PINXIT M.D.XXV. L." If it could be supposed that in Francesco's shop the Adoration was carried out with the help of assistants, it might be inferred that he in person executed the frescoes of S. Maria la Nuova at Naples. Yet, it may be also that Francesco is but the pupil or aid of the author of the frescoes, who proves himself by his work to be of Umbrian origin.² But the altarpiece at Liveri is not solitary. Another in the same church is devoted to the Virgin, Child, Angels, and Saints, with a Crucified Redeemer between the Virgin and Evangelist in a lunette, and eight incidents from the life of S. Barbara in a predella. On a "cartello" at the foot of the central panel are the words : "DSPŪM A FRANC^o TOLLENTINATE FACTŪ POSUIT SIMULACRUM AB ĔMANATO DEO 1530."³ A second is a Virgin and Child between two Saints, with the Resurrection in a lunette, and Apostles in a predella, on the pilasters of which is the inscription : "JACOPO PASTORE DE MONTEFUSCULO PINXIT, AÑO DÑI M.CCCCXLIII."⁴ A third in the same shape is devoted to SS. Zachariah and Elizabeth, between SS. John the Baptist and James

of Compostella, with an Annunciation in a lunette, and three scenes in a predella.¹ In the two latter the style is a coarse derivation from that of Francesco of Tolentino, but taking its rise at an Umbrian source, and of a class in which Giovanni de Monte Rubiano has already found a place. That class is headed by Vincenzo Pagani of Monte Rubiano, to whom a Peruginesque Holy Family with Saints, miscalled Crivelli, in S. Francesco of Monte Santo Pietrangeli, near Fermo, may be assigned,² and Cola dell' Amatrice, who apes Raphael and Michael Angelo.

An ill-taught Northern painter upon whom Perugino left a clear impression is Franciscus Verlas, whose Virgin, Child, and Angels in the Brera at Milan is dated 1511. Without feeling or life, Verlas reminds one of Vannucci in his angels, whilst his Virgin and Child are like those produced by the later followers of Mantegna.³ He is still more Peruginesque in a Marriage of S. Catherine dated 1512, at Schio near Vicenza. The Eternal in benediction, in a lunette, is fairly though flatly imitated; the children are drawn in the puffy Umbrian mode of Gerino of Pistoia.⁴ The Chiesa dell' Ospitale, in which this altarpiece is preserved, seems to have been decorated almost entirely with frescoes by the same hand.⁵

² RICCÌ, Painters of the Marches, ubi sup., vol. i., p. 210, assigns this picture to Crivelli. It is an altarpiece in courses with the Holy Virgin, Child, and young Baptist in the centre, between SS. Antony of Padua and Peter, Francis and Sebastian. In an upper course, the Pietà between SS. Lawrence and a bishop, Bernardino and Catherine. In pinnacle rounds, the Eternal between four Saints. Predella—Christ between the Twelve Apostles (wood, oil). This piece shows a derivation from Perugino, and recalls Eusebio in type and character. It has the same stamp as Pagani's authentic works of 1507 at Pausola, and 1529 at Sarnano, as others in the cathedral and S. Giovanni, as frescoes in S. Liberata of Macerata, as a picture in S. Francesco of the Minorites at Massa. [Works by Pagani are numerous in the Marches—no less than sixteen panels were ascribed to him at the Exposition of Macerata in 1905. As Mr. Perkins says, he is as remarkable for his peculiar development from a purely fourteenth-century artist into a quincentista as is his contemporary Cola d'Amatrice. Both appear to have begun under the influence of Crivelli—Cola ended under that of Michael Angelo. Two predellas by Pagani are in the Brera.]

⁵ One side of the nave contains a series of panelled frames filled with scenes from the lives of the Saints, and one with singing children. Beneath these are eleven half-lengths of Saints, male and female, in rounds. Above the arch of the tribune is Christ in benediction with SS. John and James. On the other side of the nave, the continuation of subjects similar to those first described, the whole

A later instance of Verlas' third-rate adaptation of Perugino is a canvas of the Virgin, Child, and Saints, dated 1517, in the parish church of Sarcedo, near Thiene (province of Vicenza).¹ Another, equally characteristic though unauthenticated by a signature, is the Madonna and Saints in the church of Velo, by Thiene, in which the drawing is taken from a cartoon by Vannucci; and two children at the foot of the throne are copies from the Perugino of Marseilles.² We shall see in a further notice of the school of Vicenza, how Speranza, a local artist, received an impress from the Umbrians, whilst Bartolommeo Montagna, in some pictures, imparts to his subjects something like a reminiscence of the Peruginesque. Having thus reconnoitred the country outside Umbria in which Vannucci's example found attraction, we revert again to Perugia, to the career of the two Caporali, of Melanzio, and the Alfani.

Bartolommeo Caporali is one of the old and inferior craftsmen whose names are found in records in connection with ordinary labours.³ He furnished pennons for the magistrates of Perugia in 1472,⁴ and contracted for an altarpiece in a chapel at S. Lorenzo in 1477.⁵ He was commissioned to deliver a Madonna in 1487 for the church of S. Maria Maddalena at Castiglione del Lago,⁶ and in 1499 he and Fiorenzo valued a picture by Manni.⁷ The only specimen of his skill that has any claims to authenticity is that of 1487, the several parts of which are preserved in the Casa Parocchiale at Castiglione del Lago; consisting of a half-length Virgin and Child, SS. Mary Magdalen, Antony the Abbot, Roch, and four busts of angels. They are rough distempers in which some conventional affectation of grace remains, though the figures are drawn with wiry and broken outlines in a coarse and incorrect style recalling Fiorenzo and Benozzo Gozzoli, and coloured in raw and sharply con-in Verlas' manner, not to be confounded with that in a canvas of the Virgin adoring the Infant on her knees, between Saints; a local tempera of the close of the fifteenth century.

One may note in passing as works with a local stamp, at S. Giorgio, near Velo (close to Schio), frescoes of the Crucifixion, Nativity, Resurrection, S. George and the Dragon, and Four Evangelists, in a ceiling, of the same weak class as an altarpiece representing the Virgin and Child between SS. George, Antony the Abbot, Blaise and Martin, inscribed: "HOC OPUS FECIT FIERI BONENCONTRUS DAM. DNI ANDREE DE PIONE DE VELLO, DE MESE SEPTEMBRIS M CCCC OTAVO." (1408); all injured.

³ He is said by MARIOTTI, Lett., ubi sup., p. 82, to have been free of the Perugian Guild in 1442; but this is possibly a mistake or a misprint.

trasted tints.¹ They are akin to pieces assignable to him in competition with Lodovico de Angelis ;² resembling a mutilated fresco removed from S. Giuliana to the Gallery of Perugia,³ a panel of 1485 at Ravenna,⁴ or a Virgin and Child dated 1484, in the Gallery of Naples.⁵ It would be justifiable, indeed, to neglect such poor creations, were it not of advantage to make note of them for the sake of tracing the style of Giovanni Battista Caporali,⁶ the pupil of Vannucci, the plagiarist of Cesariano's translation of Vitruvius.⁷

It has been stated, without proof as far as present research can avail, that Giovanni Battista Caporali was born about 1476.⁸ As an apprentice under his father, he might have witnessed the progress of the altarpiece of Castiglione del Lago ; and one might expect to find in the productions of his manhood some reminiscence of the paternal manner. He went early in the sixteenth century (? 1507, 1508) to Rome, where he had the personal acquaintance of Perugino, Pinturicchio, Bramante, and Signorelli, and frequented the company of Aretino.¹ It was natural that if he studied these masters collectively, he should mingle inspirations from them with those derived from his father. A fresco (of a fair class) in the semidome of S. Croce in Gerusalemme at Rome offers an example of such a mixture. It has already led to the inquiry, whether such a man as Antoniasso might not have had a share in it; one might now be led to look deeper into the secrets of its origin. The Eternal in Glory, at the highest part of the semidome, is Umbrian after the fashion of a follower of Bonfigli, and is attended by angels in the mould of Melozzo. S. Helen, below, adored by a kneeling cardinal, is shaped on the model of Pinturicchio, though of heavier build than was usual with him. In groups of soldiers to the right there are figures imitating those of Piero della Francesca and Signorelli. To the left, the nudes of men raising the Cross recall Alunno, Signorelli, Pinturicchio. As to colour, the injured condition of the frescoes preclude criticism. It is, however, possible that they should have been carried out in a great measure by such a man as the younger Caporali.²

There is a Virgin and Saints in S. Girolamo al Seminario at Città di Castello, signed: "HOC OPUS FECIT JOHËS BTA 1492." It seems the school-work of a man who had been with Signorelli. We inquire whether this can be Caporali.³

In S. Salvatore, about a mile distant from Panicale, the apse still contains remnants of a Christ in Majesty between SS. John the Baptist and Peter. Their forms, features, and expression, the way in which they are designed, draped, and coloured, are a modernised adaptation of the paltry manner of Bartolommeo Caporali at Castiglione del Lago; and the more likely to be by Giovanni Battista because they are carried out with the tricky boldness of the decorations at the Villa Passerini, near Cortona.⁴

The same hand, bolder, freer, and more closely following Signorelli,

² The general tone of these injured frescoes is yellow and verde, with shadows of a coppery red. The distant landscapes in the scenes from the legend of S. Helen are very heavy. The Eternal's bewigged head looks aged and muffled in clothes after Bonfigli's fashion. (See also antea, "Antoniasso"). [These are by Antoniasso.]

⁴ The colour is a flat dull red, but freely and slightly handled. The landscape behind the throne is retouched.

yet still with something of Perugino and Raphael, seems to have executed the Nativity and its lunette of the Eternal in different parts of the Duomo of Panicale.¹ The final expansion of the same style, altered by recollections of Giulio Romano and Michael Angelo, may be found in the florid handling of sixteen classical subjects in the Passerini Villa, where Caporali tries his hand at vehement action and muscular display, draws with a brave sort of facility and colours the wall freely with warm liquid tints.² The frescoes of that villa afford a clue to other productions at S. M. del Calcinaio, near Cortona,³ and elsewhere.⁴ Caporali died about 1560.⁵

Orsini, copying from a MS., of which he neglects to indicate the age, declares that a Nativity, begun by Perugino at S. Francesco of Montefalco, was completed by his disciple Melanzio.⁶ We have seen that some parts of it are from the cartoons of Vannucci, but that the handling betrays the comparative inferiority of a pupil.⁷ If Melanzio could be acknowledged as the author of this fresco, we should have convincing evidence of the ease with which artists of a low class, under the orders of a great master, can rise above an usual mediocrity. There is nothing improbable in the suggestion that Melanzio, who was a local painter of Montefalco, should have been subordinate to Vannucci, in one of his visits to that place. But the earliest pieces that can be attributed to this fourth-rate workman prove him to have engrafted the Peruginesque

² The subjects are given in notes to VASARI, vol. vi., p. 145. VASARI says that the Passerini Villa was planned and erected by Giovanni Battista Caporali (vol. vi., p. 145). The villa and its frescoes date previous to 1529, when Cardinal Passerini died.

³ At the high altar is a fresco of the Eternal with two Angels, and a panel of the Assumption which, if not by Caporali, is in his style, and perhaps done with the help of Bernabei (Papacello).

methods on the older ones derived from Benozzo and Alunno.¹ An altarpiece of 1488,² and a fresco of 1513 at Torrita,³ near Montefalco, would confirm this opinion if they could be shown to have been originally by Melanzio. Of this there is little reason to doubt if we compare them with others of more unassailable authenticity, such as the tempera of 1498 in S. Fortunato outside Montefalco,⁴ or that of 1515, at S. Leonardo in the same place.⁵ The Perugian element in the first is like that observable in Tiberio d'Assisi and Bartolommeo Caporali. In the second there is more of Tiberio and something in addition of Spagna. In each case, the result is poor and very inferior to the Peruginesque Nativity already mentioned. Nor did Melanzio, if on this occasion he distinguished himself, ever rise to the same level again, as may be testified by frescoes and panels that can be attributed to him at Vecciano,⁶ in S. Francesco, in the cathedral, and in S. Luminara of Montefalco, and in the monastery of Subiaco.⁷

² This is a panel, in five niches, with the Virgin holding the Child erect on her knees, in benediction, between SS. Sebastian and Severo, Augustine and Theresa, on gold ground. Four seraphs are placed in medallions in the spandrels. The figures, three-quarters the life-size, are painted poorly in tempera, of a dull yellow colour in the flesh. The heads are small and pinched, the drawing of extremities faulty. The S. Augustine seems a copy from Alunno. On the border one reads: "DEPICTA EST AD ONOREM MARIE VIRGINIS AD. M488 DIE VERO PENULTIMA MENS. DECEMBRIS." [This altarpiece is in S. Francesco at Montefalco, where there is also another polyptych of the year 1487, which MR. PERKINS considers an unquestionable work of Melanzio (cf. Rassegna d'Arte, August 1907).]

⁷ At S. Francesco of Montefalco, the subject of a tavola, assignable to Melanzio, is the Virgin of Succour (life-size figures), inscribed: "GRISEYDA S. BASTIANI F.

But it is time to close the register of men who lived on the traditions of Perugino, or his more talented apprentices, with a notice of the Alfani and their contemporaries.

A goldsmith and architect named Paris, having lived for more than half a century in Perugia, bred his son Domenico to the profession of art ;¹ and the youth contracted an intimate friendship with Raphael. He is said to have been strongly solicited by the latter to visit Rome, but in vain,² and Domenico was content to keep up a correspondence with his brother student, and to act as his agent in Perugia. An undated letter is preserved in the Wicar collection at Lille, in which Raphael requests Domenico to apply to a lady of the name of Atalanta at Perugia for a debt due to him ; and it has been very fairly suggested that the lady is no other than Madonna Atalanta Baglioni, for whom the Entombment in the Palazzo Borghese at Rome was finished in 1507. Some approach to certainty as to the date applicable to this epistle may be found in a drawing of the Holy Family at the back of it, the style of which points to a period little later than 1507.³ Raphael thus repaid the small services he required from his friends at Perugia with designs which they treasured up, as we shall see, for future use.

Domenico Alfani willingly undertook, we may believe, the commissions entrusted to him, and for the rest, worshipped the style of Raphael with great and meritorious constancy. He became a registered master at Perugia in 1510 ;⁴ painted in Berto's company pennons for trumpeters and a shield with the arms of Leo X. in 1511 and 1513,⁵ and gradually rose, as years went by, to the higher dignities of altarpieces. Towards middle age, having a family of natural children whom he caused to be legitimised,⁶ he took his son Orazio into partnership, and they laboured in common. Nor does Orazio appear to have worked on his own account till late in life. For this reason the works of the two Alfani remained almost alike and bore the stamp of one atelier. The tendency to copy

F. PRO AIABUS DICTI S. BASTIANI TARQUINI PERITEI ET FRANCESCHINI A.D. MD.X." tempera. The figure of the Virgin protecting the Child from Satan, is long. The drawing is straight and broken. The same subject, dated 1507, of which this seems a replica, is in S. Domenico of Montefalco.

In the cathedral of Montefalco, a lunette fresco of the Virgin, Child, Angel, and Tobias, a Saint in episcopals, and S. Sebastian, is a ruder work of the above class. In S. Luminara, a Dead Christ, with the mourning Virgin and Magdalen, has the character of Melanzio, and bears an inscription closing with the date 1509. Above the portal of the same church is a Virgin of Mercy, with two Saints holding up her mantle, seemingly a youthful production of the same artist. For Subiaco, see vol. i., of this work, p. 70 et seq.

Raphael is perceptible in their pictures for years after his death, and only made way in part, at a later period, for that of Rosso, who, having been hospitably treated by Alfani as he fled to Perugia from the sack of Rome in 1527, returned his kindness with advice and even with cartoons for whole altarpieces.¹ That artists of so little originality should not be of first-rate talents need not be remarked. After Rosso's departure, the Alfani fell into the mannerism of the decline, and lost some of the few advantages they had possessed at first.

The earliest production of Domenico's that exists is the Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. Gregory and Nicholas, a panel, in oil, with Alfani's name and the date of 1518 on the hem of the Virgin's mantle, in the Collegio Gregoriano at Perugia.² It is full of Raphaellesque beauty and feeling in the principal group, which recalls Raphael's Madonna in the late Roger's Collection; pleasing from the nobleness and regularity of the forms in the attendant saints, but marred by the paltriness of two angels like Victories suspending the crown over the Virgin's head, and still more so by the uniform dullness of darkly-shaded and unglazed colour.³ These distinct features are apparent in an equally fine fresco of the Virgin and Child between SS. Francis and Bernardino, and two lower figures of SS. Jerome and Antony of Padua, to the right as one enters the church of S. Francesco at Bettona. The Child, held on her lap by the Virgin, and receiving a Cross from S. Francis, is a little too weighty perhaps; and there is something strained in the grouping, but the Virgin's face is pleasing; her movement is natural, and the art displayed is derived from that of Raphael at the period of the Madonnas "della Seggiola" or "di Foligno," with some additional fleshiness in the figures and mannerism in the drawing. The draperies are generally fair, chiaroscuro sufficient, colour rosy and of good impasto.⁴ Of similar interest are scenes from the life of S. Antony, altar frescoes attributable to Domenico in S. Antonio Abate at Deruta.⁵ A Madonna, with two Angels playing harp and viol, and two kneeling Saints, a panel dated

1521, and signed by Alfani in the cathedral of Città della Pieve, recalls that of 1518, and is coloured in the flat reddish tone adopted by Andrea da Salerno;¹ it is the best authenticated example amongst those which the artist furnished to the churches of Perugino's birthplace.² In the Virgin, Child, and Saints and Angels, by Domenico, in the Gallery of Perugia, the Florentine element is already exhibited. The colour is glossy, yet modelled with great impasto. The figures are free in movement and of fully expanded forms, and they are moulded into a well-distributed composition. But whilst one traces the gradual change to a more modern system, the influence of Raphael is still to be noticed in the Infant Christ and in some of the saints.³

It is not till 1532 that the full expansion of the Florentine style is visible in Domenico's works. Vasari says that when Rosso stayed at Perugia he gave Alfani a cartoon for an Adoration, which the latter conveyed with success to panel.⁴ This episode is to be found in an altarpiece at S. Agostino of Perugia, in which all trace of Umbrian feeling is absent;⁵ but the Madonna and Saints of Sta. Giuliana at Perugia bears Domenico's name, with the date of 1532, and suggests the same reflections; and it is clear that as he did this piece he had abandoned the nature of a Perugian for an imitation of Del Sarto, such as we recognise in the Madonnas of Rosso.⁶ Our English collections are not

² There is also an altarpiece (wood, oil, figures life-size) of the Virgin between SS. Bartolommeo, Francis, Louis, and Antony, in Alfani's Raphaellesque manner, with much repainting in the draperies, at S. Francesco of Città della Pieve, and a S. Jerome (wood, oil) in S. Agostino of the same place, a mixture of the manner of Alfani and G. B. Caporali.

entirely bare of illustrations of this change in Domenico. We find one in a Holy Family assigned to Perino del Vaga, in the collection of Castle Howard.¹

In 1553, Domenico and Orazio are found joint undertakers of a Crucifixion, SS. Jerome and Apollonia, for S. Francesco of Perugia; the execution of which seems to have been left almost entirely in the hands of the younger man.² Of this we have the less reason to doubt, as an earlier production of Orazio is preserved in a transept of the same church. The subject is the Nativity, singular for the unusual introduction of S. Anna with a basin of water, the style, a mixture of Domenico's and imitative Raphaellesque, the colour, of a monotonous and all but shadowless rosy tone. Guide-books declare that the predella, now missing, was inscribed, and bore the date of 1536.³ The handling is similar to that of the Crucifixion between SS. Jerome and Apollonia; it proves that an altarpiece at the Carmine of Perugia, designed with slight changes from Raphael's Holy Family at Lille, and usually attributed to Domenico Alfani, cannot have been done by him, but must be considered either as a youthful production of Orazio, or of some one related to him in art. There is indeed room for uncertainty on this point. The composition is copied with the help of squares from Raphael's beautiful drawing, twelve cherubs' heads being introduced into the upper arched portion instead of three as Sanzio proposed. The execution is cold and careful, as one might expect from a young artist, the flesh but slightly shaded, and of a flat rosy yellow, laid on at one painting, the dresses, on the contrary, of thick impasto and high surface. These characteristics would suit Orazio; but on the side of a house forming part of the distance of the altarpiece, the word "ANSELMO" is legible, and on the hem of the Virgin's dress: "O. M.DXX. ANSE . . . &

The hands are bent in M. Angelo's fashion. In the predella, in five parts, scenes from the life and martyrdom of S. Giuliana are depicted;—inscribed, on the pedestal: "AD. M.D.XXXII. F. DOMINICUS PARADIS PERUSINUS FACIEBAT" (figures in oil, life-size, on panel). [Now in Gallery, Sala XIX., No. 6.]

² The contract with both is in MARIOTTI, Lett. The picture, of a reddish flesh tone, is injured; it hangs at an altar in the transept of S. Francesco. The Christ is by no means good. [Now in Gallery, Sala XIX., No. 11, ascribed to Domenico.]

MENO XX.," which has been interpreted, by a considerable stretch of imagination, as Anselmo Giovanni and Domenico Alfani.¹ A Martyrdom of S. Sebastian at the Uffizi is apparently by the same hands.² The remaining pictures of Orazio may be left to the compass of a note.³ After his father's death, about 1533,⁴ he lived for nearly thirty years, dying at Rome in 1583, with the doubtful celebrity, attached to his name, of first president in the Academy of Perugia, founded A.D. 1573.⁵

² Uffizi, No. 1182 [now 1205]. Small panel, oil. S. Sebastian, nude on the tree, and archers drawing their bows, like the same subject at Panicale. The figures are dry and lean, and remind one in some things of Signorelli's at S. Domenico of Città di Castello. [MORELLI considers this an early work of Girolamo Genga (cf. Della Pittura Italiana, p. 89). Mr. Berenson is of the same opinion.]

⁴ Domenico is described as the author of frescoes, dated 1525, in the Villa of Prepo, near Perugia (MARIOTTI, p. 248). [See A. SCALVANTI, in Rassegna d'Arte, August 1903.] In 1527, he received a commission for an altarpiece for Castel Rigone, which was valued in 1534 (ibid., p. 246). It was long supposed to have found its way to the Gallery of the Uffizi at Florence, but the round of the Holy Family there (No. 1110) is not that of Castel Rigone, though it is a fine Perugian work in Domenico Alfani's style. Missing are the frescoes of Domenico painted in S. Fiorenzo of Perugia, some of which had been taken from the wall on the demolition of that church (figure of S. Andrew). See MARIOTTI, p. 248. In 1535, Domenico painted the arms of Paul III. on the Public Palace of Perugia; in the following year, a statue of S. Louis in S. Francesco (ibid., p. 242). In 1536 also, Domenico married the mother of his legitimised children (ibid., p. 250). In 1549 he valued a picture by Lattanzio Pagani and made a will (ibid., pp. 248 to 250). In 1553,† Domenico was still living (ibid., p. 247).

For Pompeo Cocchi, who was Domenico Alfani's contemporary and almost his equal, there is not much to be said; but he should not be forgotten entirely amongst the Peruginesques¹ any more than Giovanni di Giorgio,² Mariano of Perugia, or Perino Cesareo.³

¹ Pompeo Cocchi is on the guild register in 1523 (MARIOTTI, p. 208). A Virgin and Child between SS. Nicholas and Lawrence (wood, oil, life-size figures) hangs in the Duomo at Perugia. On the pilasters: "ANNO MDXXV. ." (? 7) with the words: "POMPEO COCCHI" in small letters beneath. The authenticity of this inscription shall not be denied. If Cocchi be the author of the piece, he is not unlike Domenico Alfani. The Child presents its back to the spectator like one that Procaccini might have conceived. The two Saints remind one of those by D. Alfani. The draperies are broad. The colour, of a strong red in the flesh, is well fused and of solid impasto. In the Perugia Gallery is a Crucified Saviour [Sala XVIII., No. 18, dated 1523], part of a fresco detached from S. Severo, transferred to canvas, and catalogued under Cocchi's name. The nude is mannered in drawing, but not unlike that of a tavola, No. 203, in the same Gallery, assigned to the same master, originally in the Confraternità della Giustizia, and representing the Saviour on the Cross between the Virgin and Evangelist. On the obverse of the panel, the Virgin holds the head of the Messiah on her lap. The Crucifixion recalls the Florentine manner of the followers of Fra Bartolommeo, still with a prevailing Umbrian feeling in it. The style is similar to that of a Crucifixion in the Louvre named Bernardino of Perugia (see antea, p. 301), being free and bold. In the Confraternità di S. Agostino, an old subterranean church at Perugia, now transformed into a storehouse, there is a fresco of the Crucifixion, with the fainting Virgin, John the Baptist, and three figures in a landscape, called Perugino by CONSTANTINI, Guida, p. 150, but in the manner of Cocchi or Domenico Alfani.

MARIOTTI mentions ruined wall paintings by Cocchi at Montemorello, notes his will drawn up in 1544, and a valuation of an altarpiece by Lattanzio Pagani, in 1549 (Lett., ubi sup., p. 238 and following).

² Giovanni di Giorgio was registered 1506 in the Perugian Guild (PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. i., p. 521), having, in 1505, painted the heads of a cataletto for the Brotherhood of the SS. Annunziata, which are said still to exist. For the same Brotherhood, 1517, he completed what was called a "cassa del Cristo morto" (Ex lib. confratern. sub anno, extracted by Professor Adamo Rossi), of which two panels are preserved. On one of them, the symbols of the Passion, and two sleeping soldiers, on the other, two figures of the same kind (originally done in tempera, on reddish brown background, but now much repainted in oil), are distributed. [Sala XVIII., Nos. 20, 21.] There is feeling in this piece, which imitates the slight small figures of Pinturicchio and Raphael's youth with some show of success.

³ For Mariano, consult MARIOTTI, Lett., pp. 101, 197-9, 201-2. He is mentioned as a poor painter by VASARI, vol. ix., p. 147, and there is a feeble creation of his, of a Peruginesque character, dating from 1503 in the Cappella Belli at S. Domenico of Perugia. [Now in Gallery, Sala XIX., No. 5.]

A Virgin, Child, and two Angels, with devotees under the protection of a Pope, SS. Dominic and Chiara, form an altarpiece in the Chapel del Rosario in the church of Scheggino, near Spoleto. It is a mannered and very weak performance without a trace of Perugino's style remaining, inscribed: "PERINUS CESAREUS PERUSINUS PINXEBAT 1595." A lunette above the side portal of S. Domenico at Spoleto, is by the same hand.

CHAPTER XIV

FUNGAI, PACCHIAROTTI AND PACCHIA, PERUZZI AND BECCAFUMI

IN considering the last phase of development in the Sieneſe ſchool, nothing is more remarkable than its aſſimilation of varied foreign elements. After clinging to old and almoſt ineradicable habits nearly to the cloſe of the fifteenth century, painters who had loſt all power of ſelf-regeneration gradually took leſſons from the Florentine, the Umbrian, and the Lombard, either by coming into contact with men of thoſe countries at Siena, or by ſtudying them abroad. Whiſt Signorelli, Pinturicchio, Perugino, and Bazzi contributed to this alteration by practiſing in Siena, the Florentines of the following of Andrea del Sarto, Raphael, and Michael Angelo extended their influence in the ſame quarter by the force, the number, and the importance of the works with which they filled the cities of Italy. Still, though tacitly admitting the ſuperiority of men whom they admired, the Sieneſe never loſt entirely the ſtamp of their nationality, nor ſucceeded in diſcarding their Italo-Byzantine manner.

Bernardino Fungai ſo completely inherited the ſtyle of his maſter Benvenuto di Giovanni, that a freſco of the Aſſumption in the Oratory of S. Sebaſtino, near Aſciano, might be aſſigned with equal propriety to either.¹ But before his death, in 1516, Fungai transferred his ſpecific traits to Giacomo di Bartolommeo Pacchiarotti,² whoſe art, in its expanſion, was at one time hard to diſtinguiſh from that of Girolamo del Pacchia. Pictorial hiſtory ſoon forgot Fungai, of whom it preſerved little more than tradition; but it confounded Giacomo with Girolamo, ſo that the latter ceaſed altogether to exiſt; and the praiſe which he had received from Vaſari was ſuppoſed to apply to Pacchiarotti.³ The research of Gaetano Milanese disentangled the lives of the two men. Their pictures and those of Fungai still require a vigorous sifting.¹

² The commentator above cited ſtates without proofs, though poſitively, that Fungai died in 1516, aged fifty-ſix (Com. VASARI, vol. xi., p. 173).

³ VASARI ſpeaks of Pacchia in the life of Giovannantonio Bazzi, vol. xi., p. 151. He is confounded with Pacchiarotti by DELLA VALLE and all the Sieneſe chroniclers before him (ſee Lett. Sen., vol. iii., p. 317 and following). RUMOHR gives to Pacchiarotti things, the character of which is that of Fungai (Forchungen, vol. ii., p. 212) and ſuggests the poſſibility of aſſiſtance given by him to Pinturicchio at the Piccolomini library (vol. iii., p. 45). PASSAVANT, Raphael, vol. i., p. 389, evidently alludes to pictures by Pacchia when ſpeaking of Pacchiarotti.

Guide-books give note of many productions by Fungai, which are preserved in churches and museums; nor is there any difficulty in conceding that they are all by one artist, since they are alike on the spectral model of Matteo da Siena or Benvenuto di Giovanni, and slightly tinged with an imitation of Pinturicchio. They are all feebly and confusedly composed, ill drawn, dull in colour, unrelieved, and generally lifeless. The figures are unnatural and incorrect in movement, dressed in broken and angular drapery, exaggerated in length, and perfectly rigid.² Amongst the creations of his earlier period, one, to which the date of 1500 has been given in books, exhibits the peculiarities we have enumerated, coupled with great splendour of gilding and primary colour. It represents the Coronation, at Sta. Maria de' Servi, or the SS. Concezione, of Siena.³ Better proportioned, but of the same stamp, are the Virgin, Child, and Saints, hanging on a wall in the choir of the Carmine at Siena, a Fungai of 1512;⁴ but more characteristic pieces are the Coronation in the church of the Madonna di Fontegiusta,⁵ a predella to a Nativity by (?) Francesco di Giorgio in S. Domenico,⁶ and the Assumption in the Academy of Siena. Without any change in its arrangement from the time-honoured one of the Sienese, the latter displays some Umbrian and Florentine peculiarities in the round and regular shape of the heads.⁷ The five subjects of the predella are distributed in Pinturicchio's fashion, and appear more spirited than usual, because they are of a smaller size. They may be due in part to the assistance afforded to Fungai by Pacchiarotti,⁸ who would thus claim a share in divers panels of the

⁴ The date is also given by MILANESI (ibid.) and by DELLA VALLE, Lett. Sen., vol. iii., p. 381. The colour is dry and of a dull low key. The SS. are Sebastian and another, erect, Jerome and Nicholas kneeling, the hat of the first and the staff of the latter held by children in front of the throne. [Now in the Siena Gallery, No. 431.]

same class—a predella with five half-lengths of saints in the Siense Academy,¹ a Madonna with S. Catherine and other saints in the church of the Compagnia di S. Catarina at Siena,² a Nativity in the cathedral of Chiusi,³ and a Madonna amongst saints in the church of Buonconvento.⁴ Fungai sometimes assumes the types and affectation of Perugino, as may be seen in the example lately at the British Institution under his name,⁵ and in the Madonna falsely ascribed to Vivarini at the Kensington Museum.⁶ His more usual garb is that with which he appears in the Virgin and Child catalogued as by Alunno in the collection of Count Paul Stroganoff at S. Petersburg.⁷ His best and perhaps latest performance is a Christ between SS. Francis and Jerome, the lunette of an altarpiece by Pacchiarotti in the Academy of Siena.⁸ The

[Miss OLCOTT, Guide to Siena, p. 334, also gives to Fungai No. 375, a Virgin and Child, with SS. Mary Magdalen and John the Baptist; and Mr. Berenson adds No. 385, another Madonna and Child, to the list.]

⁷ The Child holds the orb and a bird fast to a string (wood, gold ground). He stands on a cushion, on a parapet, before the half-length of the Virgin; somewhat restored, but not without feeling considering its authorship. [I know nothing of this picture.]

difference between the lunette and the Madonna and Saints below it is not so striking but that both may have been done in the same atelier.¹ They are similar; but the drawing of the first is harder, the colour more sombre than that of the second, which reveals a better design, more form in drapery, a truer feeling for colour, and greater animation; improvements traceable in pictures to which from the oldest time the name of Pacchiarotti has been attached.²

whose Nativity, No. 189 [now 279] in the Academy of Siena, inscribed: "OPUS PETRI DOMINICI DE SENIS M.CCCC. . . .," is a weak, rosy-coloured picture, of careful, but flat treatment. To him may be given the Nativity, No. 183, in the same collection, and a Virgin, Child, and Saints, No. 182. [Now Nos. 390 and 397, Regarding Domenico, whose works are not rare, see Mr. BERENSON's list in his Central Italian Painters. Domenico's most important work, according to Mr. Perkins, is the Assumption at Buonconvento, already noticed. Mr. Berenson ascribes to him the execution of the large picture of Calvary (designed by F. di Giorgio), No. 428 of the Siena Gallery, and also a share in the fresco of Assumption of Balducci in the Ricovero di Campansi (see also Miss LUCY OLCOTT, Guide to Siena).]

Andrea di Niccolò's works are a caricature of the foregoing, as ex. gr. a Crucifixion, No. 190, in the Siena Academy. There are notices of his existence between 1477 and 1509, at Siena, in Doc. Sen., vol. ii., p. 425, and vol. iii., pp. 5, 40, and 296. [Mr. Berenson also publishes a list of works by Andrea di Niccolò, by whom there is a Madonna and Saints in the Fitz-William Museum. A large altarpiece by Andrea is in the parish church at Paganico, near Grosseto (see B. BERENSON in Rassegna d'Arte for July 1905). Another interesting polyptych in S. Martino at Sarteano, was rightly identified as a work by Andrea by Mr. PERKINS (Burlington Magazine, September 1904). Still a third altarpiece, bearing the master's name and the date 1498, is in the Collegiata at Casole. An attractive little Nativity, on canvas, by Andrea, No. 365 of the Siense Gallery, clearly shows the influence of Francesco di Giorgio (cf. L. OLCOTT, Guide to Siena, p. 333). A quaint picture by this artist, painted for the Shoemakers' Guild in 1510, is in the church of S. Mustiola, and represents the Virgin and Child between SS. Crispin and Crispinian.]

² [Modern students of Siense painting, such as Mr. Berenson and Mr. Perkins, have readily distinguished between Fungai's manner and that of his follower Pacchiarotti, and the list of Fungai's works has been greatly enlarged. Large altarpieces by the master exist in the Duomo at Chiusi (a Nativity), and at S. Casciano de Bagni (a Coronation with Saints). It is one of the remarkable circumstances connected with Pacchiarotti, that we know much more of his private life than of his works. He was born in 1474 at Siena,¹ and fills a broad page in the history of the troubles for which his native city was so famous in the sixteenth century; and a long list has been made of pieces that have perished, commissioned of him when habitual love of disorder and sauntering did not bring him into mischief either as a soldier defending himself against external foes, or as a member of a lawless brotherhood which made the streets of Siena unsafe by day as well as by night.² There is a most amusing account in chronicles of his flight from justice in 1535, and his concealment in a tomb, where he spent forty-eight hours in terror of his life and a prey to evil smells and vermin. He was outlawed, and restored to civil rights again, and had the luck, which he hardly deserved, of dying in his bed (circa 1540) at his own place of Viteccio. But all that remains to illustrate his art is an Ascension at the Academy of Siena, once in the Chiesa dell' Osservanza,¹ a Visitation in the same gallery, removed from the church of Campiglia d'Orcia,² another in the Academy of Arts at Florence.³ There is little to distinguish the first of these compositions from the usual one of the old period. The well-known want of compactness in arrangement and of simplicity in movements in the Sienese are as conspicuous as the bony dryness of the forms, and the affectation resulting from an attempt to realise immediate decisive action. A light and washy colour helps to give the picture an impress easily recognised in the Visitations at Siena and Florence, of which it is therefore unnecessary to speak further. Another Ascension at the Carmine of Siena, if it be by Pacchiarotti, to whom it is assigned, is the best attempt he ever made at that subject. The painter is determined that there shall be movement and passion in all his personages, and he tries to realise both by extraordinary pose, and by speaking gesture or strong expression; but with all the desire to produce these results he fails, because he has not the suppleness or correctness of drawing, or the mastery of anatomy which might enable him to overcome the difficulties he courts. He produces strained attitudes and contortions; and though feeling and dignity are conveyed in the figure of the Virgin, awkwardness and rigidity are common to the surrounding saints. If he has any special tendency in addition, it is to make the human frame long and bony, to suggest by childish curls of drapery the idea of a breeze, to colour the flesh without marked contrasts of light and shadow, in a warm, rosy, but well-fused, yellowish tint. He has perhaps in his memory reminiscences of the most varied nature—Umbrian poses of Perugino and Pinturicchio, agitated or convulsed action of Signorelli, affectation caricaturing the Leonardesque of Bazzi, and recalling even Piero della Francesca.¹ The features of this Ascension are no longer entirely characteristic of Pacchiarotti; they lead one forward to the consideration of Girolamo del Pacchia, his contemporary and perhaps at one time his fellow-labourer.² It is curious, indeed, that whilst the study of Fungai reveals a companionship between him and Pacchiarotti, a similar relation is afterwards to be noticed between Pacchiarotti and Del Pacchia. The link which connects the two last might be traced even to the Ascension just described in the Gallery of Siena, a picture differing from that of the Carmine in some particulars only. The latter, in fact, is a composition of the same stamp as that in the Gallery, but a variation of it as regards tone and the admixture of more modern elements derived from the Umbrians. It makes a sensible approach to Del Pacchia's Coronation of the Virgin in S. Spirito of Siena, and is to be classed rather as one of his youthful creations than as a work in which Pacchiarotti should have changed his style to one more like that of his colleague.

Girolamo del Pacchia was the son of a Hungarian, who had become famous at the close of the fifteenth century as a founder of cannon.¹ This Hungarian, known as Giovanni delle Bombarde, married a Sienese girl named Apollonia, who bore him Girolamo, on the 4th of January 1477. The boy, having lost his father a year after his birth, was educated by his mother, and brought up to the business of an artist. He took to wandering at an early age, and was in 1500 at Rome. An altarpiece which he delivered, in 1508, to the monastery of Pontignano, near Siena, would tell, had it been preserved, what masters Del Pacchia had been studying up to that time; in the absence of this example, and of others which were produced in 1511, one turns to the no less authentic though uninscribed pictures with which he adorned a chapel in S. Spirito and the altar of the Bandinelli at S. Cristoforo, of Siena.

The Coronation of the Virgin at S. Spirito² is remarkable for the vigour and harmony of its colour, and the breadth and accurate definition of its chiaroscuro. It has all the movement and none of the awkwardness of the Ascension at the Carmine; and is a manifest improvement on the forms usually given to the human face by the Sienese. The draperies are serpentine in fold, instead of being broken as of old. The manner of Raphael is adapted with an originality natural to an independent talent, and the colours are of a thin texture and reddish tone reminiscent of Andrea da Salerno. A couple of angels beneath the principal group are drawn in Raphaelesque movement; and foreshortenings, where they occur, disclose their origin in the same school.

The Virgin and Child between SS. Paul and Bernard are conceived with a measure of grandeur and of refinement in character and expression to which the Sienese of the sixteenth century have not as yet accustomed us. The attitudes are dignified and appropriate, the Virgin, though broad in face, recalling Mariotto Albertinelli, and Fra Bartolommeo as regards mould, and Raphael in respect of attitude. The Child is playful, handsome, and well drawn. Two infant angels flying under the draperies that would, but for their support, fall over the parapet of the throne, are quite airy and light in their aspect. There is a distinguishing gravity and repose in the whole piece. Its colour is of the best obtained in Siena—powerful, brilliant, and transparent, and handled with a knowledge of all the technical improvements of the day, softly fused, well modelled, with an impasto scumbled and glazed after the approved fashion of the Venetians. A harmonious landscape adds to the general charm.³

There are proofs of Pacchia's presence at Siena in 1515, when he painted the bier of the Company of S. Bernardino, and joined Beccafumi in appraising the frescoes of Girolamo di Benvenuto at Fontegiusta; but the earliest things extant are the Annunciation which was placed on the altar of the Tantucci by the Dominicans of S. Spirito in 1518, and the frescoes in the Confraternità di S. Bernardino, of Siena. The altarpiece is injured, but never had the beauty of that in S. Cristoforo.¹ It represents the Annunciation in a perspective of arches, and the Visitation in a distant landscape. The type of the Virgin remains almost unaltered, but her unnatural grace recalls the earlier efforts of Sinone Martini, whilst the angel is slender, and strained in action. In the lapse of years, Pacchia had been evidently affected by the examples of Bazzi, and took some lessons from the Florentine Francia Bigio. He betrays these influences in the air and drawing of his figures, into which, however, the Florentine weight and breadth of drapery are but partially introduced. Nor has he any longer his old strength as a colourist, his fine rich tone being exchanged for one of a more clouded glassy tinge.

In the production of the frescoes for S. Bernardino, Pacchia competed in 1518 with Bazzi and Beccafumi. Without being able to surpass the Lombard who took the Leonardesque manner to Siena, and became one of the greatest masters of his time, Pacchia clearly outstripped Beccafumi, whose talents were marred by exaggeration and unhealthy fancy. He repeated with slight change, on one wall, the Annunciation of S. Spirito,² but he designed a Nativity on the other with a vivid memory of the Florentines.³ At a first glance, indeed, we are reminded of Andrea del Sarto; but, in reality, it is the scale of art represented by Francia Bigio at the Servi of Florence which Del Pacchia adopts. With that, and a mixture of Siennese affectation, and with some traits derived from Pinturicchio, he produces an agreeable and sufficient originality. Having acquired this tendency in his later years, he preserved it unchanged in frescoes at the Oratorio dell' Oca in Fontebranda of Siena, where he illustrated three scenes from the legend of S. Catherine of Siena with considerable skill and animation.⁴

² The lower part and ornament are somewhat injured in the fresco compartment containing the angel. The Virgin's blue mantle is repainted.

⁴ S. Catherine cures Matteo di Cenni of the plague (too injured to give an idea of Pacchia's style).

Dominicans, assailed on the road by robbers, are liberated by S. Catherine. In the foreground to the left, a Dominican is held by the head by two of the thieves.

He was betrayed in his old age into companionship with Piaccharotti and the dangerous club of the Bardotti, in 1533; and when that lawless community was dispersed in 1535, he disappeared from Siena, and was never heard of afterwards. The character of his authentic works now justifies the historian in ascribing to him most of the pictures in European galleries usually attributed to Pacchiarotti. Of these there are good examples in the Siena Academy¹ and in the Munich Pinakothek;² a better in the National Gallery,³ and one still more important under the name of Fra Bartolommeo in the Collection of the Marquis of Westminster.⁴

In the distance to the right, some friars are journeying on horseback, and nuns kneel in prayer.

S. Agnes of Montepulciano, on the bed of death, is visited by S. Catherine, her foot being raised by miracle as the saint approaches to kiss it. Two females, kneeling on the left, are full of life and movement; and a fine feminine form, near this group, points to S. Catherine. The latter, on the right, stoops to kiss the foot, behind her a suite. These two last frescoes are injured by restoring. The figures are slender, and often affected in action. The sharp outlines and raw colour may be owing to bad condition.

The best of the series is the last, in which Pacchia follows the laws of composition bequeathed to the Florentines by Giotto. The face and figure of the dead S. Agnes are noble, and the attitudes of the remaining figures appropriate.

In Pacchia's earlier style is a fresco of the Marriage of Cana, in a lunette to the right of the semidome, in the Baptistery of S. Giovanni at Siena.

[An important work by Pacchia is a large Deposition in S. Martino at Sinalunga. Very characteristic of him, again, is the fine Annunciation (two panels) in the Collegiata at Santoano (cf. F. MASON PERKINS in Rassegna d'Arte for October 1904). For a long list of his works see BERENSON'S Central Italian Painters, 1909, pp. 210-12.

There is a pleasing Madonna by him in the National Gallery, No. 246; and one of his most effective panels, a somewhat similar Madonna and Child, is in the Collection of Mrs. L. M. Richter at London (cf. CLAUDE PHILLIPS in the Magazine of Art.)

For a Holy Family (No. 35, Gallery of the Hermitage at S. Petersburg), attributed to Pacchia, see postea, "Bugiardini." No. 36, in the same Gallery, is a round of the Nativity, in which the Virgin adores the Infant on the ground, S. Joseph being seated to the left. It is not sufficient to have reduced Pacchiarotti to his original mediocrity, and restored Del Pacchia to his station in the annals of Siena. Their countryman Peruzzi claims a more honourable attention than our age is usually willing to bestow; and it becomes necessary to rescue his pictorial labours from oblivion. It may be true as a general proposition that his merits have been recognised; but in considering the manifold acquirements of so versatile a genius, it has been usual to study one side to the detriment of the other; and we are too apt to forget the painter in the architect.

Baldassare Peruzzi was born at Siena on the 7th of March 1481, and was the son of a weaver.¹ In 1501, he was employed by the rector of the Duomo in the circular chapel dedicated to S. Giovanni,² a proof of his precocious powers. Amongst the artists to whom he may thus early have been indebted for instruction and advice, Giovanni Antonio Bazzi was the most remarkable. He had been brought from Lombardy to Siena by an agent of the Spannochi family, at the close of the fifteenth century, and obtained immediate encouragement as well as satisfactory commissions. From Bazzi, Baldassare probably took something of the Leonardesque; but he had scarcely received payment for his work in S. Giovanni of Siena, when his sympathy was won by Pinturicchio, who had just obeyed the summons of Cardinal Piccolomini.

Peruzzi in this way combined his own style with the Lombard and the Umbrian, and went thus fortified to Rome about the year 1504.³ Though untried, and probably without friends, he quickly achieved a position, and settled in the capital, a favourite of his countrymen as well as of the highest dignitaries in the Church.

Two decorations of great extent and importance, completed before the lapse of the first ten years of the century, give an exact view of his progress as well as of the direction taken by his labours. In the semi-dome and tribune of S. Onofrio, an Eternal, a Coronation of the Virgin, and a Virgin amongst Saints, at the sides of which the Epiphany and landscape. An impress as of Florentine imitation (Albertinelli, Fra Bartolommeo and their followers) may be found in the composition and distance. The execution is not on a level with the conception, the colour being light and a little gay in the Sieneese manner, and suggesting the name of Pacchia.

² 1501, August 15th, he receives 42 lire for paintings in that place. Com. in VASARI, vol. viii., p. 238.

³ He went, according to VASARI, with one Piero of Volterra to Rome (vol. viii., p. 220) about the close of the papacy of Alexander VI. A record is preserved in which this very Pietro (Maestro Pietro del fu Andrea da Volterra) being at Rome in 1506, appoints Pacchiarotti his agent at Siena. Annot. VASARI, vol. viii., p. 220.

Massacre of the Innocents are depicted, leave no doubt as to the way in which his style was formed. The Eternal is like Peruzzi's at S. Croce in Gerusalemme. The angels remind one of Pinturicchio. The Apostles about the Coronation, more lively in movement than those of Bernardino, recall the Leonardesque of Bazzi. In the central Madonna, and the Massacre, but particularly in the Adoration, where the distant episodes betray the influence of the Perugian, and the mask of the Infant Christ is that of the Lombard, we trace the same contrast.¹ Nor is it confined to the tribune, being exhibited with equal distinctness in one of the chapels.²

At S. Croce in Gerusalemme, the vaulting of a crypt, dedicated to Sta. Elena, is inlaid with mosaics after models furnished by Peruzzi in the first period of his Roman stay, his employer being Cardinal Bernardino Carvajal. A central medallion of the Eternal is connected diagonally with the bents of the angles by four ovals in which the Evangelists stand. Between the ovals, four shovel frames contain scenes from the legend of the Cross, SS. Sylvester, Peter, Paul, and Helen (with Cardinal Carvajal at her feet), being in niches in the arches of the entrances. The design, akin to that of an earlier age, might confirm the propriety of an opinion according to which this ornamentation was made to replace another of an older date. Its distribution and rendering reveal a rare mastery of perspective as applied to architecture. A sensible, perhaps inevitable, hardness prevails. We trace some of the heavy coarseness derived from Pinturicchio in the Evangelists; a more successful boldness in the other saints and in the angel symbolising S. John Evangelist.

¹ Mancini (in DELLA VALLE, Lett. Sen., vol. iii., p. 182) would assign these frescoes entirely to Pinturicchio. Titi (Annot. VASARI, vol. viii., p. 221) suggests Peruzzi for the semidome, Pinturicchio for the wall paintings beneath it. VASARI, however, says (vol. viii., p. 220): "Peruzzi did the choir of S. Onofrio"; and there is one hand in the whole work. The semidome subjects are all on gold ground, in courses. Below the Eternal, in four spaces, angels; beneath these, the Coronation between the Twelve Apostles and twelve Sibyls. In the central fresco of the tribune, the Virgin (mantle repainted) is enthroned between SS. John the Baptist, Jerome, a female, and Onofrio, the donor kneeling in the foreground. The head of the Baptist is Leonardesque. A dais of gold hangs over the Virgin's head. The fresco of the Massacre comprises also a Flight into Egypt, the landscape full of incidents and small figures as in Pinturicchio. In this, as in the Adoration on the left, the dresses are almost all repainted, and in the latter the landscape is renewed. The lower part of the tribune pieces is quite new. The colour, generally, is freely handled in a warm yellowish tone.

Throughout, we find the same composite character as in the frescoes of S. Onofrio.¹

Equally interesting, and hitherto unacknowledged as a creation of Peruzzi, is the ceiling partly renewed by Raphael in the Camera dell' Eliodoro at the Vatican. With the exception of the corners and shovel-frames, the whole of the decoration evidently existed previous to the entrance of Sanzio upon his labours in this hall. Many before him had left specimens of their talent there;—Piero della Francesca who had competed with old Bramante,² Signorelli, and Della Gatta.³ But the author of beautiful works like these, which are so clearly the forerunners of others in the Farnesina, is a painter of the time of Julius II.⁴ They show the taste of a man impressed with the beauties of the antique, and with the hardihood, the power, and precision of one familiar with the division of architectural spaces. The frame-work is on gold ground, into which four medallions imitating bronze are let in, the rest being monochrome in various forms simulating bas-reliefs of Greek skirmishes, children, and allegorical impersonations. Peruzzi's share, if it be not incorrect to assign the portion we have just examined to him, is richer and better than that which the aids under Sanzio's orders carried out in the spring of the angles, the latter being on a simple yellow ground, whilst the former is on gold. A long and slender figure of Abundance, dancing on a cloud in one of the rhomboids, though obviously derived from the classic in its pose, action, drapery, and style of nude, is executed with that tendency to bony articulations and extremities peculiar to a Siennese. The mould of the face in its circling of falling locks is not without a reminiscence of Bazzi, whilst the flowing dress is rendered in the mode derived by Peruzzi from the Lombard and from Pinturicchio.⁵ Two children, sitting above the name of Julius II., exhibit similar maxims of art, and a raw reddish tinge of colour. The skirmishes in monochrome are from the antique, which, it is well known, Peruzzi was led to study with unusual industry in Rome. Raphael's forbearance in preserving these masterpieces is as great a proof of judgment, as that which he used towards Perugino was an evidence of kindness of heart.¹

During this period of progress in the career of Peruzzi, the materials for a thorough insight into the principles of ancient structures were ready to his hand. As the foundations of old edifices were laid bare one after the other, artists flocked to the favoured places, and measured the ground-plans, the diameters of columns, and the thickness of walls. From fragments of bas-reliefs, they got an additional insight into the methods familiar to the sculptors of the best age. Perspective was necessarily applied in its most scientific abstruseness to realise the outward appearance of buildings, the fallen members of which were too bulky to be raised, or too much injured to allow of re-edification. Through perspective, of which Peruzzi became a master, we may well suppose that he gained a quicker knowledge of architecture than he might otherwise have attained. But he owed much also to Vitruvius, whose text he annotated and translated, leaving the sheets to be afterwards published by the industry of his pupil Serlio.² The latter admits that he was first led to understand architecture by following a course of perspective,³ and it is likely that the same thing happened to Baldassare.⁴ Favoured by circumstances, as Peruzzi was, and gifted as we have already seen, it was natural that his accomplishments should soon become known; and we note without surprise how eagerly Agostino Chigi, the rich banker of Siena then residing at Rome, took advantage of his skill to erect a palace on the Tiber banks.⁵

The Farnesina Palace, as it is now called, has been poetically described by Vasari as "non murato ma nato."⁶ It is one of the finest of its kind, and embodies grace, solidity, and correct proportion. There is no reason to believe that Peruzzi completed it later than 1509 or 1510,⁷ at which time not only the main block had been erected and covered externally with subjects,⁸ but the garden-lodge had been finished. In the flat central roof of the latter, Peruzzi drew Perseus overcoming Gorgon, and a female furiously driving a car drawn by oxen; in the curves, gods and goddesses, such as Venus combing her hair on a couch, Pallas preparing for a hunt, Hercules and the lion, Hercules and Hydra,

² LOMAZZO, Idea del Tempio, p. 14, charges Serlio with plagiarism; but he is hard on Serlio, who acknowledges his debt.

Apollo and the centaur, Leda on the back of the swan, Jove and Europa, Venus and Saturn, Ganymede on the shoulders of the eagle;¹ in the vaulting of the windows, males and females, mostly seated and variously occupied;² in the spandrels above the capitals, Cupids in dead colour;³ and in other supplementary spaces, river-gods on monsters, the whole surrounded by monochrome borders so graceful and so ably conceived that Titian declared he could not distinguish them from stone.⁴ As a later period, Sebastian del Piombo covered the lunettes purposely left bare by Peruzzi, including one which tradition assigns to Michael Angelo.⁵ Raphael introduced the beauteous Galatea on the wall below, and Poussin a number of landscapes. The authorship of Peruzzi has been contested in spite of Vasari's text,⁶ and in defiance of the evidence of style; and the ceiling of the Loggia has been ascribed to Daniel da Volterra, perhaps in consequence of the confusion caused by the similarity of names between the Palazzo Farnese, where Daniel did work, and the Palazzo della Farnesina, where he did not. Peruzzi's manner is too characteristic to be mistaken. In order thoroughly to understand it, a broad and general view must be taken of the man, not as a painter alone, nor as a sculptor, nor an architect, but as a combination of all three. The roof of the Farnesina must not be examined piece by piece, but in connection with its architectural arrangement, its geometrical balance, and the position of each object depicted. The result of the whole is an harmonic unity without any discordance. Peruzzi was a man of compass and of rule, a master of perspective, and a mathematician. He had already realised what Raphael in later years was but hoping to attain—the "fine form of the edifices of antiquity." For him the flight was no longer "that of Icarus."⁷ The antique had made him familiar with the forms of the classic Greek. It was a necessary consequence of his studies, as well as of the tasks usually before him, that the pictorial should be but a part of a plastic and architectural whole, that he should calculate how the figures were to fill a given room; that painting should not be independent, but fettered. When he found it suitable, the human proportions were made subservient to their place rather than to each other, their movements being calculated with less reference to the reality than to sculptural or architectural requirements, and therefore unnatural. But, in his mode of filling, he obeys a law of harmony as telling in its way as a similar one, applied to colour, is telling in the hands of Titian.¹ It is indeed his substitute for colour; for in his ardour he neglects, or he shows that he lacks, the great and precious gift which charms in Vecellio, Del Sarto, and Correggio.

From a very remote time, the Sieneſe had betrayed their partiality for Greek ſculpture. In ſome the taſte was not pure, as in Simone Martini and Antonio Federighi, their familiarity with the antique being inſufficiently aided by that of nature, which is the ſource from which the Greeks drew the ideal. Conventionaliſm and rigidity were the reſults. Peruzzi, who inherited this tendency in his countrymen, was not free from their defects. His art ſtands in the ſame relation to the claſſic as that of the Etruscan vases. He composes ſubjects in the ſpirit of bas-reliefs, with perſonages of a ſtiff and affected action—even when moving in the boldeſt manner under a quick momentary impulse. In all circumſtances he diſcloſes his Sieneſe education² and the influence exerciſed by Pinturicchio and Bazzi. Yet, he remains original, and holds the ſame poſition of honour in the Sieneſe ſchool as the Lorenzetti and Simone. They were not equal to Giotto, though they ſurpaſſed his pupils. He does not keep the high level climbed by Leonardo, Michael Angelo, or Raphael, but he comes immediately after them, and is ſuperior to all their followers. His execution is technically ſimple. The hard, roſy tones of the fleſh, and the tints of the draperies are without any under preparation, and the white ſurface is the higheſt light. In no part of the Farnesina Palace is Peruzzi more completely characteriſed than in the Fall of Gorgon, where Perſeus waves his ſword about her head, whiſt a female and three males ſhow their faces and buſts above the frieze. A diagonal, dividing the picture, would confine the portion deſcribed to one half of its rectangle, giving it the appearance of having been intended for the pediment of a temple, the more, as a fragment of a hoſe at the narroweſt part reminds one of that at the Parthenon. The upper half contains a ſingle and comparatively coſſal Victory blowing a horn, whoſe limbs, wings, and drapery are made to fill the ſpace and eſtabliſh the equilibrium of the compoſition.³ The treatment is that peculiar to Peruzzi. It is full of forced activity and daſh, yet eſſentially ſculptural in feeling, the drapery eſpecially being ſearched out for the ſake of ſuggeſting the under form. Equally hardy is the foſhorteſened poſition of the female in the next compartment, who with ſurpriſing wildneſs throws her head and body forward, ſtretching out the arm with the ribands at which the ſteers are pulling, and holding with iron grip the side of her car.¹ Peruzzi's power is not less evident in the representation of the muscular strength and gigantic exertion of Hercules coping with the lion, a scene in which he establishes a favourable contrast between himself and Antonio Pollaiuolo.²

But Peruzzi did not confine himself to the lodge of the Farnesina. In the hall of the upper floor, which precedes the rooms adorned by Bazzi and Beccafumi, he paints the ceiling, with its tasteful cornice and mouldings resting on mimic caryatidæ, the frieze held up by pilasters, and unreal windows, through the openings of which landscapes are depicted, the effect being, as Vasari says, to increase the apparent size of the place;³ nor does he neglect the ornaments above the doors where the supporters of scutcheons are made to stand in classic pose, and children play above the architrave, nor those of the chimney, on the mantel of which Vulcan is at his forge, nor the panellings in which gods and goddesses are placed. Moderns, it is true, sometimes affirm that Giulio Romano was the author of the frieze for which the fables of antiquity contribute the richness of their imagery.⁴ But a glance at such incidents as Apollo driving the chariot of the sun, ought to have prevented this mistake. This is not the art bequeathed by Raphael to his favourite pupil. It is the bold, the classical one of Peruzzi, whose conception is the forerunner of that with which the less gifted Guido, under other influences as regards manner, produced the Aurora of the Rospigliosi Palace.

Again, on the ground-floor, a room facing the Corsini Palace contains a fictive frieze in which we find a copious illustration of the fable of Hercules, the Rape of Europa, Danae and the golden rain, Diana transforming Actæon, the death of the latter, Apollo and Midas with the asses' ears, Apollo and Marsyas, Venus and Cupid, gambols of children and tritons, river-gods, Silenus, a satyr surprising Venus asleep, the chase of Meleager, Endymion. Nothing can be more fanciful or more powerfully handled than this graceful and well-arranged series, nothing more like Peruzzi than the plastic nature and action of the figures. It is the work of a man who has studied Michael Angelo and Raphael, without abandoning his own originality, who has become chastened by contact with great contemporaries.

² The Hercules and lion are as an antique bronze, ſo powerfully given is the action of the leg breaking the back of the beaſt.

The monochrome framing and mouldings are very choice, and look as if they were real, an effect due at once to modelling and a judicious application of perſpective. The gilt roſettes and the arms in the centre of the ceiling are the only parts in genuine relief. The lilies of the Farnese family were ſubſtituted for the Chigi ſcutcheon, when the Palace of the Farnesina changed hands.

An interesting narrative might now be given of various undertakings entrusted to Peruzzi. We might describe the numerous edifices of which he adorned the fronts in Rome,¹ how he got up the "Treason of Giulia Tarpeia" at the festival given to Giuliano de' Medici (1515) on his appointment to the supreme command of the Papal forces,² how he furnished models to Cardinal Pio for the Duomo (1515), and for S. Niccolò (1517) of Carpi;³ we might register frescoes in the Vatican and in S. Pietro, others done for Riario, Cardinal of Ostia, both in the capital and in Ostia;⁴ but this would be a labour of little fruit, especially as the Ponzetti Chapel in S. Maria della Pace offers an excellent clue to Peruzzi's manner in 1517. In a semidome, no doubt planned by himself,⁵ he painted, in three courses, the Sacrifice of Isaac, the Creation of Adam and Eve, Moses receiving the Tables of the Law, the Nativity, Epiphany, and Flight into Egypt, David and Goliath, the Deluge, and Judith despatching Holofernes.⁶ Below these, the Virgin and Child between SS. Catherine of Alexandria and Brigitta, the latter recommending Fernando on his knees at her feet.

All these subjects bear a great and unmistakable stamp. The beauty of the spacing, and the taste with which the panelling is adorned, are not surpassed in Raphael's chapel at S. M. del Popolo.⁷ But the talent of Peruzzi at this period is particularly remarkable as displaying his endeavour to rival Michael Angelo and Raphael in dignity of character, of expression and of life, in breadth of handling and in noble simplicity of drapery. Though it was not easy to attain this combination without loss of independent style, Peruzzi did so with good fortune, and affords a gratifying example of the impulse which may be given to genius by the rivalry of great men.

The Creation is composed and carried out with an art in the footsteps of that of Buonarrotti and Sanzio. The Eternal, taking Eve, shows her to Adam, from whose rib she has just been shaped. His movement as he sweeps in the air, recalls in its grandeur that of Raphael in the Camera dell' Eliodoro; but the mode in which Eve is brought into the presence of Adam is a fine compression of Michael Angelo's two subjects in the ceiling of the Sixtine Chapel, and full of his elasticity in the reproduction of the nude. In the Adoration, Peruzzi appears more completely in his own colours, with the oft-recurring impress of Bazzi in the type of faces, but with rich and skilful grouping of his own, and a grand cast of drapery. Something, at the same time, in the general aspect of the work reminds one of Gaudenzio Ferrari; and the presence of that feature in more than one of these frescoes might almost suggest that he and Peruzzi were together at Rome.

The conception of the Deluge illustrates another side of Peruzzi's character. Almost all trace of the Umbrian is lost in a vigorous union of episodes and action, in the rendering of which the models of the Florentine school, and particularly those of Buonarroti afford the master peculiar inspirations. Without falling into the empty imitation of the Herculean in form, Peruzzi applies with originality the maxims upon which the art of the great Florentine was based and strives to gain a footing on the level which he attained.¹

The Sacrifice of Isaac, in the contemplation of which one reverts to the time of Ghiberti's competition with Brunelleschi, is also very fine. The angel arresting the hand of Abraham, the patriarch himself, are grand, in the freedom and life which they embody; and the group is adapted to its place by an application of the principles that dictate to Raphael his arrangement of the same subject.

Less successful in the Nativity, the Flight into Egypt, or the David and Goliath, Peruzzi is himself again in the Judith and Holofernes, where an old female on the ground stoops with her arm and shoulder between her knees in a pose, the counterpart, as to spirit, of one in the Sixtine Chapel.

The grand figures of the Virgin, Child, and S. Brigitta would be still more effective, were it not for something strained and affected in them and a certain mannerism in the drawing, but Ferrando Ponzetti's is a broad and massive portrait; and the pose, the drapery, and the outline of the head are a noble mixture of the sculptural with the Leonardesque of Bazzi. The bold and pastose touch proclaims a thorough mastery over the technica, though, as usual, the flesh is a little raw and rusty in tone.²

² The blue drapery on the Virgin's shoulder, and the left hand of S. Catherine, are

An artist who can produce the frescoes of S. M. della Pace has reached a giddy and dangerous elevation, beyond which it is difficult to advance and but too easy to recede. Peruzzi at this point had tried his powers to the utmost. It was but human that he should rest on his laurels, and that the result should then be rather the reflex of past greatness than the accession of new strength. But Peruzzi preserved his ascendancy in architecture after he had yielded his best in painting; and he remained in honour in consequence of a versatility which he shared with others of his highly favoured age. We shall see how he ultimately fell into increasing conventionalism and affectation. In the meanwhile the ravages of time and restorers are alone the cause why less attraction is felt for the Presentation in the Temple, at S. M. della Pace, than for the frescoes of the Ponzetti Chapel. In the absence of any outer charm we may still admire in it the maxims of true composition, the introduction of the antique into architecture, the illustration of several abstruse laws in perspective science, the grand, the sculptural and the graceful in action, drapery and motives.¹

Something might be said of a Nativity, the only fresco that is left of those which Peruzzi left in S. Rocco of Rome. But the injured condition of its parts only permits a guarded assertion, and the belief that it may have been produced shortly after 1517.² From that year till 1520, when he succeeded Raphael as architect of S. Pietro³ and from 1520 to the sack of Rome, he did little that has not perished. It is interesting, however, to note amongst fleeting productions of those days the scenes got up for Cardinal Bibiena's play of the Calandra. Before his death, Raphael had furnished the decorations of Ariosto's Suppositi, given at the expense of Leo X. in a temporary theatre.⁴ When Raphael died, Leo found nobody abler for that sort of work than Peruzzi, whose fame had otherwise been eclipsed by Sebastian del Piombo;⁵ and the patronage of the Pope no doubt induced his fool Fra Mariano also to employ him.⁶ repainted, the tapestry behind the group dimmed by time. Flesh parts here and there are renewed. Paintings by Peruzzi on the face of the wall into which the domed chapel is sunk are greatly damaged. One sees traces of the angel liberating S. Peter, David playing the harp, and Christ appearing to S. Paul.

¹ This large picture is injured by restoring, and of a dull reddish tone. The antique classic spirit in the composition and figures seems to have struck the Caracci and Nicholas Poussin. In a letter of G. B. Vignola to Martino Bassi, the former says in reference to it: "Baldassare . . . finse un telaio di legname essere attaccato a' gangheri di ferro alla muraglia, talchè chi non sa che sia dipinto nel muro, lo giudica fatto in tela" (BOTTARI, Raccolta, vol. i., p. 498).

During Leo's last years Peruzzi was induced to visit Bologna at the request of persons who desired to complete the front of S. Petronio. In the period of his stay there (1521-2) he made several drawings on various scales and of different proportions, without satisfying the superintendents of the building.¹ He was more fortunate in pleasing private friends such as the Albergati, who erected a palace on his designs, Messer Panfilio dal Monte, and the Conte Giovambattista Bentivoglio.² The Adoration of the Magi, a cartoon presented by Peruzzi to the latter, is not the best that the master could have done; but being now in the National Gallery, it affords a convenient illustration of the way in which he adopted, without the servility of a copyist, the conception and the mode of rendering form peculiar to Raphael.³ The cartoon is an echo of that which Sanzio produced for his great series of tapestries, and was copied, not merely by Girolamo da Trevigi,⁴ but, with unimportant changes, by others.⁵ The best coloured variety of the subject, and one much in the spirit of Peruzzi, is that of the Escorial, like a theatrical scene, with the Colosseum, pillars, temples, and a marble Caesar on a pedestal in the distance.⁶

Two contemporaries, in addition to Vasari, testify to the greatness of Peruzzi's talents at this time, Lamo, who heard him praise the compositions of Mazzolini of Ferrara,⁷ and the architect Ercole Seccadinari, who described his drawings of S. Petronio as magnificent.⁸

The death of Leo X. and the accession of Adrian VI. were so unfavourable to the prospects of artists that Peruzzi was probably induced to prolong his absence from Rome; but at the expiration of Adrian's short lease of power he returned and was engaged (1523-4) at the festival in honour of Clement VII.'s coronation.⁹ Amongst the commissions with Another example, like No. 218 of the National Gallery, is the feeble, red-toned Adoration in the Collection of Lord Ellesmere (small, wood, No. 85).

A third still more modern is that of Dudley House, formerly in the Fesch Gallery, a feeble and very varnishy production, possibly by Prospero Fontana, as WAAGEN states (Treasures, vol. vii., p. 236).

which he was now troubled, one is from Cardinal Hinekworth for Adrian's tomb in S. Maria dell' Anima, the framework and sculpture of which were carried out by Michael Angelo of Siena and Tribolo, in a heavy style, whilst Peruzzi painted the canonisation of two saints at its sides, a fresco which has been since obliterated.¹ Of the same period were the chiaroscuro Apostles in the niches behind the tomb of Sixtus IV. at S. Pietro, one of which is said to be preserved in the "Grotte" of the Vatican.² But during the whole of this time, and until the sack of Rome in 1527, Peruzzi retained the office of architect to S. Pietro.

On that memorable occasion it was his misfortune to be captured and ransomed by the Spaniards and plundered of all he possessed.³ On his arrival in Siena, in the very lightest of dresses, his abject condition naturally excited the compassion of his countrymen, who drew up an address (June 10, 1527) to the Balìa in his favour. The government was but too glad to secure such a man; and Peruzzi was engaged at a salary of five scudi per month.⁴ We shall not follow his career during the time when his chief occupation was that of an architect or the revision and planning of fortresses. From 1527 to 1535, when he returned to Rome, the pictorial works which he executed were few, being mainly confined to the decoration of the castle of Belcaro;⁵ and the completion of a fresco in S. Maria in Fontegiusta of Siena representing the Sibyl prophesying to Octavian. For those who admire the exaggerated

classicism of the degenerate Michaelangelesques this wall picture is a masterpiece. The masculine attitude and gesture of the Sibyl, the bold decision of movements galvanised, one might say, into sculptural immobility at the moment of utmost muscular tension, the theatrical terror of Octavian and the astonishment of his suite cannot but create an impression. But the obvious arrangement of the whole piece, parading instead of concealing the man's science and his knowledge of action and true proportion, are too unnatural to please. After S. Maria della Pace, Peruzzi would necessarily drop into this slough and fall into the coarseness of Baccio Bandinelli, if some superhuman effort did not stop him on the height which he had gained. It may console us to remember that Michael Angelo is not great in the Paolina as he is in the Sixtine. The Sibyl of Fontegiusta is not the less of great power, teaching us to reject, as Peruzzi's, many pieces which his name has made familiar. Amongst these the Holy Family on the high altar of the church of Torre di Bibiano, now supposed to be by one of the Puccinelli, the Brescianini of Siena,¹ and other portable pictures. We might except the "Charity" in the Museum of Berlin,² but Peruzzi may have left much to his

¹ The Virgin, with SS. John the Baptist and Jerome at her sides (half-lengths, and less than life-size). The Infant, seated on a parapet in front, turns from the breast and looks at the spectator. The execution is careful, the colour hard, but of a rosy tone with sharply defined shadows. There is something Raphaelesque in the Virgin's face, forms, and movement; the Child is like those of Bazzi and Peruzzi. The handling, however, is not equal to the conception, and unworthy of Peruzzi. It seems like a production by an artist in possession of a design from the portfolio of a greater master. DELLA VALLE finds an approach to the style of Pacchiarotti. This is possible, if he can be supposed to have painted on the outlines of Peruzzi or Bazzi. The annotators of VASARI, vol. xii., p. 50, declare themselves in favour of Andrea Puccinelli, the regularity and softness of whose work, though not exactly his colour, may be found in the picture we are now considering. There were two brothers Puccinelli, sons of a dancing master at Siena, Andrea, of whose companionship with one Baptista di Fruosino, in 1507, there is a record (Doc. Sen., vol. iii., p. 32). In 1524, however, Andrea is in company with his brother Raffaello, and they both paint a Baptism of Christ for S. Giovanni di Siena, appraised by Beccafumi and another (ibid.). The brothers came to Florence in 1525, Andrea being registered in the Guild of Painters, and Raffaello being mentioned by VASARI, vol. xii., p. 50, as in practice there. The Baptism of Christ still exists in the Pieve of S. Giovanni at Siena. It is reminiscent of the manner of Beccafumi, with more powerful shadows than those in the Virgin, Child, and Saints assigned to the same hand, in the Siena Academy, No. 330, with a predella numbered 331). There is no lack of regularity in the heads, the forms and movement being quieter than one finds them amongst Siennese, and in this respect more in the spirit of the Florentines of the following of Mariotto Albertinelli. The colour, however, is washy, bringing us back to that of Vincenzio Civerchio's creations (one of which with the date of 1525 is at Pallazuolo). The annotators of VASARI, vol. xii., p. 50, register an altarpiece by Andrea, in the Oratorio della Chiocciola, near Siena. There is a Holy Family by him at the Uffizi of Florence. [The Bibiano picture is published by Miss LUCY OLCOTT in the Rassegna d'Arte of April 1904, and it is one of the best of Brescianina's works. On this interesting artist see B. CHAPTER XV

LORENZO DI CREDI

THE review of Umbrian and Sienese art in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries has proved how much was due to the example of Florence. The progress of the Florentines themselves now courts attention.

We have seen Verrocchio concentrate in his own person all the gifts of the sculptor, the painter, and the scientific draughtsman, and conduct the education of Leonardo, Perugino, and Lorenzo di Credi. Our next step shall be, not to dwell upon the life of Da Vinci, which might lead to digressions on the schools of Lombardy, but to sketch that of Credi, who was more constantly connected with the fortunes of his native city.

A diary, curious for its age as well as for the information it contains respecting the habits of a small landed proprietor of Florence in the rise of the fifteenth century, is preserved in the Riccardiana of Florence. It narrates the squabbles and litigation of two farmers; it registers the results of an average year in the purchase of land, the sale of oil and agricultural produce, those of an unsuccessful season, where the landlord is reduced to pawn his "silk lined coat." It gives the prices of various articles in household use between the years 1405 and 1425. The writer of the diary is Oderigo,¹ the grandfather of Lorenzo di Credi, the father of the goldsmith Andrea, in whose house at Florence Lorenzo was born in 1459.² So long as Andrea di Credi lived, his son probably learnt the paternal business, in which he is said to have excelled, studying design at suitable hours in the workshop and in the Brancacci Chapel.³ But when the boy was left in charge of his mother Mona Lisa, he became assistant to Verrocchio. One might suppose that his occupation in the atelier of so renowned a sculptor and goldsmith would principally be the chiselling of metal; but he is described by his mother in a tax-paper of 1480-1 as "employed in painting" with a salary of twelve florins a year;⁴ and this is an additional fact in support of the

³ VASARI, vol. iii., p. 162. He studied later in the Medici Garden, vol. vii., p. 205.

⁴ See the tax-paper in Tavola Alfabetica, ubi sup., ad. litt., where Credi is further stated to have been, in 1480, twenty-one years of age.

statement that Verrocchio indiscriminately practised all the sister arts together.¹

The friendship, which Verrocchio contracted for Credi was only disturbed by his death in 1488. It was testified by the appointment of Lorenzo to the duties of his executor, the legacy of all his marbles and artistic properties at Venice and Florence, and the recommendation of his name to the Doge for the completion of the Colleoni Monument.² To Credi's great honour, he never forgot this kindness, and he remembered the niece of his benefactor in a clause of his will.³

The goodness of the man was not belied in his works, which are confined to the delineation of religious subjects, or to portraits. His honesty and steadiness were reflected in pictures of a finish so elaborate that Vasari could not help exclaiming "such diligence was not more justifiable than excessive neglect";⁴ and his genuine piety found expression in the tender simplicity and melancholy air of virgins and saints.

The companionship of Perugino was calculated to affect his style, which was not without a shade of Umbrian softness; but he was cold and formal as compared with Vannucci, whilst in contrast with Leonardo he was devoid of genius. Under Verrocchio's care he went through a long course of probation, copying either the sketches of the master or those of Leonardo; and this with such patience and industry that Vasari says, you could not tell Lorenzo's imitation from Da Vinci's original. We have seen how difficult it is to distinguish the drawings of the three men from each other;⁵ and inquired whether panels might not exist illustrative of this phase in Credi's career. Repeated examination only seems to confirm the belief that the Virgin and Child between two attendant angels, a beautiful tempera, assigned to Ghirlandaio or Antonio Pollaiuolo, in the National Gallery,⁶ may have been executed in the shop of Verrocchio when Leonardo and Credi were employed there; its tone, its clean precision and staid carefulness of handling, the softness of the heads, and the Leonardesque character of the angels, the Infant Christ stamped in the mould of Credi, all tending to strengthen this impression. Lorenzo, in fact, became completely absorbed in Da Vinci, and was but slightly altered as regards type or cast of drapery by contact with Perugino.

It was, no doubt, a consequence of Credi's peculiar laboriousness in the treatment of oil medium that he remained altogether an easel-painter. He was so anxious to obtain a pure enamel of colour, that he distilled his own oils, ground the earths to an impalpable powder with his own hands, and mixed some thirty shades of various tints on his palette, forbidding his servants to raise dust in his room for fear of soiling them.¹ Proceeding in this way, he polished his surface to the smoothness of metal, and hardly altered it by thin glazing. That in this he only followed Leonardo's example, is capable of proof. A mysterious darkness, it is true, overhangs this period of Da Vinci's history; but taking him at a later time, and looking at the two portraits commonly known as those of Lodovico il Moro and Beatrice d'Este, in the Ambrosiana of Milan, we shall see that they have a smooth brilliancy and slight scumbles in shadow;² and that they are an application by the genius of a great man of the technical system familiar to Credi. At a later period, Leonardo veiled the means by which he finished his surprising creations with an art that almost baffles observation, and he perfected a theory of glazes applied with supreme mastery in the Mona Lisa. But, even were the portraits of the Ambrosiana to be withdrawn as insufficiently authenticated with respect to time, we should still find means of showing that the origin of Credi's method is in Leonardo. The Luini, whom Da Vinci formed, succeed in attaining similar results. Beltraffio might be named in the same class; but Andrea of Milan makes the nearest approach, in a low and cool yellow red flesh tone, to Credi. Leonardo, who becomes impenetrable because he is shrouded in the mantle of technical subtlety, is revealed to us by the uniformity of less distinguished talents in Lorenzo, Beltraffio, and Andrea of Milan, who received his tuition.

After the death of Verrocchio, Lorenzo di Credi held a most respectable position amongst the artists of Florence,³ and on all public occasions when the opinion of experienced men was required to elucidate questions of importance, he and Perugino were invariably to be found together. They were both present at the meeting called in 1491 to deliberate on the completion of the front of S. Maria del Fiore;⁴ they both took part in the discussion upon the mode of restoring the lantern of the cathedral in 1498.¹ They were both consulted (1504) as to the place which Michael Angelo's David should occupy.² They were in company as appraisers of mosaics by Monte and Gherardo in 1505.³ But, whilst Perugino varied his labours by frequent journeys to Perugia and to Rome, Credi remained a constant resident in Florence. It would be difficult, however, to affix a date to any of the pictures which he produced. The casual mention by Albertini of the Madonna and Saints at Sta. M. Maddalena de' Pazzi, now in the Louvre, of a S. Bartholomew in Orsanmichele, and of the great Nativity of S. Chiara at the Academy of Arts in Florence, only prove that they were executed before 1508.⁴ It is not even advisable to attempt a guess as to the period of Credi's portrait of Verrocchio at the Uffizi, because age and old restoring have given a dull and heavy tone to the features.⁵ In Spain, whither copies from Verrocchio and Da Vinci were sent,⁶ none of the so-called Leonardos are in Credi's manner; nor is Lorenzo's name correctly applied in the cathedrals of Burgos or Granada.

The finest and the oldest of his altarpieces is that of the Cappella del SS. Sacramento in the Duomo of Pistoia, where the Virgin sits with the Babe in a marble court, attended by S. John the Baptist and a canonised bishop. As Credi probably finished it whilst the examples and lessons of his youth were still vivid in his mind, the figures generally are natural and firm of tread, and strongly reminiscent of Da Vinci, the fresh round face of the Virgin, and the graceful combination of her movement with that of the Child being an unconscious tribute to the memory of Vannucci. A landscape, seen through the apertures behind the throne, is full of pleasing detail. The clean sharpness of metal is given to minutiae; the drawing is careful, the proportions are fair; relief and perspective are good, and the colour, of a silver grey, is polished, harmonious, and greatly fused. The naked Child, turning towards the Baptist, who points out the Virgin to her worshippers, is coarse in the extremities, but not too pinguid.⁷ It is doubtful whether Credi preserved this superiority in the Virgin, Child, and Saints of S. Maria delle Grazie at Pistoia, which now appears so dimmed and spotty.¹ Had he always remained up to his first mark, he would have held a higher place in the annals of Florentine art.

There is, indeed, but one instance in which he was equally successful ; and that is in the Madonna of the Museum of Mayence, where a pleasing youthfulness adorns the face of the Virgin, and unusual beauty marks the Child, as He turns from His mother's breast. But the charm is increased by the feeling and truth with which form is given, by the able rounding obtained by the fusion of a yellowish flesh tone into brownish shadows, and by the tasteful application and high finish of borders and festoons of flowers.² In the Holy Family of the Palazzo Borghese at Rome, Credi shows less strength, but he animates the elegant Virgin, the playful Infant Christ, and the worshipping boy Baptist with a breath of love and tenderness. He composes the group in the Leonardesque fashion, and gives to the nude of the children some of the puffiness which he exaggerated at a later time.³ All these examples illustrate the character, as well as the style, of Credi. He was of a class which took the name of "piagnoni" at Florence, because it agreed with the theory of Savonarola, that everything profane was reprehensible ; and Vasari tells us that when the reforming Dominican ordered a holocaust of literary, artistic, and fanciful works at the Carnival of 1497 in Florence, Credi was one of those who sacrificed all that did not savour in his drawings of the purest religion.⁴ Yet Credi was not of a temper to surrender the world altogether as Fra Bartolommeo had done, nor were his sympathies enlisted in any special manner with the Dominicans ;

In the same Gallery, No. 125 [?], round of the Holy Family, much repainted, but with the impress of Lorenzo's school.

Carlsruhe Gallery [No. 409]. Round of the Infant Christ adored by the kneeling Virgin and young Baptist ; the stable to the left ; a landscape to the right and left. Hair and shadow of neck in the Virgin, white cushion on which the Infant rests, the Baptist's knee, restored (wood, oil). This is an original by Credi, but not equal to that of Mayence.

³ The slender Virgin is very graceful, supporting the Child on her lap who leans forward as if to speak with the infant Baptist. She also encircles his neck with her hand. He looks on in prayer ; and an open book to the right indicates the seventh chapter of Isaiah : "Behold a Virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." The drawing, forms, and drapery are of Credi's earlier period, when his style was most redolent of the influence of Da Vinci and Verrocchio (wood, oil, round). To the left a vase, and through two windows, a landscape view.

and when the convent of S. Marco quarrelled, in 1507, with Bernardo del Bianco about the price of Fra Bartolommeo's Vision of S. Bernard, Credi was one of the umpires for the purchaser in conjunction with Gherardo, the miniaturist.¹

As years rolled on, and the impressions of his youth became weaker in Credi, he lost some of his early strength in excessive attention to manipulation. The Baptism of Christ of the Company del Scalzo, affords an indication of this change, being less satisfactory in the nude, stiffer in movements, and more mannered in form than previous specimens of his skill, though still firmly drawn and highly enamelled, and redolent to a certain extent of Verrocchio's teaching.² Still more polished, but perhaps more affected in its softness, is the wonderfully clean and cold Madonna with the Child, between SS. Julian and Nicholas, at the Louvre, in which excessive daintiness of attitude and tread, gaudiness of key, and slight chiaroscuro are symptoms of loss of power.³ But the most important specimen of Credi in this period of his career is the Nativity at the Academy of Arts in Florence.⁴ Whereas in the Madonna of the Pistoia cathedral the nude is drawn with the anatomical research natural to a fellow-student of Da Vinci, that of the Nativity only reminds us of Leonardo's pupils. There is something resembling the spirit of Luini, in contours which avoid marking bone and muscle, and in the low tones of flesh and drapery. Yet the harmony is good, the handling careful, the drapery well arranged; and the minuteness of the charming landscape is equalled by that of the foreground of rock and grasses. Credi has not left a better instance of the striving in an artist of the sixteenth century to embody religious sentiment. He succeeds in rendering a grave and timid melancholy, and prettily surrounds the Virgin with a guard of angels in whispering converse. A tender and half-sorrowing affection is in the Virgin, on her knees before the Child, and the action of both seems inspired from Fra Filippo rather than from any other master. The shepherds also might presuppose the study of Ghirlandaio by a later painter of a less rugged fibre. The Baptist is drawn with the soft outlines of Luini, and the S. Joseph is Peruginesque in air and pose.

During the later period of his life, Lorenzo's productions preserved an uniformity which leaves little room for fresh remark. His frequent employment as a restorer of old pictures is a proof of the confidence that was placed in his experience.¹ The honourable station which he held led to his appointment on many occasions as valuer of pictures by other masters.² He outlived the terrors of the siege of Florence in 1527, retired into the hospital of S. The following list is a necessary addition :—

Florence. Orsanmichele.—S. Bartholomew on a pilaster, very much clouded by dirt. (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 204; ALBERTINI, Mem., p. 14; and RICHA, Chiese, vol. i., p. 26.)⁵

Florence. Sta. Maria del Fiore (Sacristy of the canons).—Figure of the Archangel Michael, executed about 1523; feeble and of a reddish tone. (VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 206, 210.)

Same Church. Chapel in Tribuna della Croce.—Figure of S. Joseph, weak and much injured; wood, oil. (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 205.)⁶

Florence. Uffizi.—[No. 1311] Magdalen at the feet of Christ; [No. 1168] Virgin and S. John mourning; wood, oil; both genuine. [No. 1217] Bust likeness of a youth supposed to be Alessandro Braccesi (?), of an olive tone, but injured by restoring; wood, oil. [No. 1287] Round of the Holy Family, Leonardesque in arrangement, and soft, but somewhat poor, owing to absence of the requisite relief; wood, oil, figures half life-size. [No. 24] Round of the Virgin adoring the Child, attended by an angel; rubbed down, but in the character of Credi; wood, oil, figures half life-size. [No. 1160] Annunciation, with three subjects in dead colour below—ex. gr., the Creation of Eve, the Original Sin, and the Expulsion; wood, oil, small figure; genuine. [No. 1314] Annunciation; wood, oil, genuine. [No. 1313] The Saviour appears to the Magdalen as the gardener; wood, oil, small figures, very pretty and careful. (See the replica, almost equally good, at the Louvre, postea.)⁷

Florence. Pitti. [No. 354] Holy Family; wood, oil, round, reminiscent of Credi in composition and manner, but of a hard, low tinge of colour. Something in it reminds one of Piero di Cosimo, but it seems of Credi's school, yet the painter is not Sogliani, nor is it Michele di Ridolfo, both of whom were Credi's pupils (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 207; vol. ix., p. 62, and xi., p. 294). But we know nothing of other disciples, Tommaso di Stefano, Gian Jacopo di Castrocaro (registered in 1525 in the Florentine Guild, GUALANDI, ser. vi.), Antonio del Ceraiuolo (VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 204, 207, and vol. xi., p. 132; and GUALANDI, Memorie, ser. vi., p. 176, and following), or Giovanni di Benedetto Cianfanini, recorded as part author of the S. Michael in S. M. del Fiore (Annot. VASARI, vol. viii., p. 206). A picture of the same class is that of the Borghese Gallery (postea).

Florence. Academy of Arts.—[No. 94] Originally in the SS. Annunziata de' Servi. Nativity. Genuine; wood, oil.

Castiglione Fiorentino. Collegiate Church (Chapel to the right of the choir).—Nativity; wood, oil, life-size figures. Vasari speaks of a tavola that was sent to Castiglione by Francesco, canon of S. Maria del Fiore. It may be the piece here noticed (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 208). The Virgin kneels to the right before the penthouse, the Child on straw on the ground, with S. Joseph on his knees to the left. This is genuine, neatly arranged, pretty, but a little feeble withal.

Rome. Galleria Borghese.—No. 54. Round of the Nativity, i.e. the Infant on the ground between the kneeling Virgin and S. Joseph; wood, oil. This suggests the same reflections as the Holy Family at the Pitti [No. 354].¹

Venice. Academy.—No. 254. Round of the Holy Family, once in the Manfrini collection; wood, oil. See, postea, "Raffaellino del Garbo."

Turin. Museum.—Lately bequeathed by the Barollo Family. [No. 356] The Virgin offers a bunch of grapes to the Infant, naked on her lap; on a window sill a vase of flowers, and through the opening a landscape. This is a scene of pleasing maternal affection, by Credi in his good period; a mixture of the schools of Leonardo, Verrocchio, and Botticelli, ex. gr. as regards types; wood, oil, figures half life-size. Colour, of good impasto. [No. 103] Virgin and Child; wood, oil, later in date than the foregoing, and not so fine, but still graceful. The Virgin's head scaled.

Forlì. Galleria Comunale.—[No. 130] Female portrait, three-quarters to the right, originally fine, in Florentine dress, Leonardesque, noble, and high bred, said to be Catherine Sforza (?) greatly injured by restoring, especially in the flesh parts; wood, oil. In one hand a flower, the other resting on a vase.

Naples. Museum.—[No. 27] Nativity, the Child on the ground between the kneeling Virgin and S. Joseph, two angels attending; wood, oil, genuine.

Munich. Pinakothek.—S. No. 553. Round of the Nativity, almost a replica (reversed) of No. 1287 at the Uffizi; wood, oil, all but life-size; fine but somewhat abraded, and consequently cold.

Schleissheim. Gallery.—No. 1144. Virgin and Child in Credi's manner, but repainted. No. 1138. Same subject, with Massacre of the Innocents in distance, by some German painter of the sixteenth century.

Berlin. Museum.—[No. 103] Magdalen Penitent, once in S. Chiara of Florence (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 205); wood, figure life-size, a good example

¹ [MORELLI also gives this to an unknown follower of Credi (Della Pittura Italiana, p. 85). of the master. [No. 100] Nativity; wood, genuine. [Nos. 89] Nativity, and [92] Adoration of the Kings, less attractive and perhaps school-pieces.

Dresden. Gallery.—No. 34, The Virgin, with the Infant kissing the young Baptist (small), not by Credi, but by a third-class follower of Botticelli and Filippino.

Altenburg. Lindenau Gallery.—Wood, tempera, renewed in oil. Virgin adorning the Child. School of Botticelli.

Lowre. [No. 1264] Christ appearing to the Magdalen, weaker replica of that of the Uffizi (see antea), original, but abraded. No. 219, Annunciation, same character. Nos. 220, 221, of the school.

London.—National Gallery.—[No. 593] Virgin and Child; wood. [No. 648] The Virgin adorning the Infant Christ, wood, formerly in Northwick Gallery. These are good, genuine, and well-preserved pictures.

London. Mr. Barker's Collection.—1. Virgin and Child in an interior, with a distance seen through windows; the Virgin offers a pomegranate to the child. Genuine and good. 2. Figure of a saint with a banner and shield, all but life-size; authentic but not of Credi's best. 3. Virgin and Child, the young Baptist kneeling to the left, fine and original. 4. The Virgin and Child between S. Sebastian and John the Baptist, life-size, good, and by the master, but a little rubbed and retouched. 5. Round of the Virgin, Child, and Baptist, one third of the life-size, by Credi, but weakened perhaps by cleaning and retouching. All on wood, in oil.

London. Lord Overstone.—Small altarpiece, arched at top, with the Coronation of the Virgin in the upper part, two erect and two kneeling saints in a landscape below, and Christ in the tomb between SS. Francis and Anthony. This was formerly in the Rogers collection; very delicate and careful; wood.

London. Marquis of Westminster.—No. 95 at Manchester. Small Coronation of the Virgin by a Florentine following Credi's manner; wood.

Oxford. Gallery.—Wood. A feeble Virgin and Child; of the school.¹

Liverpool Institution.—No. 25. Virgin suckling the Child in a landscape (wood, small), formerly attributed to Ghirlandaio, but a school-piece from Credi's atelier, injured.²

many years before venturing on the enjoyment of his own independence. But, whereas Credi had the advantage of learning from Verrocchio and Da Vinci, Del Garbo owed his education to the looser teaching of Filippino Lippi. He was Credi's junior by a few years, having been christened Raffaellino (di Bartolommeo, di Giovanni, di Niccolò Capponi) in 1466; and he remained with Filippino till at least 1490.¹ A taxpayer of 1498 exists in which he is described as living in the Popolo di Sta. Lucia sopr' Arno, with a shop in the Popolo di Sta. Maria del Fiore, his income nil, his debts fortunately the same.² It is said that his youth gave promise of talents; that Filippino considered him in many things superior to himself, and that the ceiling of the Caraffa Chapel in Sta. Maria sopra Minerva at Rome was admired by every artist of the time for the beauty of its finish. Accepting this flattering picture of Raffaellino's youth on the authority of Vasari, we are bound also to admit that his manhood was marked by unexpected mediocrity.³

The recent discovery of records, proving Raffaellino's descent from Niccolò Capponi, might connect him with the authorship of a Madonna and Saints in the hospital of Sta. Maria Nuova of Florence, dated 1500, and signed Raphael de Caponibus.⁴ Taken in connection with a second, of 1502, at Sta. Maria degli Angeli in Siena by "Raphael de Florentia,"⁵ and a third of S. Spirito of Florence, dated 1505,⁶ this picture has already been cited as a mixed Florentine and Umbrian creation, different from those usually attributed to Raffaellino. If it should appear that Del Garbo and the authors of these three Madonnas are one person, we have a specimen of the manner in which artist-journeymen assumed a different style as they passed from one school to another, and thus almost defy identification.¹ A series of frescoes in the sisterhood of S. Giorgio at Florence, dated 1504, would have been a guide in this uncertainty, being the only inscribed paintings to which history alludes.² In their absence we must fall back upon such panels as Vasari mentions.³ It cannot be denied that the incidents depicted in S. Martino de' Buonomini at Florence are sufficiently like the work of a pupil in Filippino's shop to warrant assigning them to Raffaellino,⁴ but apart from these, the master's productions are abundant enough for a sure selection. Claustal rules exclude visitors from the refectory of Sta. M. Maddalena de' Pazzi at Florence, where a fresco of Christ distributing the loaves and fishes covers one of the principal walls,⁵ but the figures of SS. Ignatius and Roch at the sides of the statue of S. Sebastian in a chapel of the same convent, sufficiently testify that Del Garbo could languidly follow the manner of Filippino.⁶ Affectation in forms, mannerism in drawing, and flatness of tempera are equally characteristic in this as in the more graceful Angel and Virgin Annunciate flanking a Giottesque S. Lucy in S. Lucia de' Bardi.⁷

In the left transept of S. Spirito at Florence, a Trinity, adored by the kneeling SS. Catherine and Mary Magdalen, is a carefully handled and gay specimen of the same art, with a tendency in Raffaellino to lengthen the proportions of the human frame. There are also some pretty things in the predella, representing the Nativity between the Communion of S. Mary of Egypt and the Martyrdom of the Alexandrian saint.⁸ But Raffaellino appears to most advantage in the Gallery of Berlin, where one of his most important altarpieces, and two cabinet pictures are preserved. The first of these, a Virgin and Child attended by angels, cherubs, and four saints, is a clear and brilliant tempera executed with great precision in the manner of Filippino and Fra Filippo, but still displaying the slender forms, the affected movement and expression of Del Garbo;⁹ the second, a Madonna with the Child, and the Baptist accompanied by angels, between SS. Sebastian and Andrew, is as good ;¹ the third, an erect Virgin and Child between two angels in a landscape, is the best of the three. The tenderest maternal fondness is imparted to the mother, whose cheek rests on the curly head of the Saviour asleep on her bosom. There is something almost Raphaelesque in the conception of the group. The melancholy of the Virgin's face, the flexibility in her attitude of rest, are very winning. The drawing is correct, and the draperies well cast. A happy thought is that of making the angel to the right pause in sounding the pipes that the Child may sleep and be undisturbed. The other angel is less successful, being a little forced, affected, and absent in look, and thus unconnected in a certain measure with the scene. His pose, as well as his playing, form a discord in the harmony. But for this, the result would be better. Yet as a whole the panel is one of the most pleasant by Raffaellino, very conscientious, and cleverly touched, and full of freshness in every part.²

In a round of the Virgin and Child between SS. Jerome and Francis at Dresden, Raffaellino has expended less application³ than in those of the Berlin Museum. But the Coronation of the Virgin, once in S. Salvi of Florence, and now in the Louvre, is a first-class altarpiece which would completely illustrate the relation of Del Garbo to his master if time and restoring had not dimmed and injured the surface. Yet the large size of the figures still demonstrates his inferiority in the technica, and in the overstudied grace which robs his personages of natural charms in form, expression, or movement.⁴

Without extending an examination which cannot bring out new features in Raffaellino, it may be sufficient to register his pictures at Florence, on the Continent, and elsewhere, and to note that towards the close of his days he was reduced to great penuriousness, and sold the proceeds of his labour at low prices. He died infirm and poor, in 1524, and was buried in S. Simone at Florence by the charitable care of the Company of Mercy.⁵

⁵ VASARI, vol. vii., p. 196, and Tav. Alfab., ubi sup. [This is Vasari's story, but, as I have said, Vasari mixed Del Garbo up with Carli. Nothing of Del Garbo's later than 1505 is known to be extant.]

Florence. S. Ambrogio.—To the left of the entrance, the arched upper border surrounding a statue of S. Sebastian contains two angels in monochrome; and a medallion at the base encloses an Annunciation in Raffaellino's manner. On the second altar to the right (S. Ambrogio) is also a S. Antony in Majesty between S. Nicholas, and the Angel and Tobit, of the same class, but repainted.¹

Florence. Academy of Arts [No. 90].—Originally in Monte Oliveto, wood, oil, figures half life-size. Subject, the Resurrection. Vasari's praise here is excessive (vol. vii., p. 191). We are dealing, as before, with a dwarfed Filippino. The paltry character of the shapes reminds one of the Resurrection under the name of the Ghirlandai in the Berlin Museum (No. 75). The Redeemer rises from the sepulchre, and the cover has fallen on one of the guards. A soldier on the left gets on his legs in terror. Another runs away to the right with a knife in his hand. Both are grimacing. The figures in action are less successful than the Redeemer and the men asleep about the tomb. The colour, being hatched in shadows, seems handled like tempera, but remains careful and precise, though a little raw, and sharp in contrasts. Serpentine drapery is another prominent defect. The landscape of town, ruins, rocks, and trees is rather green.²

Florence. Uffizi. Corridor. No. 35.—Round, wood. Injured Holy Family, composed in a mode reminiscent of Raphael, assigned in the Catalogue to Raffaellino, but of the class suggested by his name and that of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio.

Venice. Academy. No. 254.—Once in the Manfrini Gallery. Round (wood) of the Holy Family, called Credi, well arranged, but scaled and retouched all over—probably by Raffaellino.³

Naples. Museum. [Sala Romana, No. 15].—Round, wood, oil. The Virgin gives a pomegranate to the Infant, who turns towards the young Baptist. Feeble, raw and hard, and overladen with ornament. Of Raffaellino's school by a later hand.⁴

London. Mr. Fuller Maitland.—Altarpiece, Virgin and Child, between SS. John Evangelist, Justus, Julian, and Catherine (wood, life-size, grounds regilt). Greatly damaged by restoring, but still exhibiting the style of Del Garbo when young, and recently out of the school of Filippino.⁵

London. Sir Charles Eastlake.—Virgin with the Child on her lap opening a pomegranate (kneepiece). The Baptist, seen to the waist, looks on. A vase and book are on a parapet in front, a landscape behind (wood, small). A graceful tempera of much softness and feeling, carefully finished, and of a clear, bright tone.

London. Mr. Barker.—From the Rogers and Bromley Collections. Catalogued as Verrocchio and then as Pollaiuolo (see antea, vol. ii., p. 413). Profile bust of a lady in a gold head-dress, a good likeness by Del Garbo.⁶

the left, two kneeling angels (wood, figures third of life). Not by Raffaellino, but a Florentine disciple of Michele di Ridolfo or Mariano da Pescia.¹

Mayence. Museum. No. 129.—Described “manner of Ghirlandaio.” Virgin erect, the Child turning the leaves of a book on a marble table (wood, figures one-third life-size). In Raffaellino’s style.²

Missing pieces may be registered as follows:—Florence, tabernacle at the corner of the Ponte alla Carraia and Canto alla Cuculia (VASARI, vol. vii., p. 192). Villa of Marignolle: two tavole (ibid.). S. Spirito, Pietà: Vision of S. Bernard (as regards the latter see antea, p. 255), and Virgin, Child, SS. Jerome and Bartholomew (ibid. pp. 192–3). S. Pier Maggiore: Virgin, Child, and SS. Gio. Gualberto and Francis (ibid. p. 194, and RICHIA, Chiese, vol. i., p. 141). Murate: S. Sigismund (VASARI, vol. vii., p. 194). S. Pancrazio: fresco of the Nativity (ibid.); Ponte a Rubaconte Chapel (ibid., p. 195). Chiesa dell’ Arcangelo Raffaello: Virgin and Child (RICHIA, Chiese, vol. i., p. 167, and vol. ix., p. 129).³

The life of Piero di Cosimo, the contemporary of Credi and Raffaellino, affords Vasari matter for an amusing and perhaps overdrawn sketch of character.

Piero is said in his youth to have been industrious and clever, but absent, solitary, and given to castle-building. At a later period, he became a misanthrope; would not admit any one to his room either

MR. BERENSON was the first to differentiate precisely between Del Garbo and Carli. To the latter he assigns some forty-eight pieces (see Florentine Painters (1909), pp. 127–9. Del Garbo he regards as a pupil of Botticelli and Filippino Lippi, influenced by Ghirlandaio and Perugino. Carli (or Crolì), on the other hand, he tells us, “started under the influence of Ghirlandaio and Credi, and later became almost Umbrian, and at one time was in close contact with Del Garbo, whom he may have assisted.” Perhaps Carli’s masterpiece is the fine altarpiece I reproduce from the Collection of Mrs. Ross, at Poggio Gherardo, Settignano, near Florence.]

to clean it or to see his pictures ; never had a regular meal, but, if hungry, ate of hard eggs which he cooked half a hundred at a time. He was an enemy to all artificial cultivation of men as well as of plants. His eccentricities increased with age, so that in his latter days he was querulous and intolerant, subject to fits of fright if he heard the distant growl of thunder, impatient of ordinary noises, such as the crying of children, the coughing of men, ringing of bells, chanting of friars, and buzzing of flies. During a paralysis which made his last hours burdensome, he would inveigh against all doctors, apothecaries, and nurses, suspecting them of starving their patients ; and he was heard to contrast the melancholy nature of death by prolonged sickness with the happy and speedy one of the criminal who goes to his end in fresh air, surrounded by the sympathy and comforted by the prayers of the people.¹

Piero's life, however, has a much higher interest for the historian than that which may be created by the narrative of his foibles. He was the elder companion of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto Albertinelli, in the atelier of Cosimo Rosselli ; and the master of Andrea of Sarto.

The income-paper of his father, Lorenzo di Piero, drawn up in 1480, enables us to correct Vasari's chronology, and describes Piero as born in 1462, and as an assistant without pay in the shop of Cosimo Rosselli.² Cosimo, having about this time been called to Rome by orders from Sixtus IV., was accompanied by Piero, who helped him in the portraits and landscapes of his frescoes.³ In February, 1485, Rosselli had returned to Florence, and was in the employ of the nuns of S. Ambrogio with the future Fra Bartolommeo, a mere child, as apprentice.⁴

It is not improbable that Piero was then chief journeyman to Cosimo, for Vasari leads us to believe that the connection lasted till Rosselli's death (1506) ; and Piero, at all events, continued the art of his teacher.⁵ He may therefore be considered as partner in the authorship of several altarpieces in S. Spirito at Florence, in which the styles of Ghirlandaio and Filippino are mingled with that of Cosimo Rosselli,⁶ in a Virgin and Saints at S. Ambrogio,¹ and in a Virgin and Child at S. Agostino of Lucca, attributed to Zacchia.² The last mentioned picture is in truth so like Piero's own in raw tinge of red colour and in aspect of figures, that little doubt can be entertained as to its genuineness. With regard to the period of execution, as in respect of dates connected with the actions and creations of Piero, the scantiest intelligence exists. So vague indeed is the prospect that a concrete shape can only be given to Piero's performances by registering a number of them in succession, the sequence of which may be guessed at, according as the technical system points to material progress or to the lapse of intervals of time.

An important, though hitherto unnoticed production in a solitary church of the Casentino, may under these circumstances repay attention. The subject is the Virgin and Child enthroned in a landscape between the erect SS. Peter and Paul, and the kneeling Jerome and Francis. The place is the high altar of S. Pietro al Terreno, near Figline. Whilst on the one hand we recognise the influence of Cosimo Rosselli's atelier, and chiefly the system of Piero di Cosimo in the general appearance of the panel, we are reminded on the other of Mariotto's or Bartolommeo's early efforts by the superior character of the S. Francis, and the light gay tone and spring-freshness of the landscape. It is possible that two hands should have been put on to hasten the completion of the piece, and that one of them should be the future Dominican; possible also that Piero di Cosimo did it unassisted, having already taken some distinct peculiarities from his younger school-companion. Be this as it may, the Madonna of S. Pietro al Terreno is dryly and firmly touched in oil at one painting, with rawish low flesh tones shadowed in opaque olive brown, and draperies of vitreous and sharp tints. A Leonardesque element is observable in the air and slender neck of the Virgin, and in the puffy forms of the Infant. Without absolute lack of feeling, most of the saints are incorrectly drawn, short, bony, and not free from vulgarity. The dresses are double in stuff and overlaid with complicated folds. The author, according to local belief, is Ridolfo Ghirlandaio; but the stamp and handling are less his than those of Granacci, albeit the latter is more Michaelangelesque. What speaks most in favour of Piero di Cosimo is the likeness between this and another Virgin amongst saints

2. Same church, 30th chapel, in left transept, Virgin and Child with two angels between SS. Bartholomew and Nicholas of Bari, and two kneeling friars (according to FANTOZZI, ubi sup., by A. Pollaiuolo), pale and dim in tone. 3. Same church, 25th chapel, in left transept, Virgin, Child, and two angels, between SS. Bartholomew and John Evangelist (manner of Botticelli, says Fantozzi). On the step of the throne a Crucifixion. The two latter not so good as the first. [There is nothing in S. Spirito by Piero di Cosimo. The works named are by Carli; see supra.]

at the Uffizi,¹ described by Vasari at the altar of the Tedaldi in the SS. Annunziata de' Servi. The Madonna on a pedestal looks up to the Dove with a movement in the spirit of Fra Bartolommeo, and true to the principles of high art. S. John Evangelist, erect on the left, is a counterpart of the S. Peter at S. Pietro al Torreno. In each of the dramatis personæ, curt proportion, heavy bone, and coarse extremities are noticeable, and the colouring is abruptly contrasted and unmellow. The execution is related to Credi's, but has more roughness and strength, and a darker key of shadow. It would show that Piero tried to rival Credi in the enamel of his surface, without his patience and by the copious use of more liquid colours. Hence the crystalline or amber lucidity, ex. gr., of the fine bust portrait at the Uffizi, recently catalogued under Piero's name, where the ruddy and smooth impasto is veiled with the thinnest sort of glaze, and recalls Del Sarto, Ridolfo, and Granacci.² Hence also the polish of his Madonna amongst saints in the sacristy of the Innocenti at Florence, one of his best altarpieces, yet one in which his defects are prominent in combination with a certain imitation or rather exaggeration of the types of Filippino.³ We might follow this vein in Piero further, citing, at Florence, a small S. Catherine in the Lombardi Gallery,⁴ a fragment of a Holy Family in the Piansciaticchi Collection,⁵ and at the Louvre,⁶ a Coronation of the Virgin of more than usual feebleness. Piero, however, did not confine himself to holy subjects. He treated with evident pleasure such portions of classic fable as might enable him to display the study of animal life in natural or fantastic shapes, or that of recondite costume or ornament.⁷ He seldom neglected an occasion of exhibiting himself in this light, as in the lost predella of the Madonna at the Servi, where S. Margaret was to be seen issuing from the belly of the serpent;⁸ but he most frequently dealt with such themes in the decoration of cars for festivals, in suites of rooms, in single panels, or in the accessories to mythological incidents,⁹ his model in this, as well as in the application of novelties in the manipulation of oils and mediums, being Leonardo da Vinci, whose genius and versatility were envied by all his contemporaries, and whose influence was so extraordinary that it is difficult to treat of any painter of his time without mentioning his name.

Examples of this phase in Piero are scarce; but his fancy is fairly illustrated in the Wedding of Perseus disturbed,¹ the Sacrifice to Jove for the safety of Andromeda,² and the two rescues of Andromeda,³ in the Uffizi, in which the compositions are rich in episodes and action, in strange dresses, panoplies, and other naturalistic details, but where also the figures are somewhat affected, paltry, and pinched. Nor is the technical handling constantly the same. Instead of colour in strata, of strong lucid impasto, instead of abrupt contrasts of key, with firm lines of demarcation in dresses, the tones are all fused vaguely into each other, so that a gaudy and glossy mist overspreads the surfaces. The landscapes, however, remain rich and precise in minutiae, as if by a Ferrarese, without atmosphere, though in harmony as regards tint with the rest of the work. One might suppose that as Piero grew old he was tempted to follow in the footsteps of his own pupil Andrea del Sarto; and that his cloudiness of contours had its origin in that way.

But his mythological pictures have not invariably the character of those we have been considering. The Death of Procris in the National Gallery⁴ is free from exaggeration of fancy. It is a half tempera of low key in flesh tone, done with ease, fairly select in forms, and chastened in drawing, superior in every respect to the Venus and Mars,⁵ or to the earlier Meeting of Christ and the Baptist, in the Gallery of Berlin.⁶

Vasari alone authorises us to believe that Piero di Cosimo died in 1521.⁷

CHAPTER XVI

FRA BARTOLOMMEO DELLA PORTA

FRA BARTOLOMMEO, who was called Bartolommeo di Pagholo del Fattorino, before he joined the Dominican Order, was apprenticed to Cosimo Rosselli. His uncles, Jacopo and Giusto di Jacopo, settled in 1469-70 at Suffignano, a village near Florence, and lived there as agricultural labourers; his father Pagholo pursuing the restless calling of a muleteer.¹

Towards the close of 1478, Pagholo settled at Florence, having saved a small competence, with which he bought a house and garden in S. Pier' Gattolino.²

The two mules, which had contributed to his fortune found a gentle repose in the stables of the new home, whilst their master improved his condition in the business of a carrier.

Bartolommeo, who was to become celebrated in the annals of Florentine art, was three years old when these events occurred, and in 1480 was the eldest of four children.³ No doubt the question speedily

¹ These facts are made clear from the Portate al Catasto of Giusto in 1469 and 1487, from which, as well as from that of Paolo (1480-1), we take the following genealogy:—

Piero begets Jacopo. Jacopo, by his second wife Margareta, b. 1499, begets Paolo, b. 1418, married to Andrea, b. 1448, died 1487; and Giusto, b. 1433; and Jacopo, b. 1435, married Maddalena, b. 1445. Paolo, muleteer, begets: Bartolommeo, b. 1475, died 1517; Piero, afterwards a priest, b. 1477; Domenico, b. 1479, d. 1486; and Michele, b. 1480 (favoured by MILANESI). VASARI is therefore wrong in stating that Fra Bartolommeo was born at Savignano (vol. vii., p. 171), in which place no trace of the family can be discovered; and it is more likely that he was of Suffignano, where his uncles lived.

"Anno 1478, die octava Sept. Andreas quondam Gabriellis Vichi, populi S. Petri in Selva de Castiglia, pro se atque suis heredibus dedit, vendidit, Paulo Jacobi Pieri vecturali, populi sancti felicitis in platea ementi pro se atque suis heredibus, unam domum cum palchis salis, cameris, et horto, puteo, trogolo, &c., positam Florentie in populo S. Petri in Gattolino, cum a primo via, &c., pro pretio et nomine pretij florenor. auri centum quinquaginta novem et medium unius floreni" (favoured by GAETANO MILANESI).

arose, what was to be done with the boys, particularly as Pagholo at the time was of an age above threescore. Benedetto da Maiano, the sculptor, who was consulted on this point, suggested that little Bacchio, for so the name was shortened, should be bound to Cosimo Rosselli.¹ The suggestion was favourably received, and the child entered on his duties in 1484.

Rosselli's occupation chiefly took him then to the convent of S. Ambrogio at Florence; and his assistant was the absent and eccentric Piero di Cosimo. Without being the best of Florentine artists, his known integrity and respectability insured to him considerable practice; and his school afforded the same advantages to beginners as that of a greater man. To grind colours, sweep the workshop, and run errands was the course which Baccio, like others, was obliged by custom to follow.

Baccio's honesty soon won him the full confidence of his superior, and he was often the link of communication between Cosimo and the nuns of S. Ambrogio, from whom he received the pay of his master.² Nor is it unlikely that early familiarity with convents and the solemn silence of churches was of influence in preparing his timid mind³ for the retirement into which he subsequently withdrew. Amongst the property left behind by Benedetto, we find the following list of books, interesting because it tells us what literature artists usually consulted: the Bible, the Divina Commedia, the "Vangeli e Fioretti" of S. Mariotto Albertinelli, resorted to the Garden of the Medici, in which the old sculptor Bertoldo preserved but scant discipline, and where broken noses and black eyes were to be had without the asking, Baccio sought the more carefully guarded stillness of the Carmine,¹ and preferred Masaccio and Filippino to classic bas-reliefs and statues. Yet his amiable disposition did not repel the friendship of his school-fellows, and we are assured that Baccio and Mariotto were "one body and one soul."² Whatever, indeed, might have been their difference of humour and of character, the two students were united to each other by companionship, by a similar age, and by common pursuits. They had before them the examples of Giotto, Orcagna, Masaccio, and Ghirlandaio in the past; those of Michael Angelo and Leonardo in the present. With those of Raphael they were soon to make acquaintance; and these were incentives to progress too strong to fail of their effect. Baccio, thanks to industry and heart, attained to a grandeur nearly approaching that of Buonarroti. He almost equalled Sanzio in decorous composition; Leonardo was his teacher as regards the technica of colour,³ and if he was not absolutely on the level of any one of them, he was so close as to be necessarily counted a great genius by their side.

The first misfortune which befell him was the loss of his brother Domenico in 1486,⁴ an event melancholy in itself, but perhaps not seriously felt by the elastic nerves of a child. A more serious blow was the death of his father, which occurred in the following year, leaving Baccio in charge to his mother, who was not destined long to survive.⁵ Under these altered conditions it is probable that the family circle grew dearer to him, and that he frequented it with unwonted assiduity. From that time also he, no doubt, became known as Baccio della Porta from the vicinity of the maternal dwelling to the gate of S. Pier' Gattolino;⁶ and it was natural that he and Albertinelli should often retire there together in the evenings after their work, and spend the hours before sleep in eager and confidential converse.

The produce of their industry in Rosselli's shop was of such a kind, that if it were to be found at all, it would be under Rosselli's name, and display his impress or that of Piero di Cosimo.⁷ It would be presuming even to base any theory as to Baccio's early style on the examination of the Madonna with Saints at S. Pietro al Terreno, to which reference has been made. The feeling, character, landscape, and handling of the panel are indeed reminiscent of the manner which we shall have occasion to acknowledge as that of Fra Bartolommeo, but, we have said, Piero di Cosimo might have painted it either under a lucky momentary impulse which carried him forward with the art of his time, or inspired by Fra Bartolommeo himself.¹

We cannot assume that Baccio and Mariotto were partners before 1490 in the house of Paolo del Fattorino.² Both would then have passed the term imposed upon them by their articles of apprenticeship, and Baccio would have sufficient means at his disposal to make him careless of a journeyman's salary. Such, we believe, were the circumstances under which the friends started in their profession. But at the very outset the germs of a future separation might be discerned. Mariotto attracted the attention of one of the Medici in the "Garden;"³ and Baccio was soon to be struck by the reforming fury of Fra Savonarola. The youths were therefore taking opposite sides without being aware of it. For the first time in Lent of 1495, the Dominican friar began to preach openly in the Duomo in condemnation of the lasciviousness of the Florentines, and required the burning or destruction of immodest figures. His eloquence secured him audiences as numerous as those which of old listened to the public commentators on the Divina Commedia; ⁴ and as he thundered anathema from his pulpit against the profane spirit of the age, he roused the fervour and the sneers of the multitude.

Whilst Baccio admitted the truth of the principles exposed by Savonarola, Mariotto inveighed against the religious orders in general and the Dominicans in particular.⁵ But, in spite of this divergence, they remained on good terms, even after Baccio had become the devoted adherent of Savonarola. It was not, as some assert, the opinion of the latter that art should be forbidden altogether. On the contrary, he thought that its exercise was a profitable occupation for monks; and he was ambitious of introducing it as far as possible into his monastery for purposes of revenue. His persuasion induced miniaturists, painters, and sculptors to join the Dominicans—Fra Filippo Lapaceini (1492), Fra Benedette (1495), Fra Eustachio (1496), Fra Agostino di Paolo, and Fra Ambrogio della Robbia (1495); ⁶ and he was wont to say that, independence being better than mendicancy for an order claiming to preach the truth, it was but foresight to lay the foundations of a better financial condition.¹ His own portrait was done in terra-cotta perhaps by Ambrogio della Robbia, in 1496, and is now in the hands of Signor Cristiano Banti at Florence; a lifelike profile of the natural size, giving the marked features and especially the hook nose and large skinny mouth of the monk with startling reality, showing him with the air of a swooping eagle, though aged, and as if wearied by unceasing strife. But before sitting for this magnificent plastic specimen, Savonarola had already been taken in a similar attitude, though in a more amiable and quiet mood, by Baccio.² For many years this portrait was supposed to have perished. It had been sent in the first instance to Ferrara, and then brought back to Florence by Filippo di Averardo Salviati, who afterwards gave it to the Dominican nuns of S. Vincenzo at Prato. The nuns kept it until the suppression of the convent in 1810, and after many accidents it was purchased by Signor Ermolao Rubieri, the present possessor.³ In this, the earliest extant work of Baccio della Porta, the character and features of the Dominican are reproduced with a fidelity which proves the perfect acquaintance of the artist with the friar. The readiness and decision, the consciousness of power in the face, its bilious complexion, exactly embody what we know by description to have been the aspect and temper of Savonarola. What it reveals besides is Baccio's cleanness of contour, his able handling of materials, and force of modelling, with a moderate impasto at one painting; but above all, the methods of Cosimo Rosselli, in the low key and the somewhat clouded transparence of oil-colour. The significant line: "HIERONYMI FERRARIENSIS A DEO MISSI PROPHETÆ EFFIGIES" is a motto on the panel expressive of Baccio's fanatical worship which it became prudent to conceal in the days of Savonarola's trial.⁴ When, in after years, and in the retirement of Pian di Mugnone, Fra Bartolommeo again attempted to revive this effigy,⁵ he did so with a touch more masterly and grand than that of his youth, allegorically representing Savonarola in the guise of Peter Martyr. But the gain in skill which he then exhibited is compensated by loss of nature and resemblance.

The greatness of Baccio della Porta, however, is not to be sought in portraits, any number of which would fail to reveal the expansion of his talents as a composer, a draughtsman, or a colourist. Unfortunately, we are without examples of any other kind until 1498, the date of his Last Judgment in the Gallery of S. Maria Nuova at Florence.¹ But the void may to some extent be filled by his drawings, many of which, including a portion of those made with a view to use in the fresco we have named, are in the Uffizi. They are all done carefully with a fine pen, with a seeking after grace in the movements recalling Filippino, but with a successful grasp of the various phases of life in motion. His drapery, whether in flight or simply falling, is full yet very nobly cast, at rare intervals festooned, but never betraying forgetfulness of the under forms. The heads, of elliptic shape, rest on slight long necks, a reminiscence (with the casual festooning in cloth) of Rosselli. The tendency to analyse in Baccio goes hand in hand with the effort to give art at last its most dignified reality, and there he goes shoulder to shoulder with Leonardo and Buonarrotti.² If in Cosimo's atelier, this grand aim was less represented than in that of Ghirlandaio and Verrocchio, Michael Angelo and Da Vinci were not the less revered there. The latter especially was looked up to even by the saturnine disposition of Piero di Cosimo; and Baccio was obviously induced to share that reverence, and study, as Vasari says, "the things of Leonardo."³ What those things were, it is of little moment to inquire. Enough that Baccio obtained from them something which stuck to him ever after, introducing him to the most abstruse maxims of composition, lending high-bred gentleman in air and attitudes to his impersonations, teaching him the modern system of colouring of which Da Vinci had improved the technical use.

We look almost vainly into the darkness of history to ascertain whether Leonardo might not have been personally instrumental in directing the yearning diligence of Baccio. Historians generally have assumed that Da Vinci entered the service of the Duke of Milan in 1483; and that he revisited Florence in 1500 only. But many passages in Vasari are opposed to that assumption, leading us, on the contrary, to believe that Leonardo and Baccio might have been in contact with each other in that interval. After a second exile of the Medici, in 1494, Savonarola projected a new form of government for the republic, advocating a council of one thousand citizens, from which the supreme magistrates were to be elected by lot. No hall in Florence at the time was capable of containing so many. Savonarola, therefore, consulted Leonarda da Vinci, Michael Angelo, Giuliano da S. Gallo, Baccio d'Agnolo, and Cronaca as to the means of building one; and those artists agreed to a plan which was placed in Cronaca's hands for execution about the middle of July 1495.¹ We cannot, therefore, exclude the probability of an acquaintance between Della Porta and Da Vinci in that year. Both were unaware that their services would be required later for the decoration of the new saloon; that the first would be asked to furnish an altarpiece which he should begin and leave unfinished; that the second would be required to paint its walls, and should only draw the cartoon.

But for Savonarola, we should perhaps enjoy more of Della Porta's earlier studies. The friar had said that nudities were indecent; and many of his adherents cast the contents of their portfolios into the fire during the carnivals of 1497 and 1498. But the first to obey this injunction was Baccio.² He had become a personal friend of Savonarola; and when the fatal day arrived in which the convent of S. Marco was stormed (May 23, 1498), he was one of the besieged, and realised to his dismay the dangers of an armed conflict, and the prospect of a violent death. He is said to have made a vow that if he survived, he would join the Dominicans.³ Yet, shortly after the execution of Savonarola, he accepted from Gerozzo Dini an order for the Last Judgment in the cloister-cemetery of Sta. Maria Nuova at Florence, and he worked assiduously to finish it until October 1499.⁴ But then it is supposed that his conscience smote him for neglecting the promise he had made to heaven, and he began to think of settling his temporal affairs preparatory to withdrawal from the world.⁵

All that we see incompletely in the drawings of Baccio looks down upon us with increased force from the Last Judgment of S. Maria Nuova. Within the compass of a few feet the culmination of efforts made at Florence during upwards of two centuries may be seen; the solitary link between the successive performances of bygone times under Giotto, Orcagna, Masaccio, Fra Filippo, and Domenico Ghirlandaio, and those of the sixteenth century.⁶ The Last Judgment, with its Leonardesque impress, illustrates not only the rise of Della Porta, but also the new phase inaugurated by Leonardo and Michael Angelo, affording a glimpse at an obscure interval in the history of Da Vinci himself. Comparing it with Rosselli's Miracle of the Chalice at S. Ambrogio, we measure the distance which separates Baccio from his master, and notice the transformation which he underwent without altogether losing the bias of his first education. We see Della Porta the worthy heir of the great Florentines, the follower of Ghirlandaio, Masaccio, and Leonardo in their grandest qualities.

The subject of the Last Judgment is not the oldest that was accepted by Christian painters; but we have seen it pass through the hands of the Byzantines of S. Angelo in Formis at Capua, of the Sienese at the Campo Santo of Pisa; Giotto, Orcagna, and Angelico. Della Porta renovated the old theme by a scientific distribution which owes much of its final development to Da Vinci, and is called modern art since it was raised to sublimity in the Parnassus of Raphael. The space may be dissected into blocks of various shapes, ovals, triangles, polygons, and arcs. The result of their combination is an unity without interruptions of lines, the principal element being the Greek Cross. Above sits Christ in power and majesty, with charming cherubs about His glory, one peeping from behind His drapery; beneath Him, the seraph with the symbols of the Passion and Redemption, and on the foreground S. Michael, the executioner of doom, dividing the wicked from the blest. As a make-weight to these, the Apostles are seated on clouds in a fine perspective row at each side of the Messiah. The system of poise and counterpoise is carried out in the minutest particular; and with such success that the science in the conjunction of the parts is hidden by the harmony of the whole. A new perfection is given to form, a greater freedom and nobleness to action, a more striking individuality to faces nearer than of old to the standard of masculine beauty, a more select detail to extremities. Passion is rendered with simplicity and measure; elevation, in the mien and regular face of the Redeemer, whose gentleness reminds one of Da Vinci; in the air and converse of the Apostles, in the gestures of the elect and of the condemned. In the boy-angels the innocence of childhood accompanies their flight and gambols, whilst those who sound the trumpets of the Judgment have a sprightliness almost carried to excess when one considers the solemnity of their office. A broad cast of drapery correctly defining and seeking the shape, and cleverly folded about the feet, is also a distinguishing feature. The general laws of perspective and foreshortening are very fairly applied, and judiciously combined with those of geometric division. But the study of Leonardo by Della Porta is still more conspicuous in the sky and glory,¹ the vapour of which is created by an infinite diversity in gradations of tints—the forms of the clouds contributing to the general effect by contrasts of colour as well as by variety of outline. But in the figures also the colour is warm, powerful, and well fused, and if occasionally sharp in the juxtaposition of lights and shadows in flesh, or of tones in drapery, the cause may be found in difficulties attending fresco, which Della Porta only overcame later, and which Andrea del Sarto alone finally conquered.

The wall painting of S. Maria Nuova is the masterpiece of a man who almost succeeds in combining all the excellence of his predecessors and contemporaries.¹ Through the influence of Leonardo chiefly, he raised the level of Italian art a step higher than it was before; and left nothing but the very last polish to be given by Raphael. With Michael Angelo this combination had a slighter connection, Buonarrotti having more obviously favoured the style of the vehement Signorelli. But Fra Bartolommeo drew the great Florentine into the compass of his view in a subsequent period of his career, and derived something from him for the enlargement of his manner.

In thus attributing to Della Porta a rare merit, we do not forget that the fresco of the Last Judgment was completed by Mariotto. But it is as certain as anything can well be, that Albertinelli had no harder task to perform than to fill up the lower outlines left unfinished by his partner, and add the portraits of the donors, Gerozzo Dini and his wife.² We regret only that the ruin of the latter should prevent a direct comparison between the two men, and that the portion left undone by Baccio should have been most seriously damaged by time and want of proper care.³

The resolution of Baccio della Porta to enter the Dominican Order

may have been hastened by domestic bereavements. It is not unlikely that the loss of his youngest brother Michele and of his mother Andrea placed him in a melancholy frame of mind favourable to suggestions of monastic retirement. The only surviving member of the family at Florence was his brother Piero, whose lot he proposed to benefit by surrendering the whole of the paternal succession. One moment's hesitation might have been caused by the question who was to be trusted with the guardianship of Piero. That, however, was soon decided by Santi Pagnini, the Dominican, who expressed his willingness to act in this capacity; and the last scruples of the painter being thus removed, he took the first vows in S. Domenico of Prato on the 26th of July 1500, and after a year's probation, professed under the name of Fra Bartolommeo.¹ He never got further than to deacon's orders, nor was it intended perhaps that he should do so.² For some time he was allowed to lead a contemplative and inactive life; but in his cell of S. Marco at Florence the busy hum of the external world did not fail to reach him. Mariotto, whose grief at his voluntary seclusion was evidently sincere, occasionally came, and no doubt retailed the gossip of artistic circles. The Frate was thus made acquainted with the tremendous competition of Michael Angelo and Da Vinci, and was informed of the coming of Raphael. His own fame had not been buried under the frock, and we conceive it possible that Sanzio, finding Buonarrotti and Leonardo too much engaged or too high in station to busy themselves about the fortune of a youth, sought out the monk in his solitude and courted his friendship. His inclination for Fra Bartolommeo would be great in proportion to his admiration for such a grand production as the Last Judgment of S. Maria Nuova, a fresco embodying all the principles of high art which Raphael had as yet to master; and the friar's partiality for Da Vinci's system of composition and method of colouring would act as an incentive in Raphael to make them his own.

But in Fra Bartolommeo himself, the thoughts of an altered condition, the remembrance of Savonarola, and the duties of religion necessarily had a tendency to chasten and to soften his spirit. It was no longer open to him to follow impulses natural to a lay artist. Nor did he feel any desire apparently to issue from a sort of dreamy enjoyment of his new life. But, if he did, he concealed the struggle and, casting about for models, he might admire in Fra Giovanni, whose masterpieces filled every cell in S. Marco, an excessive purity and fervour; in Perugino and in Raphael, a tenderness and calmness of meditation equally attractive because new and more within his reach than the intensely religious mysticism of Angelico. He tempered in this wise, as we shall see, the weight of his Florentine style with the gentleness of the Umbrian, giving in exchange the science which he had learnt either directly or indirectly from Leonardo. Perspective, we are told, he learnt from Raphael. Perhaps he then received lessons in the abstruser problems familiar to the ateliers of Verrocchio and Perugino; but he had already applied more general rules in the fresco of the Last Judgment with the same success as Raphael himself in the later Roman period.

How long Fra Bartolommeo pondered before he openly confessed a wish to resume his old occupations, cannot be established with any certainty.¹ He was troubled with qualms as to the prospects of his brother, for whom he had to choose a guardian instead of Santi Pagnini, elected in 1506 prior of Santo Spirito at Siena. He desired to see Piero engaged in a business of some kind; and wanted him to learn painting. But he felt disinclined to be himself the teacher, and preferred to vest that duty in Mariotto. He therefore signed a deed (January 1, 1506, n.s.), by which his brother became the ward of Albertinelli for a term of six years.² He had scarcely taken this step, when he returned to his own easel, whilst Piero, too old to learn a profession, rendered all previous foresight nugatory by entering the priesthood.³

From that time, Fra Bartolommeo ceased to think of anything else but the pencil, and was acknowledged as the head of the workshop belonging to S. Marco. With the orders for pictures he had nothing to do, still less with the remuneration, in which the entire community had an interest.⁴ Helping hands there were in sufficient numbers; and so he laboured for the sake of a name, and for the profit of his brethren, with one distinction only, that of dispensation from attendance in the choir.⁵

Amongst the early fruits of his new activity we may class a little treasure of the Uffizi Collection—the shutters of Donatello's relief triptych of the Madonna, ordered according to Vasari by Piero del Pugliese, and considered a gem by the Duke Cosimo.⁶ Inside, the Nativity and Circumcision; outside, the Virgin and the Angel Annunciate, in monochrome. Nothing more exquisite than this miniature had, as far as we know, issued from the hands of Fra Bartolommeo. In the Nativity, the Child is adored by the kneeling Virgin, whose two attendant angels stand in converse, S. Joseph to the right resting against a pack-saddle; the scene, a landscape of minute touch and gay clear tones, after the fashion of the Ferrarese or Flemings, with slightly leaved trees recalling those of Raphael's Florentine period. In the spacing and grouping, which are well managed, the figures are connected with great judgment, and impressed with the necessary individuality. The favourite ellipse of Baccio is visible in the Virgin's head in conjunction with a thin shape and extremities; the form, in her as well as in the angels, reminiscent of Rosselli, whilst the pretty, smiling Child has more the air of those by Sanzio; S. Joseph of a masculine cast and broadly draped. The Circumcision is the exact counterpart of the Nativity as to style and execution; the Annunciation, a notable instance of the painter's feeling for the elegance in angels which is to be found in the new art of Florence at the rise of the sixteenth century. The colour, softly fused and well modelled, with good contrasts of light and shade, discloses a different technical process from that of Rosselli, but the same comparative absence of glazes and similar methods generally to those in the Vision of S. Bernard at the Academy of Arts in Florence.¹

The first glance at this composition, which was delivered in the spring of 1507, suggests a doubt as to whether it was ever finished, so raw is the impasto.² Prolonged examination shows that this appearance is due to flaying and restoring. But, however ill-calculated its present condition may be to please the eye, the distribution is such as to retrieve in part even that deficiency, and to excite the highest admiration; whilst the damage done to the surface lays bare the secrets of Fra Bartolommeo's palette. They are evidently the same as those of Da Vinci in the portraits at the Ambrosiana, the flesh being rubbed in and modelled with brown earth, and then brought up to a cheerful general key of a fluid semi-transparence. After this, the half-tones and shadows were scumbled to a bluish grey with more or less depth, according to the darkness required, and the lights were touched on in a broad mass over all, the whole being united at last by glazes of the thinnest texture, which have now in a great measure disappeared. This was the system of handling which owed its origin and progress to Da Vinci, who carried it to perfection in the Mona Lisa; the system which Fra Bartolommeo improved as he grew older, and which Andrea del Sarto at last thoroughly understood. It was the novel one which Vasari describes as having surpassed that of Francia and Perugino, when practised by Leonardo, Giorgione, the Fra, and Raphael.¹ It is, however, but a variety of Perugino's method of strata, with the inevitable rawness produced by their overlapping, when thin glazes do not cover the edges; and with casual opacity where repeated labour has been required to soften the occasional abruptness of the superpositions. The same principles in Credi and Piero di Cosimo only yielded less favourable fruits because their talent was not of the highest class.

No picture more fully embodies the idea evolved in Fra Bartolommeo's Vision of S. Bernard than that of Filippino Lippi, whose slender mould of shape is preserved by the Dominican; but we recognise at once the progress of art in the latter, by the superiority of his tact in conception and distribution. The Apparition of the Virgin, wafted through the air on the clouds, supported by cherubim, is imposing by the majesty of its ensemble as well as by the grace and elegance of its parts. There is motion in the forms, in the drapery, in the rolling mist. The confidence of love in the angel on whose shoulder the Virgin steps, as he guides her foot with his hand, the playfulness of the peeping boy, are charming. Briskness and sprightliness in the attendant seraphs are perhaps carried to excess, reminding one still of Rosselli. But Raphael did not compose better. The types alone are not so pure and fresh as those of Sanzio; for though Fra Bartolommeo tried to give them an aspect of chasteness and supreme bounty, he did not thoroughly succeed, from lack of that delicate fibre which discerns the very finest shades of sentiments, and also mainly because he was the follower of an analyst who sought the ideal scientifically and irrespective of impulse, and could not with all his subtlety produce what in Raphael is the result of feeling, without mental effort.

Opposite to the Virgin, but looking up from his book as she appears in the sky, and accompanied by S. Benedict and S. John the Evangelist, kneels the ascetic S. Bernard in ecstacy, nobly surprised, and well set off by a long train of drapery. A summer twilight of evening is on a gay and smiling landscape receding from hill to hill, enlivened with horsemen near a city, and closing on the horizon.

In this, as well as in the arrangement and execution of the picture generally, Fra Bartolommeo was not indebted to Leonardo only, but perhaps also to Perugino whose meditative tenderness and gifts as a colourist were calculated to alter the masculine and solid nature of the monk's art, at a moment when convent discipline, the solemn spirit of religion, and past example might tend to soften his character. It was the more easy for him to surrender himself to such influences if Raphael stood by to give them weight; and we can fancy the style of the Fra being impressed in this way by creations like Vannucci's Pietà of S. Chiara.

But if, in the Vision of S. Bernard, Fra Bartolommeo reveals this inward struggle, another masterpiece of the same period also shows how successfully he could instil into his work the religious pathos, if not the absolute purity, of Fra Giovanni. In a lunette above the door leading into the refectory of S. Marco, he represented the Meeting of Christ and the Apostles at Emmaus; and, courting direct comparison with Angelico, he gained unusual sweetness and dignified repose. Refining upon the theory of colour applied in the Last Judgment of S. Maria Nuova, he obtained a richness of tone in fresco reproducing nature in its best and most favoured appearance; a form with scarce a blemish, features both select and breathing, movements elastic and ready, and drapery of the finest cast.¹

In the meantime, Bernardo del Bianco, who had ordered the Vision of S. Bernard for the Badia of Florence, began haggling about its price. Fra Bartolommeo declared it to be worth 200 ducats. Bernardo offered eighty. Hence great excitement in the Dominican community. Both parties agreed to accept the arbitration of the abbot of the Badia, who withdrew from his office, because he could not bring Bernardo to terms. Mariotto Albertinelli, Lorenzo di Credi, and others tried in vain to moderate between the angry disputants, and a suggestion was made at last that the question should be deferred to the Guild of the "Speziali." But the Dominicans objected to submit their grievances to a lay tribunal, and only consented after some delay to accept Francesco Magalotti, Bernardo's relative, as umpire. By his mediation the price was fixed at 100 ducats; and a very protracted quarrel was thus brought to an end on the 17th of June 1507.²

The annals of S. Marco at this time contain evidence of a close connection and a constant intercourse between the Dominicans of Florence and those of Venice.³ Frequent journeys were undertaken by members of the Florence community to the convents of the sister republic, and Fra Bartolommeo took advantage of one of these opportunities to visit Venice in the spring of 1508. Failing health might urge him to take this trip ; a desire for change of air and scene, or a wish to study the masterpieces of a school justly celebrated throughout Italy. He might have heard from Baccio di Montelupo, an exile since the persecution of Savonarola, how marvellously proficient the Venetians had become as colourists ; or the monks who travelled occasionally between the two places had discoursed to him of the wealth and splendour of the city of canals. It was perhaps his intention, and that of the syndic who accompanied him, to engage a journeyman for the atelier at S. Marco. When the Frate found himself at Venice, in April 1508, he was met by Baccio di Montelupo, guided by whose experience he saw the rarest sights, and admired the works that filled the palaces and churches. Yet such was the known pre-eminence of the Florentines as painters, even on the Adriatic, that when Fra Bartolommeo came to the monastery of S. Pietro Martire at Murano, he was asked by the vicar Bartolommeo Dalzano to give him for a reasonable price a specimen of his skill, and he was obliged to promise a canvas of the value of 70 to 100 ducats.¹ But his time was so amply filled by occupations of various kinds during his stay, that he postponed the execution till he returned to Florence, bringing with him an advance of 28 ducats in money and colours, and a prospect of payment for the remainder out of a sum to be raised by the sale of MS. letters from S. Catherine of Siena held by a friend of Father Dalzano in Tuscany.

Fra Bartolommeo's first care on resuming his duties in S. Marco was to reorganise the atelier and introduce new elements into it. However unwilling the Dominicans might be to acknowledge that their own order was unable to provide the necessary assistance, they tacitly admitted it by allowing the Frate to take Mariotto Albertinelli into partnership. There was nothing new in the employment of a layman in a monastic workshop ; for Benozzo Gozzoli had been helpmate to Angelico, but there is no other instance of an association like that into which Albertinelli entered with the convent of S. Marco. It seems to have been agreed that the syndic should provide for all current expenses, and that the net profits should be divided with Mariotto.² We shall presently see that a subdivision of interests also existed. Some pictures were finished in the essential parts by Fra Bartolommeo, others were more exclusively Mariotto's, others again were the fruit of their labour with additional aid ; and there was a monogram to distinguish all but the paintings of the first class.

² The partnership commenced in 1509, the inventory of the division of profits, in 1512, stating that the association had lasted about three years. See the inventory in MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 144.

The commission which first occupied Fra Bartolommeo after the reorganisation was that which he had accepted from Father Dalzano; the subject of which is simply the Eternal in heaven, attended by cherubs and seraphs, and worshipped from below by S. Mary Magdalen and S. Catherine of Siena. In this most admirable production for feeling as well as form, a special attractiveness is created by colouring redolent of Venetian richness and brilliancy, and by atmosphere successfully attained in gradations of landscape tints, and by chiaroscuro after the method of Da Vinci in the Mona Lisa, or of Raphael in the portrait of Leo X.¹ Without being free from occasional rawness in the flesh, the picture exhibits increased knowledge of the use and value of glazes in the figures and distance. The saints almost touch the ground; but the sense of their elevation above the rank of mortals is conveyed by their kneeling on light clouds rolling above the ground on cherubs' heads. The Magdalen, with eyes cast down, has the beauty of the penitent. The S. Catherine is more austere and elegant, and shows supreme longing in her upward gaze; but there is less distinction in the shape and air of the Eternal in benediction; and the angels about Him, with their crowns, garlands of flowers, and strings of pearls, if select in form and true in movement, are a little hard in colour, from which we gather that Mariotto had a share in carrying out the arched glory.

Advice having been sent to Venice that the canvas was ready for delivery, the monks of S. Pietro waited some time before they replied. They despatched two friars to negotiate, who left Florence without coming to terms; and they paid no attention to a protest issued by the convent of S. Marco in January 1511. In the end, Fra Bartolommeo remained in possession of the piece at the dissolution of his partnership with Albertinelli, and is supposed to have presented it to the prior Santi Pagnini.² It now hangs on an altar to the left of the portal in S. Romano of Lucca, vying with a Madonna of the same year and by the same hand in a neighbouring church.³

In the chapel of the sanctuary at S. Martino of Lucca, an old and time-honoured subject is invested with new interest. Two angels suspend the crown and veil above the Virgin's head, their frame and wings detached with delicate shades of tint from the lighter tone of the sky.

³ VASARI, vol. vii., p. 164. The picture (in oil, on wood) is signed on the step occupied by the angel: "1509. FRIS BARTHOL. FLORENTINI OPUS 1509 OR^{IS}, PREDICATOR." The figures are under life-size. [The Eternal, worshipped by two Saints, is in the Museo, Lucca; the Madonna and Saints, in the Duomo.]

The Virgin herself wears the mantle about her head and holds the Infant on her knee, a lovely little being full of fresh life, joyfully looking out as the angel on the step, with upturned glance, feeds His ear with the harmony of a little viol. By the two pillars which confine the space, S. John the Baptist and S. Stephen are relieved in light on the darkness of the ground;—a noble picture this, full of gentle elegance, Leonardesque in science and in execution, and graced with the prettiest finesses of the brush, bathed in a warm and airy vapour, and firm of outline and touch.¹

We see in this and in the canvas of S. Romano with what cheerful activity Fra Bartolommeo had taken to work in company with his old friend Mariotto. But the fertility of the year 1509 was not exhausted here. It probably yielded two more examples, the Virgin and Child between four Saints in S. Marco at Florence, so grand in its day as to have been taken by Pietro da Cortona for a Raphael,² and the small Virgin, Children, and S. Joseph, now belonging to Earl Cowper at Panshanger.

Such a gem as this Holy Family is alone worthy of a pilgrimage, representing at once the skill of the Frate, Leonardo's maxims of composition and moulds of face, and Raphael's feeling. The eye is fixed at once on the prominent brightness of the flesh in the Virgin and Christ. The lines are most skilfully concentrated into a pyramid, and affectionate fondness beams in the features and expression of the mother in whose eye a smile of delight is lurking. S. Joseph smiles outright, and is also reminiscent of Da Vinci. The Infant Christ, in thought, all but lives and breathes. He takes the Cross from the little Baptist, whose action is somewhat hard and strained. One can fancy Fra Bartolommeo sitting before this panel, playing like a master with the innovations in the technica of his art. One perceives how he rubbed in the shadows and mezzotints, and added the different strata of colour over each other like sheets of tinted crystal, a cool spot in the light here and there tempering its monotone, a dark one varying that of the shadow, the brightest parts of solid impasto and of a warm yellow, the darker ones of a greenish grey, and so usually transparent that the drawing appears beneath, except in places where a dab or a scumble with the finger strengthens the texture. When the first preparation required no alteration, it was left untouched, because, though such bits might look a little raw on close examination, they kept their harmony at a distance of a few paces. Finish was obtained at last by subtle glazings, the subsequent abrasion of which may account for occasional coldness.

Although Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto were associates when this Holy Family was done, its completion was due almost entirely to the former, and fell to his share on the division of profits in 1512.¹ The purchaser was probably Filippo di Averardo Salviati, one of whose relations afterwards placed the following memorandum on the back of the panel: "D. FRA BARTOL° DI S. MARCO OGGI DE° . . . ANT° SALVIATI."

During 1510 the labours of Fra Bartolommeo were neither less important nor less numerous than those of the previous year. His time was chiefly spent on an order from Giuliano da Gagliano, from whom large advances were received in November;² but the most honourable commission confided to him was that of the altarpiece, once undertaken and never begun by Filippino Lippi, for the hall of the Great Council of Florence.³ Yet we must suppose that some difficulties arose as to price, because, after the figures had been sketched, the panel was put aside and left for future consideration.

In 1511, the last touches had been given to a small round of the Nativity, a Christ carrying His Cross, a Virgin Annunciate, sold to the Gonfaloniere of Florence, a subject sent to the Carthusians of Pavia, another sold to an English dealer, and a Marriage of S. Catherine; of all which only one is extant.⁴ According to Vasari the Marriage of S. Catherine was exhibited for several months in S. Marco, and was afterwards forwarded to the King of France.⁵ The real facts are these. In 1512, Jacques Hurault, Bishop of Autun, was envoy of Louis XII.

at Florence. The Florentine government, desirous of securing his favour, found an ingenious mode of doing so by the gift of Fra Bartolommeo's picture which was bought from S. Marco for 300 ducats. Hurault took the present with him, and left it to the cathedral of his diocese at Autun, from whence it passed at the revolution to the Louvre. The Friar's signature and the date of 1511 are on the Virgin's throne.¹

With this masterpiece we enter upon a new phase in Fra Bartolommeo's career; and we find him partly resign the tender, the kindly, and the meditative for a broader style more natural to his spirit and education.

The background is a semidome with advancing pillars and a bold cornice, in the centre of which the Virgin sits on a pedestal and rests her feet on a stool. Her right hand is on the head of Christ, who stands at her knee with one leg on the stool, and, as He turns, giving the ring to the kneeling S. Catherine of Siena. This charming idea, rendered with Leonardesque elegance of lines, conveys a sense of great affection and veneration towards Christ on the part of His mother; not so much, however, by chosen type as by movements the softness of which emulates those of Raphael's Bella Giardiniera at the Louvre. The difference between Fra Bartolommeo and Sanzio now is, that the Friar applies the most rigid rules of Da Vinci; whilst his friend has more sentiment and more colour. The saints in the presence have already a sternness of mien, a gravity of deportment, and a grandeur in the fall of their drapery which illustrate the expansion of the master's mind. The Child is no longer of tender age. Foreshortenings, of which the beginnings are noticeable in the flying angels of S. Romano at Lucca, become more hardy and more life-like in the three boys who support the festoons of the daïs. Perspective generally is used with perfect correctness in the figures which stand on their planes with extraordinary firmness. The tone is of a bright gay key, calculated for a particular place in S. Marco, though seen to little advantage in a gallery where one light serves for all; but it is also probable that the final glazings have been removed by cleaning.

The form which Fra Bartolommeo had thus given to a composition of frequent recurrence in past years, so perfectly suited the taste of the public that the atelier of S. Marco could not supply repetitions of it with rapidity equal to the demand; nor did the subalterns of the shop

¹ The old frame bore the following lines: "JACOBO HURALDO HEDUORUM EPISCOPO LUDOVICI XII. FRANCORUM REGIS LEGATO FIDISSIMO SENATUS POPULUSQUE FLORENTINUS DONO DEDIT ANNO MDXII." On the throne are the words: "ORATE PRO PICTORE. MDXI. BARTHOLOME FLOREE. OR. PRÆ." Wood, oil, No. 65 at the Louvre (see MUNDLER, Essai d'une analyse, &c. (Paris, 1850), p. 87). A note of the sale of the picture for 300 ducats to the Florentine government and of its gift to Monsignor di Othon (Autun) is in the memoranda of the Syndic of S. Marco. treat it with anything like the vigour and success of their chief, as is shown by the large example in the Academy of Arts at Florence.¹

A more successful combination of the hand of Mariotto with that of the Frate in 1511 is the Madonna between SS. Peter and Paul on the altar of the Mastiani family at Sta. Caterina of Pisa; where we admire the noble attitude of the Virgin holding the Child in benediction, as she rests her foot on the broken pediment of a column, and the grandiose air of the two saints standing in the full consciousness of solemn reverence on the foreground.² An inky tone pervading the surface is due to injuries caused by a fire that broke out in the church in the seventeenth century, but it is of interest to note upon the pedestal of the throne a motto and a date headed by a monogram repeated from a panel of 1510 assigned to Fra Paolino in the Belvedere of Vienna—a monogram composed of a cross and two rings, which is to be found on a panel bearing the joint signatures of Fra Bartolommeo and Albertinelli at Geneva,³ and on works hereafter to be mentioned by Fra Paolino or other assistants in the monastery of S. Marco.

Incomparably the grandest of the creations by the friar in company of Mariotto is that completed before the close of 1512 for S. Marco with a variation of the old theme, the Marriage of S. Catherine of Siena. Having been unaccountably given away to the bishop "of some diocese" in 1588, it now adorns the Pitti Collection, and bears the inscription: "1512, ORATE PRO PICTORE"⁴ Fra Bartolommeo having reached this point in the treatment of his favourite subject, may be said to have exhausted it, and set at defiance all future attempts at improvement. In composition, drawing, and relief, it was beyond his own power to come nearer perfection. Great as the charm had been with which he had invested the group of the Virgin and Child in the altarpiece of Bishop Hurault, he now infused new elements of beauty into it by increased grace in the shape and air of the Virgin, and by contrasting the turn of her head and frame with that of the Infant. Then balancing the positions of the kneeling Saint Catherine at the foot of the pedestal, and seating two boy-angels with viol and guitar on the steps of the throne, he reared the well-known pyramid of distribution. He placed a fine S. Michael in armour, and a S. Bartholomew erect in weighty position as mainstays on the foreground, uniting them by a circular chain of spectators in converse on the floor of the semidome. In rivalry with Raphael at times in bold foreshortening, he prodigally wasted his science in the reproduction of form and drapery, poisoning four lovely seraphs in flight under the festoons of the dais. The whole is thrown upon the panel, as Vasari says, in so gallant a style as to leave the impression of a living scene. Yet it is more by truthful transition of neutral light and shade than by colour that Fra Bartolommeo obtained effect, the tone being reduced almost to a monochrome by the use of lamp-black ; but here again the gallery is unfavourable to a work intended for a special place in a church ; and the Marriage of the Pitti will not be seen to its best advantage till a niche is built expressly for it.

On the same principles, and under the same fortunate combination of circumstances, it was that the splendid Conception which now adorns the Gallery of the Uffizi was composed. With a versatility denied to all but a few, he formed another pyramidal arrangement of S. Anna in ecstasy on a plinth behind a beauteous Virgin watching the play of the Infant Christ and S. John. He brought down the lines to the extreme foreground by the help of four standing and kneeling worshippers, giving symmetry to the distribution by a company of saints at each side, by a choir of infant angels and cherubs with instruments, or singing from a book held aloft by their hands, and by two winged children at the foot of the throne. Had this grandiose creation been finished, it would have been the chef-d'œuvre of Fra Bartolommeo. Having been left in its present condition, which is that of a mere rough draught on the panel, with the drawing and preparation in brown, it is but a sketch ; yet masterly as one by Buonarrotti. Its interest is great, as revealing the growth of such a piece from its embryo to the first stage of completion. In certain sheets at the Uffizi we find the studies of the nudes and their subsequent repetition in drapery, designed, we believe, from the lay figure of which Fra Bartolommeo was the first to make use, in preference to the models of clay, familiar to Leonardo and Credi. We can, therefore, trace each step taken by the artist, from the moment of planning to that of putting in the contours and shadows. We mark with what science and depth of thought, with what method he kept to Leonardo's rules in dividing space, and in combining groups to advantage at various elevations in a given room, in order to attain a result by which several intricate problems are solved. But there is something more than science and method to be discerned, and that is the inspired air of the S. Anna, the weight, the dignity, and proud bearing of the saints, the masculine strength of the art evolved. If, on issuing from his cell, Fra Bartolommeo was desirous to soften his style, and for that reason endeavoured to temper it by looking at the works of Angelico and Perugino, his relations with Mariotto, the reminiscences of his youth, and the current of the age took him back in 1512 to the true breadth of the great Florentines.

How it was that this Conception was never carried out is a mystery the more difficult to explain, because in June 1513 the government of Florence advanced a hundred ducats to the convent of S. Marco for it, and the receipt is preserved in the handwriting of the Syndic.¹ There is reason to suppose that the first interruption was caused by the parting of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto, which occurred in January 1512, and that others were caused by ill-health.

In an evil hour for Mariotto, Santi Pagnini had been re-elected prior of S. Marco, and his instalment had not long taken place when the association was brought to a close. Albertinelli drew up the memorandum of dissolution on the 5th of January, dividing the profits in equitable shares,² and stipulating at the close that: "the properties hitherto in common should remain in possession of Fra Bartolommeo till his death, and then pass to Mariotto," ex. gr. a wooden life-size figure, already mentioned, which is described by Vasari, and is said to be that now in the Guardaroba of the Florentine Academy;³ another of smaller size with joints (ganghere, or hinges), a pair of compasses, and a "bambino" of gesso moulded from one by Desiderio in S. Croce.

To Mariotto. A round (no subject given), a Christ carrying His Cross with the thieves (? missing), two pictures, subjects not named, an Annunciation, small, in the hands of the Gonfaloniere.

The partners having been separated in this manner, Mariotto surrendered himself to a violent paroxysm of discontent; and in his spleen declared that he would rather keep an inn than continue his profession any longer.¹ Fra Bartolommeo resumed his duties without Albertinelli's help, and, sickening in July of 1514, was sent with his journeymen Fra Paolino and Frate Agostino to the country hospital of the Dominicans at Pian' di Mugnone. Being allowed to throw some frescoes on the walls "for his diversion and recreation,"² he painted a Madonna in the Cappella del Monte, another in the refectory of the infirmary,³ and, we believe, a third which alone has survived. Whatever his bodily ailings might have been, they did not affect his powers as an artist. Not even a momentary weakness affected his brush. As a "frescante" he stands at Pian' di Mugnone on the high level that had become familiar to Andrea del Sarto; as a draughtsman and composer he maintains his old and just celebrity. What he represents is one of those moments in the life of a mother, when the babe which is her delight and solace, suddenly clinging to her bosom, and crowing with an irrepressible fondness is folded as a priceless treasure to her heart. All this is shown in the cheery and sparkling expression of the Child's round and regular face, in the action of the Virgin who glues her cheek to His forehead and wraps her tunic in an agony of love about His limbs. If to this be added an exquisite taste and transparence in tones of excessive brightness, and great perfection of modelling, we have an idea of Fra Bartolommeo's gifts at this time. His forms have none of the mildness of the earlier convent period, but are conspicuous by their breadth and solidity. In the Child the glance is that which Raphael gave to the Christ in the Sixtine Madonna; but the group is most reminiscent as a whole of the Virgin of the Seggiola.⁴

After leaving his forced retreat, Fra Bartolommeo all but repeated the Virgin and Child in a fresco of the Cappella del Giovanato at S. Marco, infusing a more ardent affection than before into the expression and movement of the mother of Christ; a greater life and flexibility into flesh of a true carnation.⁵ He never, in the many Virgins and

² The record is in MARCHESI, ubi sup., vol. ii., p. 367, under date of July 10, 1514.

⁴ The fresco is arched at top. The two figures are above life-size; the lower part of the Virgin's dress abraded. If any reproach can be made, it is that the forms of the Child are a little puffy. [Mr. Berenson speaks of two frescoes at M. Maddelena in Mugnone—an Annunciation of 1515 and a "Noli me Tangere" of 1517. I do not remember them. There is now no Madonna and Child there.]

bust-pictures of the Redeemer and Saints which were produced at this time, for instance in the panels and frescoes that are his in the Academy of Arts at Florence, rose to such genuineness of feeling or to such grave and noble individuality.¹

Whether this boldness or freedom is attributable to a visit paid to Rome before the retirement of Pian' di Mugnone, is a question likely to remain obscure. Vasari says, "that the Frate was so frequently entertained with rumours of Raphael's and Michael Angelo's successes that in order to judge of the matter personally, he asked leave of the prior and went to Rome, where Fra Mariano del Piombo gave him hospitality. His intention had been to repay this kindness by a present of a S. Peter and a S. Paul; but the air of the capital was so unfavourable to him that he was obliged to leave it, Raphael meanwhile consenting to give the last touches to the unfinished panels."² The sickness which forced the Friar to Pian' di Mugnone might, under these circumstances, be considered a consequence of the malaria of Rome. There is no doubt that Fra Bartolommeo would have found Sanzio at the Vatican in the spring of 1514. The death of Bramante had just occurred, and Fra Mariano had succeeded to the Piombo.³ Some of the greatest frescoes of the age were in existence, by Raphael in the Camera della Segnatura, by Michael Angelo in the Sistine Chapel. The SS. Peter and Paul, to which Vasari alludes at S. Salvestro, are now at the Quirinal, one of them evidently repainted, and the intromission of Raphael is supposed to be confirmed by a passage of Castiglione's Cortigiano. But, on the other hand, Vasari tells almost the same story of Albertinelli as he does of the Frate,⁴ and contradicts himself in the life of Rosso by saying that Fra Bartolommeo left the Eternal City without having done anything.⁵ The Cortigiano is rather contrary to the theory which assigns two panels of S. Paul and S. Peter to the monk's stay at Rome, because it describes Raphael busy in the presence of two cardinals with one picture in which were a S. Peter and a S. Paul;⁶ and again, the memoranda of the Syndic of S. Marco declare that: "two quadri of

"Di questo modo rispose ancor' Raffaello pittore à dui Cardinali suoi domestici, i quali, per farlo dire, tassavano in presentia sua una tavola ch'egli havea fatta dove erano San Pietro e S. Paolo: dicendo che quelle due figure erano troppo rosse nel viso. Alhora Raffaello subito disse, Signori non vi maravigliate, che io questo ho fatto a sommo studio, perche è da credere, che S. Pietro e S. Paolo siano, come qui gli vedete ancor in cielo così rossi per vergogna, che la chiesa sua sia governata da tali huomini come sete voi." Il Cortigiano, by BALDASSAR CASTIGLIONE, &c. four braccia by Fra Bartolommeo, a S. Peter, and a S. Paul, were valued at thirty ducats, but reduced in price to twenty-five in consequence of an imperfection in the S. Peter; and both were given away to S. Salvestro."¹ It is clear that, unless we admit the existence of replicas of these saints, we must doubt Vasari. The Apostles of S. Salvestro, now at the Quirinal, are obviously those registered in the Syndic's memoranda, and done from the cartoons now in the Academy of Arts at Florence.² They are grand and stern, the S. Peter with mantle hanging over his right arm holding the keys, and the book pressed to his breast; the S. Paul looking out, and his hand on the hilt of a long sword. The colour of the first is reddish and rather opaque, the shadows of the head being taken up afresh, and the extremities being by another painter. The head of the second is corrected so as to leave the old contour visible; but the tone is transparent, and the execution exclusively that of Fra Bartolommeo.³ Whoever may have been employed on the S. Peter, we do not fancy Raphael to have been that person; and we assume that if Fra Bartolommeo went to Rome, he did so for a few weeks of pleasure or for health, as on a previous occasion he had gone to Venice. The Virgin of Pian' di Mugnone being a reminiscence of Raphael's Madonna della Seggiola, itself related in style to the Galatea of the Farnesina; the Virgin of Mercy of 1515 at Lucca, and the Resurrection of 1516 at the Pitti, having an imposing air, derived perhaps from study of Buonarrotti, we might suppose that these results were due to a short but not unfruitful stay on the Quirinal. Yet to build any statement of fact on such an insecure foundation would be hazardous; and we must remember that examples of Raphael and of Michael Angelo were also to be seen in Florence.

There is no doubt in the meanwhile that, whatever the cause may have been, the Frate had gained a confidence and power which were the admiration of his contemporaries, and that after his convalescence, and as if to show certain fault-finders how unfounded their reproaches were, he rapidly produced a succession of things well calculated to disarm all criticism. One of these, a naked S. Sebastian, exhibited publicly in S. Marco, is alleged to have convinced the Dominicans in their confessionals of the temptations which they had unwittingly thrown in the way of female penitents. It was therefore withdrawn to a safe privacy from whence it only emerged to become lost to the history of the arts for ever.⁴ But in 1515 Fra Bartolommeo's industry yielded no less

³ Both panels 5 feet 10 inches in height. Each figure in a niche.

⁴ The S. Sebastian, according to Vasari, was sold to a dealer, and sent to France (VASARI, vol. vii., p. 161, and Annot.). It has been stated to be now in possession of a gentleman in Toulouse; and truly a picture with this subject does belong to than three masterpieces, one of which would alone suffice to give him renown. We allude to the Virgin of Mercy ordered by the Dominican, Lombardi de' Montecatini, now in S. Romano of Lucca; to the Madonna of the Hermitage at S. Petersburg, and to the Annunciation at the Louvre. With every new effort of the Frate we are struck by the genius which succeeds in giving a new form and an unexpected novelty to an old subject. It is surprising with what abundance fresh poetry and thought are introduced into a well-worn theme by his high pictorial sense. The Virgin of the Lucca altarpiece¹ is in motion, so to say, on her pedestal, with one arm upstretched, and the other designating the crowd of her worshippers. Her face, expressing prayer and inspiring devotion, is turned upwards towards the Redeemer, whom she alone can discern, as He majestically floats forward, winged in the flying folds of His dress, the fingers of His right hand in benediction. Between Him and the Virgin an angel raises a tablet with the aid of two others whose winding ribands are fast to its edges. Two boy-messengers loop up a capacious mantle, the green lining of which is a favourable background to the groups of adorers at each side of the foreground. Here you have people of both sexes, of different ages, thoughtful, tenderly meditative, eagerly demonstrative. The patron kneels, nobly gentle, and full of faith, and hears the explanation of a Dominican pointing to the Madonna. Before them a mother in joyful ecstasy grasps her babe, whilst a curly infant peers over her shoulder shrouded in the cloak of the dame behind. Opposite to these, a recumbent female describes the scene to her child. The classic movement of the principal figure, the varied but always elegant attitudes and action of the remainder, are almost matchless instances of the mode in which scientific calculation gives nature as a result. In most of the minutiae unusual power of observation is revealed. Nothing can be more pleasing than the manner of dividing the fingers with their play suggesting unconsciousness. Admirable are the draperies in which the folds are concentrated on the bends. The Redeemer is magnificently poised in air, and keeps His place by judicious choice of tone and a circumambient vapour. Looking at the composition suddenly, its flesh tints may be raw, its transitions from light to shade, sudden; but as the eye by degrees takes in the whole, the atmosphere that permeates the space begins to appear, and the more we gaze, the more intense becomes the satisfaction; and we see the Frate illustrate an axiom described by Leonardo as essential to a person dwelling in that city. But when the authors were at Toulouse, the canvas had been sent to Paris; and when they were in Paris, it had been taken away again. Connoisseurs in Paris, however, are inclined to consider this Toulouse piece beneath the powers of Fra Bartolommeo.

perfection. One could almost fancy that the words of Da Vinci were intended to apply to the Virgin of Mercy, which is altogether according to his maxims. We enter into its darkest recesses, and glance from the lights and shadows to the half-tints that mottle the groups, as clouds cast a transparent darkness on the flatness of a landscape and vary its monotony.¹

The Madonna of the Hermitage is a variation in oil of the frescoes of Pian' di Mugnone and S. Marco, broad and weighty in the scantling of the frames; grandiose in movement rather than enticing by select mould of feature. Four winged children touch instruments or keep watch around her, as she sits on the ground and holds the spirited and smiling naked Child to her bosom; but full enjoyment is forbidden on account of a pallid opaqueness imparted to the colours by restoring.²

The same art in remodelling a familiar incident is exhibited in the Annunciation at the Louvre, as is shown at Lucca. The Virgin seated under a niche, and attended by standing or kneeling saints, bends backwards as she sees the messenger who flies down to her. It is clear that the latter was thrown off on the background of architecture at the moment when the rest was finished. The tones are warm and full of air, the execution is light and masterly, and some of the saints, the females kneeling in front especially, are Raphaelesque and feminine in grace and dignity. Fra Bartolommeo has reached a point where he

On the tablet held up by the angels are the words: "MISEREOR SUPER TURBAM." On the Virgin's pedestal: "MR PIETATIS ET MIE. FS. OP," which means: Frate Sebastiano de' Montecatini ord. pradicatorum, the arms of the family being in the middle of the letters. That the canvas was ordered for Fra Sebastiano is also proved by records, for which see MARCHESE, ubi sup., vol. ii., p. 109, note; and p. 144. On the lowest step of the throne: "MDXV. F. BARTHOLOMEUS OR. PRE. PICTOR FLORENTINUS." The outlines in many parts are seen as they were first drawn with a pen. In other places they are freshened with a bold touch of the brush. The flesh lights as well as the shadows are in half body, very broadly treated. Glazes are chiefly confined to the more distant parts, the light being concentrated on the front of the picture. Some hardness may be due to cleaning.

There is [1866] a small unfinished copy of this masterpiece, miscalled a sketch by Fra Bartolommeo, really of the seventeenth century, belonging to Signor G. B. Mansi at Lucca. Another small modern copy, on copper, is also under the Frate's name (No. 4) in the Leuchtenberg Gallery at S. Petersburg.

² On a tablet in the upper part are the words: "MATER DEL. 1515." Below: "BART. FLORN^o ORD. PRÆDICATORUM." Wood, oil; No. 20, Hermitage at S. Petersburg, formerly belonging to Crozat. The shadows of the flesh tints are retouched with liquid tints, and hence opaque. The pupils of the eyes and some outlines have also been repainted. There are spots where apparently old scaling was stopped, and the new stuff has become dark. The blue mantle of the Virgin is in a great measure repainted with a certain loss of form resulting from the operation. It is not possible for this reason to say whether Fra Bartolommeo was alone or assisted in this piece. [Mr. Berenson denies this to Fra Bartolommeo.]

defies every sort of difficulty.¹ It is the time when he may be supposed to have done the Isaiah and Job of the Uffizi, and the sketch of the Eternal in the same gallery.²

In spite of a passage in the memoranda of the Syndic of S. Marco, from which we learn that the Virgin of Mercy of S. Romano was sent from Florence,³ Father Marchese is of opinion that Fra Bartolommeo painted it at Lucca, at the request of Santi Pagnini.⁴ We may be allowed to doubt the force of his argument, without denying that the Frate's summer was partly spent in 1515 outside the walls of S. Marco. Although it is true that he entered into an agreement to furnish a Madonna and Saints to Jacopo Panciatichi for a chapel in S. Domenico of Pistoia, on the 15th of February, there is no evidence in the record itself to show that the Friar was at Pistoia, nor indeed is there any proof that he ever performed the promise that he then made.⁵ A fresco of the Virgin and Child, ascribed to Della Porta in S. Domenico, might indeed testify to his presence, and seems lined from one of his cartoons; but it is by a disciple such as Fra Paolino might have been.⁶

If Fra Bartolommeo, however, was neither at Lucca nor at Pistoia, his health again drove him in October 1515 to Pian' di Mugnone, where he never came without bringing his tools. In order that time may not hang too heavily on his hands, he covers a lunette with a fresco of the Annunciation, the treatment of which discloses great breadth and facility. It is delightful to see the angel's eagerness in coming and giving the message, and the speaking profile of the head with its oblique bend.⁷ The Virgin receives the announcement with joy, and gathers herself well together under the folds of her mantle, her form being perhaps too square and masculine. But this would be the work of a leisure hour,⁸ and might lead us to believe that the Frate remained but a short space at the hospital, preferring perhaps to wander away in another direction and look for his uncles at Suffignano, whom he had not seen for years. Father Marchese quotes a contemporary diary, in which a pleasant description is given of the relatives' meeting and the lucky guess of the grand-nephew Pagolo di Vito, that the friar must be his grand-uncle Bartolommeo. When the moment of parting was near, the Frate said : " And now it may be long before we meet again, for the King of France has sent for me and wants to give me employment," from whence we learn that before Leonardo joined Francis I., an attempt had been made to engage the Dominican in the same service. Why the negotiation failed, we can now scarcely tell ; but it is not unlikely that an event of the most painful interest to the Frate prevented him from leaving Florence. Mariotto, who had resumed the brush, fell sick at the end of October 1515. The news of his illness necessarily reached Fra Bartolommeo, and brought him to his friend's bedside. We can imagine his grief when Albertinelli expired on the 5th of November.

⁶ The contours are wiry and the colour washy. The group is finely outlined, but the forms and the drapery are not given with Fra Bartolommeo's grand boldness. The fresco has been removed from the convent into the church of S. Domenico. Tolomei quotes the name of Fra Bartolommeo, however, in connection with this Virgin, on the strength of convent records, and says the patrons were the Fioravanti. (TOLOMEI, Guida, ubi sup., p. 109.)

The inexhaustible nature of the Frate and his capacity for keeping art at its highest level, even when time and circumstances were combining to give a variety to his manner, are displayed in the results of his labours during 1516.

Foremost amongst the creations of that year is the Resurrection at the Pitti, in which he discloses anew his progress towards the true grandiose. The Saviour, on a pedestal in front of a classic block of architecture, rests on His left leg, before moving the right from a step. The sceptre is in one hand, and the other is raised in benediction. A splendid cast of drapery falls across the breast, and sweeps round to the hips and limbs. There is a bold foreshortening in the S. Matthew, who points outwards towards the spectator. Splendid gravity is in the features and pose of the S. Mark, on whose shoulder S. Luke rests his arm, whilst S. John speaks to S. Matthew.

This subject, ordered for Salvatore di Giuliano Billi, was placed in the SS. Annunziata de' Servi¹ in a framework comprising, it is said, the two prophets Isaiah and Job, now at the Uffizi. It may have been completed just after a sketch at Panshanger, in which we believe we see the apotheosis of a Dominican saint.

S. Antonino was a friar whom we recollect as the contemporary of Fra Giovanni, and of whom Vasari relates that Angelico recommended him to Nicholas V. for the archbishopric of Florence. After his death the order made strenuous efforts to secure his canonisation, but invariably without success. When Leo X. made his solemn entry into Florence in the winter of 1515, and on the day of Epiphany 1516, admitted the brethren of S. Marco to kiss the foot, he graciously whispered his intention to fulfil their wishes and left them swelling with pride as being favoured beyond all the religious communities of the Tuscan capital. Though Leo did not live to satisfy this pious desire, the brothers of S. Marco were prepared for a speedy fulfilment of his promise, and might in the meanwhile have intended to celebrate the occasion by the exhibition of a picture from the hand of their best artist. Fra Bartolommeo may thus have been induced to compose and finish, previous to its transfer to a panel of larger dimensions—the small one of Panshanger, which, had it been so carried out, would probably have been the finest that he ever attempted. The body of the archbishop lies in state on a couch in the centre of a convent-yard, with friars about him, some on their knees grieving, others stooping over him, or trying to embrace his sandals; others again with tapers or prayer-books. Laymen at each side have gathered together in haste and great commotion, the nearest on each side of the foreground boldly set as pillars to support the framework of the composition; their weight increased by the architecture, and buildings of the court massively confined by high walls at each flank, and by lower ones in the distance, above which an orchard and hills are seen. In the background, the door of the church is open, with the head of the funeral procession about to issue from it; whilst amidst clouds, accompanied by angels bearing the throne, the lily, and crowns, the canonised saint ascends to heaven to meet the Eternal. Geometrical symmetry and balance are obtained with an ease almost unparalleled. Nothing like the truth or animation of the scene, the readiness and firmness of the movements, and the nature of the groups. With this, varied character and individuality of expression, perspective of atmosphere and of lines, massive transitions of light and shade, and a powerful tone in the key of a deep and sonorous bass.¹

Looking at the excessive skill of Fra Bartolommeo, and considering the grandeur of his performances in 1516, we should attribute to that time five lunette portrait-busts of Dominicans, in the lower dormitory of S. Marco at Florence; all of them superbly modelled and admirable specimens of stern gravity, though here and there injured by scratches, and not free from a certain vulgarity.² We should place in the same

¹ In this panel the colour is all half body, through which the ground gesso appears, giving the whole its transparency. There are forty figures in all. The Eternal and the procession at the church-door are barely sketched. Purchased at Florence.

There is another panel assigned to Fra Bartolommeo in this precious collection of Earl Cowper—subject, the Virgin, Child, S. Joseph, and a female Saint in profile, and the young Baptist kissing the Infant Christ, a fine approximation by the Sienese Beccafumi to the manner of the Frate; sweet in colour and very freely handled.

² There are eight of these frescoes in the dormitory, but three of them are modern. The first of those by Fra Bartolommeo is a friar with a star above his class as to date and merit the S. Mark and S. Vincent at the Pitti¹ and Academy,² both of which are illustrations of the power with which a plastic appearance may be given to the human shape by scientific calculation of light and shade, by select casts of drapery and vigorous tints.

But, in addition to these we have the Holy Families of the Corsini Palace at Rome and of the Pitti at Florence, and the Presentation in the Temple at the Belvedere of Vienna.

A distant likeness between the first of these Madonnas and Raphael's portrait of Maddalena Doni at the Pitti might warrant the assumption that the Holy Family at the Corsoni Palace is that which Vasari calls a chef-d'œuvre done for Agnolo Doni.³ The panel is a small jewel,⁴ with the signature : " F. B. OR. PR^a. 1516."

The Virgin, on a flowery meadow, holds the Child, who struggles to cast His arms round the little Baptist's neck. S. Joseph looks smiling at this affectionate scene. It is a pyramidal arrangement, with a thorough combination of contours with chiaroscuro and aërial perspective. If anything, the figures are a little heavy and unselect. The Virgin, a fine matronly portrait in profile, with yellow hair in bands, covered by a falling veil, is reminiscent of Leonardo. Some forms are hard and dryly outlined, such as the legs and articulations of the Baptist; and the instant action of the Infant Christ's limbs is incorrect, but the touch is masterly. The drawing appears generally beneath the colour. In certain spots there is strong impasto of enamel finish with bituminous shadows, in which one sees the track of the brush in Rubens' manner. Elsewhere we have a system like that of Rembrandt in dark bits struck with speed and decision over the semi-transparent brown preparation. The most charming feature of all perhaps is the landscape, in which a glowing vapour suggests comparison with the distances of Titian. The Frate has acquired all the tricks of hand that betoken long experience, tricks unhappily too easy to be caught, as cowl and a lily in his left hand; with his right he orders silence. The second, with a red book and palm, is injured in the face by bayonet thrusts. The third reads in a red-bound book. The fourth is preaching; and there are marks of an Eternal and Angels having been on the background, near His head. The fifth and sixth are modern, the seventh is bareheaded, with rays diverging behind. The eighth is of the eighteenth century. We trust these injured masterpieces will be removed to a place of safety from their present dark recesses. MARCHESI mentions them (vol. ii., p. 131).

they were in the sixteenth century, by men who had not the necessary ballast of education to justify their use of them.¹

The Holy Family at the Pitti is almost an inverted replica of that of the Corsini Palace. But the central group of the Virgin and two children is balanced by S. Joseph and S. Elizabeth; and the background is a green curtain. The composition is Leonardesque; the forms to a certain extent conventional.²

The Presentation in the Temple, at Vienna, a magnificent conception, sins by shortness of stature in the personages, and has been deprived of harmony by the removal of glazes; but there are few subjects due to Fra Bartolommeo in which there is a softer gravity or a more melancholy beauty.³

To this long catalogue of masterpieces historians have always added an Assumption at Prato, registered by Vasari, supposed by some to have disappeared, and by others to be identical with that which now graces the walls of the Berlin Museum.⁴ No very diligent search is required to trace the locality in which it may be found. The Assumption of Prato is not at Berlin, but in the Great Salone of the Naples Museum; an arched panel with life-size figures; of the Virgin ecstatically raising her face and hands to heaven as she bends prostrate on a cloud, accompanied by two boy-angels, of SS. John the Baptist and Catherine of Alexandria kneeling at the foot of her tomb.⁵ To describe the quality of this "Assumption" would be but to repeat the praise given to other works of 1516, the year in which the Frate seems to have exhausted his strength by over-exertion.

Fra Bartolommeo sickened so seriously in the beginning of 1517, it was thought necessary that he should take the baths of S. Filippo.⁶ He also tried Pian' di Mugnone for the last time, leaving there a Vision of the Saviour to the Magdalen, which is almost equal in power to anything previous,⁷ and then he came back to Florence, where, on the 8th of October 1517, he died of a malignant fever. His death, at the early age of forty-two, was an irreparable loss to the Dominicans, who buried him with great honour in S. Marco.¹

⁵ It is said that the Assumption of Prato bore the date of 1516. The panel at Naples hangs high up in the Salone, so that the date may be there though unseen by the authors of these pages. The colour is altered by flaying. There is an original drawing of the work in the Pitti Gallery.

His furniture and tools, which would have passed to Mariotto had he been living, were hoarded as treasures for a long time. Many of the cartoons were used by Fra Paolino and others, and Bugiardini even completed some of the unfinished pieces. But upon this point some errors may have been handed down to us.

It has been usual to follow Vasari in affirming that the Pietà at the Pitti² received its last touches from Bugiardini; yet the evidence of this is not to be found in the execution. It is admitted that the composition is one of those that Fra Bartolommeo carried out most completely. The naked corpse of the Messiah is raised from a recumbent to a half-erect position by S. John Evangelist, whilst the Virgin with excessive love supports His head and left arm, the Magdalen embracing His legs in an agony of grief. The group realises at once all the precepts considered as final in the sixteenth century. It is a modification and an advance upon Perugino's, combining all the tenderness of the Umbrian, with greater selection, astonishing individuality, pure nature, and refined feeling. It is not possible to cite an instance in which a lifeless form is rendered with more flexibility, or with more anatomical accuracy. As regards foreshortening, the Magdalen is unsurpassed. We cannot admit that Bugiardini should have done any more than the two figures at the sides, which by some accident, of which the details have been lost, were subsequently obliterated.³

In order not to extend these remarks to an unwarrantable length, we make out a list of Fra Bartolommeo's remaining works (genuine and the reverse) in the most convenient order that presents itself:—

Florence. Academy of Arts.—[Nos. 171, 173]. Two rounds in one frame; in each round a Virgin and Child (frescoes); both rapidly done at one painting without previous outlining, gay in tone, almost equal to those of Pian' di Mugnone and S. Marco. [No. 168]. Five frescoes in one frame—1. Figure of Christ, like a Fra Paolino. 2. S. Catherine, in Fra Bartolommeo's manner, and of a very elegant gentleness. 3. A monk of grave mien (a little injured). 4. S. Peter Martyr (?) imposing silence, a grand apparition of a friar. 5. S. Chiara, less good, and probably by Fra Paolino. [No. 168]. Five squares in one frame; four of them in fresco, one in oil. The latter, 1. Bust of Christ carrying His Cross, on canvas, with the line "ORATE PRO PICTORE 1514," of a thin colour darkened by time. 2. S. John the Baptist, original. 3. Profile of a S. Antony the Abbot, perhaps by a disciple of Fra Bartolommeo, ? Sogliani. 4. A female saint (? the Magdalen) of soft air, genuine. 5. S. John the Baptist, of the sixteenth century. (Both these numbers are made up of pieces taken from S. Marco, those by the Frate all dating from 1510-14).¹ A copy of the Christ carrying His Cross, in the Palazzo Corsini, Lung' Arno, at Florence, No. 32, is called Francesco Francia, but is by a disciple of the Frate.

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 377]. Ecce Homo, bust, fresco. The head, of the same stamp as that in [No. 168] at the Academy, but of the Frate's early Leonardesque time, of mild aspect, delicate, and hatched.

Florence. Uffizi.—Wood, oil. A small Virgin kneeling near a plinth on which the Infant is seated ; from a Raphaelesque composition of the Frate, by an inferior hand imitating him.

Florence. S. M. Maddalena de' Pazzi, Sacristy.—Centre of an altarpiece, the sides of which are by Sebastian Mainardi (see antea, where we unwittingly compared this panel with certain figures at Berlin). Subject, a saint, life-size, in a niche, wood, oil, repainted over an older one. The character, mould, movement, and drapery are not unlike those of the SS. Paul and Peter at the Quirinal ; but the condition under which the colour was laid in makes it a little opaque. The art, however, is that of Fra Bartolommeo.²

Florence. Gallery of the Marchese Piansciaticchi.—No. 108. Half-length of the Magdalen ; wood, oil ; damaged and reminiscent of Bugiardini. No. 12. Virgin and Child (life-size) composed in the Frate's fashion, and the landscape not unlike his, retouched, and of a milky transparence, and now resembling a Mariano da Pescia (wood, oil). No. 322. Virgin, Child, S. Anne, S. Joseph, and three angels ; a sketch, an old and fine copy of a picture by Fra Bartolommeo.³

Cortona. Signor Passerini.—Virgin giving the breast to the Infant Christ, wood, oil, a subject in which the Frate was not less at home than Raphael. The Child a little heavy, the period of execution about that of the Holy Family in the Corsini Palace at Rome. The ground is injured and renewed, leaving traces of a saint in the left-hand corner. It is many years since the authors saw this Virgin, which has since been missing (see postea for a copy of it in the Holford Collection).⁴

Siena. Academy.—S. Mary Magdalen ; wood, oil, half life-size. S. Catherine of Alexandria. On the latter, the cross and rings, monogram of the atelier of S. Marco during the partnership of the Frate and Mariotto, and the date 1512. These two saints were once in S. Spirito of Siena, where Fra Paolino and Fra Agostino, Dominican assistants to Fra Bartolommeo, are known to have been. They are graceful and neatly done, but beneath the powers of the Frate ; a little cold in the shadows, clean, and wanting in massiveness of light and shade. They look as if they might be by Fra Paolino, to whom a picture at Vienna with the same monogram and the date of 1510 is given, or at all events as if here the Pistoian had a large part in a work belonging to the association.¹

Lucca. Villa Saltocchio.—Five miles from Lucca, is the Villa of Conte Bernardini, where there is a pretty round of the Nativity, being probably that registered in the memoranda of the Syndic of S. Marco at Florence as sold for 20 ducats (circa 1513–16) to “Giovanni Bernardini Lucchese” (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 144). The size of the figures is one-third that of life, their style a mixture of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto.

Venice. Galleria del Seminario.—Virgin and Child (wood, oil, half life), Pretty, in its old pilastered frame, softly coloured, but with more smorfia and carefulness than was proper to the Frate, reminiscent of him, however, and suggesting the name of Mariotto or even Fra Paolino, but superior to others at the Borghese and Sciarra Collections in Rome, and the Corsini Gallery in Florence, in which the latter may have had a share. The flesh is somewhat restored. The distance is a landscape, with angels in the upper part.²

Venice. Duchess of Berri.—Round of the Virgin, Child, Infant Baptist and S. Bartholomew, in the character of the Brescianini of Siena.

Turin. Gallery.—No. 61. Round, wood, oil. Virgin, Child, and angels, also in the superficial manner of the Brescianini, and reddish in tone. No. 62. Holy Family, called Francia Bigio, the counterpart, as to execution, of No. 61.

Modena. Gallery.—No. 483. Virgin and Child. No. 465. Ditto; very different from anything by the Frate.

Rome. Gallery of the Capitol.—Presentation in the Temple (twelve figures) partly repainted in the seventeenth century; the rest not unlike Giacomo Francia, particularly in the S. Anna.

Rome. Palazzo Borghese.—Room II. No. 31. Nativity, dated 1511, with the monogram of S. Marco (see “Fra Paolino”).

Rome. Palazzo Sciarra Colonna.—Room IV. No. 1. Virgin, Child, and young Baptist, with the monogram of S. Marco (see “Fra Paolino”).

Florence. Gallery of Prince Corsini.—Holy Family with the monogram of S. Marco (see “Fra Paolino”).

Brescia. Galleria Tosi.—Nativity (wood, oil, figures life-size), composition perhaps by the Frate; the tones heavy, flat, and without relief; probably by Sogliani.

Vienna. Belvedere.—Room IV. Italian Schools. No. 17. Virgin and Child (half-length, wood, oil), placed high up, but seemingly opaque in colour, perhaps by a pupil of the Frate. The same Virgin and Child, more like a Fra Bartolommeo than this of Vienna, is in the Pitti [No. 242] under the name of Puligo.

Vienna. Harrach Gallery.—Virgin with her hand on her bare breast, and the Child on her knee, His hand also on her breast, and holding an orb. Wood, oil; by a follower of Sogliani, but repainted in the flesh. The movement of the Christ is reminiscent of Bronzino.

Vienna. Count Czernin. Profile of a friar looking up; of the close of the sixteenth century.

² [Morelli, Berenson, and others give this to Albertinelli.]

Berlin. Museum.—[No. 249]. Assumption. Figures life-size; wood, oil. The distribution and drawing are those of Fra Bartolommeo, of the time when he and Mariotto were associates, and the lower part more particularly like Albertinelli. The comparative rawness of the colour may be due to the abrasion of the final glazes.¹

Munich. Pinakothek. Cabinets.—No. 597. Virgin and Child, canvas, not by Fra Bartolommeo, but a copy of a Madonna in the Baring Gallery in London (see antea, "Spagna").

Munich. Pinakothek. Cabinets.—No. 579. Wood, oil. The Infant Christ on the ground between the kneeling Virgin and S. Joseph. Not by the Frate, but a feeble and superficial production stamped with the impress of the school of Granacci.

Munich. Saal.—No. 551. Virgin, Child, and S. Joseph. Wood, oil, from the collection of Mme. Dubois in Paris, where it was bought by King Ludwig I. Not genuine. Coloured of a vitreous enamel, with dark, warm shadows reminiscent of the style of Michele di Ridolfo, Puligo, or the Brescianini of Siena.

London. Stafford House.—No. 88. Wood, oil, life-size. The Virgin, in profile, with the Infant Christ holding a reed cross, and the young Baptist in rear. The composition seems an imitation of those by the Frate and Raphael; but the handling is more modern, like that of a follower of Correggio. Such at least is the aspect of the piece at present; but whether this is due to the obvious repainting of the panel, or to other causes, cannot be decided.

London. Grosvenor House.—No. 177. Wood, oil, small. Virgin and Child under a conical daïs, the curtain of which is raised by two angels. In front, SS. Jerome and Mary Magdalen on their knees. The subject is arranged in the method of the Frate and of Mariotto; it is pleasing and careful, but betrays an effort by, say, Michele di Ridolfo, to imitate the masters above named.

London. Holford Collection.—Panel altarpiece, oil. Virgin and Child enthroned, and two angels holding a piece of tapestry above her. At the sides, the kneeling S. Sebastian and a friar. Feeble, washy, of life-size figures, by an artist later than the Frate and Mariotto.

Same Collection.—Life-size Virgin holding the Infant, who lays two fingers of his hand on her bare breast, a copy of the Virgin once belonging to Signor Passerini of Cortona.

London. Baring Collection.—Sketch, part outlined, part coloured, of the Holy Family; traces only of the S. Joseph being in the background to the left. The hands of the Virgin painted; not done in the mode of Fra Bartolommeo or his pupils, and seemingly more modern; a little mannered and affected too, as if by Raphael del Colle in his old age.

London. Lord Taunton (ex-Stoke Park).—Virgin and Child, the latter on a parapet, between S. Lawrence and a bearded saint. Wood, oil, life-size. This is a mixture of Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto, and not improbably by Puligo, the forms exaggerating the system of drawing of Del Sarto, and the Virgin's head being an inspiration from one of the Frate's. The colour is somewhat sombre, and not absolutely satisfactory in the transitions from light to shadow.

London. Lord Elcho.—Virgin enthroned, with the Child holding a cross, under a niche; a graceful, small thing, of a golden tinge, in the mode of Fra Bartolommeo, but without his weighty and superior style. We believe the author to be Mariotto Albertinelli.

London. Sir Anthony Stirling.—Crucifixion, between the Virgin and Evangelist, a little miniature panel, of most careful execution, quite with the impress of the Frate's school, in the character of Albertinelli also, and at the same time like a fresco in S. Spirito of Siena. The painter may therefore be Fra Paolino. The intonation warm, and the drapery broadly cast.

London. Late Northwick Collection.—No. 95. Round. Holy Family, like a Sogliani. No. 101. Holy Family. No. 111. SS. Bartholomew, Biagio, and Nicholas. No. 899. Holy Family, not by the Frate.

London. George A. Hoskins, Esq.—No. 210, at Manchester. Virgin, Child, and Saints; not on the level of the powers of Fra Bartolommeo.

London. Abraham Derby, Esq.—No. 93, at Manchester. Marriage of S. Catherine, inscribed: "ORATE PRO PICTORE"; superficial, feeble, by some follower of the Frate and Fra Paolino.

Bristol (near). Sir William Miles, Bart., of Leigh Court.—The Virgin with the naked Child holding on with His right hand to the bosom of her dress. A fine life-size picture, but without the high qualities of Fra Bartolommeo. The mixture of Della Porta and Andrea del Sarto might lead one to assign it to Puligo. The tints are gay, almost gaudy.

Glasgow (near). Hamilton Palace. Breakfast Room.—Holy Family. The Child on the Virgin's lap, blessing the young Baptist kneeling to the left, S. Joseph in rear to the right. Behind, a wall and a landscape. In front, a cup out of which a finch is drinking (wood, half life-size). The Virgin and S. Joseph are apparently taken from Fra Bartolommeo; the two children are reminiscent of Raphael. The handling is like that of Bugiardini or Sogliani.

England. Lord Wenlock.—Two Friars (exhibited 1853 at the British Institution). These are of the Frate's school.

The following is a list of pieces not seen by the authors:—

Geneva (see antea).

Besançon. Cathedral.—Assumption by Fra Bartolommeo. It was first placed by the chancellor of Flanders, Jean Carondelet, Archbishop of Palermo (born 1469, † 1544), in his family chapel in S. Etienne of Besançon. It came later into the cathedral. It represents the Virgin and Child on a throne which is carried on clouds, by angels. Below stand (left), SS. John Baptist, Sebastian, and Stephen. Right, kneeling, the patron, John Carondelet, with S. Bernard and another saint behind him. On the foreground are roses. Distance, landscape. Of the master's best time. PASSAVANT, annot. to Schorn's VASARI in Kunstblatt, 1844, No. 28.¹

Milan. Camillo Fumagalli.—Assigned (Lett. Pittoriche, vol. vi., p. 417, to Raphael, but according to PASSAVANT by Fra Bartolommeo (Raphael, vol. ii., p. 407). Subject: the Virgin and Child in centre. Wings: SS. Catherine and Barbara. Outer side of wings: Annunciation in monochrome² (see MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 48, and PASSAVANT, vol. ii. p. 407).

Foligno. Signor Gregori.—Holy Family. Virgin seated with the Infant on her lap, playing with its hands in the beard of S. Joseph, who stands by. Below, the little Baptist looks up at the Infant Christ. PASSAVANT (Raphael, vol. ii., p. 409) thinks the work (which is assigned to Raphael) by Fra Bartolommeo.

Paris. Galerie Abel.—Madonna del Cappuccino, said to be commenced by Fra Bartolommeo, finished by Raphael. Subject: Virgin and Child, S. Francis kneeling between angels and the young Baptist giving fruits to the Saviour (see MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 47). PASSAVANT (Raphael, vol. ii., p. 413) says Raphael at all events had nothing to do with this piece.

Florence. Signor Ricasoli.—Head of Christ on a tile (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 128).

Florence. Cav. Baldelli.—A Nativity (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 128).

Florence. Signor Volpini.—Holy Family (VASARI, Annot., vol. vii., p. 169).

Perugia. Palazzo Penna.—Dead Christ, Virgin and two Apostles (MARCHESE, vol. ii., note to p. 81).¹

The following are missing :—

Florence.—Madonna belonging to P. M. delle Pozze (VASARI, vol. vii., p. 151). A Nativity for Giovanni Cardinal de' Medici (ibid., p. 157). Various Madonnas in Casa Medici (ibid., p. 167). Virgin in Casa Capponi (ibid.). Virgin, Child, and two Saints in Casa Lelio Torelli (ibid.). S. George and the Dragon, Casa Pier' del Pugliese (ibid.). Compagnia de' Contemplanti, later in possession of Ottaviano de' Medici, a panel of which no subject is given (ibid., p. 169). Palazzo Niccolini: Holy Family (RICHA, Chiese, vol. viii., p. 48). Badia di Settimo: Virgin giving the breast to the Infant (ibid., vol. ix., p. 225).

Arezzo. Badia de' Monaci Neri.—Monochrome, head of Christ (VASARI, vol. vii., p. 169).

Viterbo. S. M. della Quercia.—Resurrection of Christ and Coronation of the Virgin (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 30, and MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 87).²

Before taking leave of S. Marco, in which so many masterpieces were produced in the course of a century, we pause for a moment to say a few words of Fra Paolino, who has become inseparable from his superior Fra Bartolommeo. He was born about 1490 at Pistoia,³ and received the first rudiments from his father, Bernardino d'Antonio del Signoraccio, a local artist of the feeblest kind, to whom some works are still assigned.⁴ He became a novice at a tender age, and is supposed to have taken orders in S. Domenico of Prato; from whence he was

¹ [These last six we have been unable to trace.]

² [Morelli considers the "Noli me Tangere" at Paris an early work by Fra Bartolommeo.]

³ The Register of deaths of S. Domenico at Pistoia contains Fra Paolino's eulogy, describing him as having died, aged circa fifty-seven, in 1547 (Tigri, in MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 370).

⁴ Pistoia.—S. Lorenzo: Virgin and Saints, inscribed: "BERNARDINUS ANTO PISTORIEN. pfs." S. Felice (outside): Virgin and Saints with the signature:

transferred with Della Porta to S. Marco. There he was the helpmate of the Frate and of Mariotto, assisting them in the execution of pictures which still bear the monogram of the atelier. Of these, the earliest and best are: one under his name dated 1510, a Virgin and Child amidst Saints, in the Belvedere of Vienna; and two Saints in the Academy of Siena (1514), catalogued as by Fra Bartolommeo.¹ Equally early, but of less value, are a Nativity of 1511 in the Palazzo Borghese, a Virgin, Child, and youthful Baptist in the Palazzo Sciarra Colonna at Rome; a Madonna with the Infant, the Baptist, and S. Joseph (1511), in the Palace of Prince Corsini; and a Virgin and Child in the Antinori Palace at S. Gaetano in Florence.² Such a man as Fra Paolino would naturally do better or worse according as the person who controlled him paid more or less attention to his labours. We need not for this reason hesitate to class under one head productions like those of Vienna, Siena, Rome, and Florence, the last of which are much below the first. For, in spite of the difference in merit apparent in them, they all have the same general stamp.³ That Fra Paolino was indebted for instruction chiefly to Fra Bartolommeo, is shown by the fact that the Crucifixion undertaken by him in S. Spirito of Siena (1516) was till lately considered to have been by Della Porta.⁴ He had free run of the sketches, drawings, or cartoons of the latter, and by that means frequently concealed his own deficiencies as a composer and draughtsman. His most successful effort as an executant is the Madonna of Vienna. Colour, on panel or canvas, is constantly brickly, opaque, and inky in shadow; contours are wiry and mechanical, faces vulgar, and drapery unnecessarily cut up with detail. In fresco, his brush is washy and powerless; relief by light and shade is scarcely attained at all; and lifeless stiffness is the consequence.

After Fra Bartolommeo's death, Fra Paolino made copious use of the great man's heirlooms, finishing what he had begun, or colouring on his outlines. This is apparent in a Pietà of 1519 at the Academy of Florence; in other subjects of the same collection, in a Madonna with

"BERNARDINUS ANTONII DE PISTORIO PINSIT, 1502." S. Giovanni Fuorcivitas: S. Roch, with the words: "BERNARDINO VECCHIO, 1532. PISTORIENSIS, PRETE GIULIANO D'ANTINORO FECIT FIERI." (TOLOMEI, Guida, ubi sup., pp. 79, 102, 198-9.)

² In 1513 Fra Paolino modelled two figures of earth, which were afterwards placed in S. M. Mad. of Pian' di Mugnone. (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 207.)

⁴ The record proving that the Crucifixion of S. Spirito at Siena is by Fra Paolino is in MARCHESE, vol. ii., pp. 210-11.

Frescoes done in 1514 at Pian' di Mugnone, by Fra Paolino, have perished. (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 209.)

Saints of 1525,¹ at S. Lucia; and another of 1530 in S. Agostino, at or near S. Gimignano; and equally so in the later and more ambitious attempts which decorate the altars of churches in Pistoia. Fra Paolino had retired latterly to his native place. He died there of the effects of a sunstroke, in 1547.²

The following register is not to be avoided :—

Vienna. Belvedere.—Room IV. Florentine School. No. 42 (canvas, oil, figures life-size). Virgin and Child between the kneeling SS. Chiara and Catherine of Alexandria, the standing Mary Magdalen and Dominic, Peter Martyr, and Barbara. On the pedestal, beneath the monogram, is the following: "1510, SUB TUUM PRÆSIDIUM CONFUGIMUS SANCTA DEI GENITRIX"; and on a scroll at the Virgin's feet, the lines from S. Dominic's legend by Theodoric of Apolda, beginning: "CARITATEM HABETE" (MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 208). This is a good imitation of Fra Bartolommeo, but careful and cold in drawing, and ill-balanced in composition, the effect being that of a mixture between the styles of the Frate and Andrea del Sarto, the colour being of a roseate red without massiveness. There is more grandeur in the Child than elsewhere. The Virgin's type is fine, and her face, turned towards S. Barbara, has some softness. The best figure, however, is that of the kneeling S. Catherine, which is quite reminiscent of the two saints (attributed to Fra Bartolommeo, antea) in their Academy of Siena, which for that reason we should place immediately after the Madonna of Vienna.

Siena. S. Spirito.—Crucifixion, fresco, under glass proved by records to be not by Fra Bartolommeo, but by Fra Paolino (MARCHESE, vol. ii., pp. 210–11), assisted by Fra Andrea, of whom no other notice exists. The head of the Saviour is not without refinement; but the frame, of regular proportion, is a lifeless and wooden nude, lame in hands and feet. The outlines and drapery are in Fra Paolino's character; the colour likewise. Hatching is copious and regular, as in engravings. S. Catherine, in profile, kneeling, is most like an original of Fra Bartolommeo.

We have spoken of a neat little miniature panel like this fresco in the collection of Sir Anthony Stirling (see antea).

Florence. Academy of Arts.—[No. 170.] Marriage of S. Catherine of Siena. Composition by Fra Bartolommeo, to whom the altarpiece is given in the catalogue, execution apparently by Fra Paolino (see antea). No. 71 [?]. Assumption, and Gift of the Girdle, once in S. Marco, and considered by the authors of the catalogue due to Fra Paolino, is possibly by Michele di Ridolfo.

S. Gimignano (six miles from).³ S. Lucia a Bibbiano.—Virgin and Child between the kneeling SS. Catherine of Alexandria and Lucy, the standing SS. Gimignano, Antonino, Jerome, and a friar in a pilaster ornament (wood, oil, figures life-size). On the lower skirting, three rounds including a Saint,

² See Fra Paolino's long and uninteresting life in MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 204 and following, and records in Appendix, ibid., vol. ii., p. 369 and following.

³ [S. Lucia is two miles from S. Gimignano.]

the Visitation, and the Angel and Tobit. The date 1525 is on the Virgin's pedestal. The imitation of Fra Bartolommeo is most visible in the Virgin and kneeling females; the manner, generally, being that of the Madonna at Vienna, with less successful handling. The colour as usual.

S. Gimignano. S. Agostino.—Virgin and Child on a pedestal, at the foot of which an angel plays a viol. SS. Nicholas, Vincenzo Ferrerio, and two others at the sides (wood, oil, figures life-size). This was delivered, according to Canon Pecori (S. Gimignano, ubi. sup., p. 542), by Fra Paolino in June 1530, to S. Domenico of Pistoia; Marchese says to S. Domenico of S. Gimignano (vol. ii., p. 214). It is done from a drawing by Fra Bartolommeo, the group of the Virgin and Child being a counterpart of that in the Marriage of S. Catherine (1511) at the Louvre, and in the same episode at the Academy of Arts in Florence. Reddish, with inky grey shadows and violet half tones.

Pistoia. S. Paolo.—Virgin, Child, and saints with angels, under a conical pavilion (wood, oil, figures life-size). Free adaptation of an arrangement taken from the Frate, but without his symmetry or grandeur; the most important of Fra Paolino's performances, but cold and hard, not equal to the Madonna of Vienna, though superior to those of S. Gimignano. On the step of the throne the words: "OPUS F. PAULI DE PIST. OR. PRÆ. MDXXXVIII." The yellow mantle of S. Peter is repainted.

Pistoia. S. Domenico.—Adoration of the Magi (wood, oil), much injured by scaling, dark and opaque in shadow. There is much movement and animation in the composition, which curiously recalls Andrea da Salerno or Andrea del Sarto; and some grace is imparted to the Virgin presenting the Child to the king, who kneels and kisses its foot. Done, according to Tolomei, in 1539 (Tolomei, Guida, p. 111).

Same Church. Choir.—Marriage of S. Catherine of Siena (wood, oil, life-size), retouched throughout. The group of Virgin and Child is a replica of that in S. Agostino of S. Gimignano. SS. Catherine and Mary Magdalen kneel as in the Marriage (No. 65) at the Academy of Florence. Coarse and unsatisfactory.

Same Church.—Crucified Saviour between the Virgin and Evangelist, S. Thomas Aquinas at foot; bad and much restored. Wood, oil, life-size.

Pistoia. S. G. Evangelista, Fuorcivitas. Sacristy.—Nude S. Sebastian in a landscape. Wood, oil. This is a long lean figure in Fra Paolino's manner. In part scaled.

Rome. Palazzo Borghese.—Room II. No. 31 (named Fra Bartolommeo). Wood, oil, with the monogram and date of 1511. The Child is stretched on the ground, near Him the little Baptist with the Cross. The Virgin in rear kneeling, and S. Joseph to the right. One sees that the foundation is by Fra Bartolommeo, but nothing more.

Rome. Palazzo Sciarra Colonna.—Room IV. No. 1. Virgin, Child, and little Baptist (named Fra Bartolommeo); with the monogram. Wood, oil, half the life-size. In the same class as the Nativity of the Palazzo Borghese.

Florence. Palace of Prince Corsini.—No. 22. Virgin, Child, Baptist and S. Joseph (named Fra Bartolommeo), with the monogram and year 1511. Superficial (wood, oil, half the life-size), rubbed down and retouched, inferior to, but in the same manner as, that of the Palazzo Sciarra at Rome. The types are like those of Mariotto. The colour reminiscent of Andrea del Sarto's pupil, Puligo.

Florence. Palazzo Antinori a S. Gaetano.—Named Mariotto. Virgin and Child, and Baptist, arched (wood, oil, almost life-size). An angel on the left is by another hand. This also bears the monogram. It is like the foregoing, superficial and lustrous.

Besides the foregoing, we note as of still less importance : an Assumption at S. Maria del Sasso, near Bibbiano ;¹ a Virgin and Saints in S. Maria delle Grazie at Pistoia ; two panels at Cutigliano, a Virgin between SS. Francis and Benedict in the Academy, a Madonna and Saints in S. Giovanni, the same subject in the Palazzo Comune at Pistoia, and a Presentation in the Temple, of large size, in the late Bromley Collection.

After the death of Fra Paolino, the well-worn designs of Fra Bartolommeo passed to Suor Plautilla Nelli in S. Caterina of Florence ; a lady who was born in 1523, and died in 1587 (VASARI, vol. ix., pp. 6, 7, and Annot.). We shall only mention one or two of her works, leaving the reader at his pleasure to go deeper into the matter in the pages of Vasari and Marchese.

Florence. Academy of Arts.—[No. 176.] Originally in Santa Caterina of Florence. The Maries and other saints wailing over the dead body of the Saviour (wood, oil, eight life-size figures). The composition is fine, and perhaps an unused one of Fra Bartolommeo, but the execution is a caricature of that of the classic school, the females being the least objectionable. The colour is dull and opaque.

Florence. Prince Corsini.—Virgin, Child, in a landscape, and a figure looking over the Virgin's shoulder (named Plautilla Nelli), an exaggeration of the forms of the Frate, of a low reddish and raw tone.

Berlin. Museum.—[No. 250]. Martha complains in the presence of Christ, Mary, and Peter. This is falsely assigned to Plautilla Nelli, being dated 1524, a year after her birth. It is a feeble piece, of which the cartoon seems nevertheless by Fra Bartolommeo.

MARIOTTO ALBERTINELLI AND BUGIARDINI

THE unimpeachable testimony of records has served to impress with an additional stamp of truth the opinion of Vasari as to the life and character of Mariotto Albertinelli. Born on the 13th of October 1474,¹ and put by his father Biagio di Bindo to the trade of gold-beating, he soon tired of the monotony peculiar to this occupation and exchanged it for that of a painter. His choice of Cosimo Rosselli as a master threw him into contact with Baccio della Porta, with whom he speedily entered into cordial friendship; and such was the inclination felt by the two apprentices towards each other that their companionship became inseparable; and Mariotto derived from his style the name of a second Fra Bartolommeo.²

We shall not dwell anew on the incidents which preceded the monastic retirement of Della Porta; nor is it necessary to do more than bear in mind, that when the Last Judgment of S. Maria Nuova was left unfinished, Mariotto remained charged with its completion. What chiefly interests us is to see that during Baccio's novitiate, Mariotto continued the pursuits which had hitherto been carried on in common, and gave signs of a talented and promising manner resembling in principles as well as in technical methods that of his old partner.

What became of the earlier pictures which fell into the hands of Cesar Borgia at Rome, or the likeness of Alfonsina de' Medici, has not been discovered;³ but there is a small Christ Appearing to the Magdalen, in the Louvre, in which reminiscences of Cosimo Rosselli's atelier are discovered.⁴ It was to be expected that Albertinelli should become acquainted with the mode of drawing in which Fra Bartolommeo's familiarity with the works of Leonardo was betrayed; that he should have the same types and lively action, the same thin shapes and elegant proportion; and that his landscape should be touched with the Frate's careful tenderness. His system of painting necessarily had the same fresh sharpness and minuteness of handling. So natural indeed is this, that the presence of all these features in one panel leaves no doubt as to its authorship. And if in that of the Louvre we discover an art less perfect than that of Fra Bartolommeo, it is only because Mariotto had not all the gifts of his associate. Both men had the same education, both were alike in their veneration of the maxims which were known in the shops of Rosselli and Verrocchio as alone true and unassailable.

There was a time when Mariotto might almost have hoped to ascend to the highest honours at Florence, the time when Della Porta, having apparently renounced his profession, varied his leisure perhaps by encouraging and advising his friend. To this favourable moment we owe the Salutation, ordered of Mariotto in 1503 for the Congregation of S. Martino at Florence.

The scene is laid in a highly decorated portico, looking out upon a fair sky and pleasant country. The Virgin has stopped, and bends slightly but courteously forward as Elizabeth steps up and takes her hand, a free expression of joy in her aged face contrasting with the more staid and noble attention in that of the Madonna. Both have the mien and bearing becoming their station. Admirable chastity and composure in the one, a winning honesty in the other. The action and the drapery are equally felicitous. In this application of the Leonardesque rules, Mariotto was for this once almost perfect, and but for a little stiffness would be equal to Fra Bartolommeo. Technically he had not allowed any of the advantages of the age to escape him. All the requirements known to Da Vinci after his departure from Milan he turned to use for the attainment of full harmony and rich vapour, producing enamel transparence in a low key of tone with consummate skill by glazes.¹

To this grand specimen of a picture of style succeeded a round of the Nativity now at the Pitti; a brilliant easel-piece charming for its combination of the qualities of Leonardo and Credi; for noble seriousness in the face of the Virgin and the pleasing plumpness in the shape of the Infant Christ; the landscape, of Ferrarese minuteness in detail, like that of Fra Bartolommeo's Vision of S. Bernard.²

Shortly after this, Fra Bartolommeo appointed Mariotto guardian of his brother Piero, and resumed his artistic occupations. Whilst he was occupied with the Nativity and Circumcision of the Uffizi, Albertinelli was busy on a Crucifixion at the Certosa, and a Madonna with Saints in S. Trinità of Florence.

The fresco, a simple form of an old theme, with the Magdalen at foot, the Virgin and Evangelist at the sides, and angels gathering the blood from the hands, is very much in Fra Bartolommeo's manner, and tells by comparison what the lower parts of the Last Judgment at S. Maria Nuova must have been.¹ The Madonna, now at the Louvre, stands on a pedestal, the Infant in her arms giving a blessing to SS. Jerome and Zanobius, who kneel in front. Like that of the Frate in the altarpiece of S. Marco, the group of the Virgin and Child is fine and full of feeling. The two saints are well proportioned, and the distance of hills is varied with episodes.² We dwell at length upon this period of Albertinelli's life, because he then achieved his greatest successes. As he grew older, taking many pupils, such as Giuliano Bugiardini,³ Francia Bigio,⁴ Innocenzo da Imola,⁵ and Pontormo,⁶ he wasted more than his leisure in a vain attempt to improve oil mediums.

A Virgin and Child with the infant Baptist, dated 1509, and greatly injured, in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, serves less to prove this than to show that Bugiardini was probably then a journeyman in his shop.⁷ A better illustration is the Annunciation of 1510, which passed from the Compagnia di S. Zanobi to the Academy of Arts at Florence. In order to suit this subject for its position, he placed the panel on the altar and studied the perspective as well as the play of light and shade on the spot; and as he had some peculiar notions as to the propriety of combining marked relief with fusion, he tried a number of experiments with but little satisfaction to himself.⁸ The result, as we now see it, was an excessive lucidity of colour, obtained by a copious use of strong varnish in the oils, and a substance at once viscous, flowing, and difficult to model. Time dealt severely with this example, and what it has spared has suffered from restoring; but besides, Mariotto gave evidence of an extravagant fancy in the confused arrangement and strange dresses of the angels surrounding the apparition.

⁷ No. 5. Wood, oil. The Virgin, erect with a pomegranate in her right hand, holds the Infant, standing, on a parapet. The latter hangs on to the bosom of His mother's dress, whilst the young Baptist looks on and carries the reed cross. A bird pecks food, and a vase of flowers is placed on the wall. In front one reads: "MARIOTTI FLORENTINI OPUS 1509." Through a window, a landscape, the whole covered over with modern repainting.

tion of the Eternal; thus casting into the shade the finer points made in the fair types of the Virgin and angel. The subsequent removal to a gallery where the effect of a low centre of vision is negated by hanging "below the line" combines with other disadvantages to give Mariotto's work an unfavourable aspect.¹ The circumstances under which he brought it, after incredible labour, to completion were such that a valuation by competent persons became necessary, and Pietro Perugino, Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, and Francesco Granacci, had to give their opinion before the price was finally settled.²

In a more quiet and less fanciful mood, Albertinelli had occasion to furnish to S. Giuliano a Trinity³ on gold ground, and an enthroned Madonna adored by two kneeling saints, which from thence have been transferred to the Academy of Florence.⁴

In the midst of these occupations the friendship of Fra Bartolommeo, whose fame was increasing daily, had not been neglected. We have seen how vainly Mariotto tried to mediate in the summer of 1507 between him and Bernardo del Bianco. After the return of the Frate from Venice, the want of a skilled superintendent in the atelier of S. Marco became evident, and the old partnership, which had been broken up in 1500, was renewed in 1510. Very few of the pictures undertaken while it lasted enable us to distinguish the hand of either artist. We barely have a trace of Albertinelli in the glory of the Murano altarpiece at S. Romano of Lucca. His presence is more decidedly apparent in the lower part of the Assumption at Berlin, and is slightly betrayed in the round of the Nativity at Saltocchio, near Lucca.

At the division of profits which took place in January 1513, a panel which fell to Mariotto's share was one of Adam and Eve, contoured and rubbed in by Fra Bartolommeo.⁵ After Albertinelli had digested the chagrin caused by the separation from his friend, and repented of

In the Berlin Museum [No. 229]. A round of the Trinity under Mariotto's name is very like the above in respect of arrangement, though more like a work of Granacci in touch and mode of colouring.

⁵ Memorandum of Mariotto (January 5, 1513, n. s.) in MARCHESE, vol. ii., p. 366.

having turned publican, we think that he took in hand this little piece, which is now at Castle Howard. On the left sits Adam in profile, obviously bent on dissuading Eve, who stands against a tree about to pluck the fruit. She is tempted by the whispering demon whose body is twined about the trunk. In the landscape, the Creation and Expulsion are introduced as subordinate episodes. This is an exquisite thing, correct in the anatomy, proportions, and action of Adam, astonishingly appropriate in the hesitating movement of Eve. In spite of minute treatment, the touch is firm, and the tone rich, sweet, and airy.¹

Nor is this a solitary specimen of Mariotto's power. Its counterpart is a beautiful Sacrifice of Abraham, preserved likewise in the collection of Castle Howard ;² and a similar character is marked in three fragments of a Coronation of the Virgin at the Museum of Carlsruhe.³

We cannot suppose that Mariotto long remained absent from his easel. For some months only did he keep a tavern at the Ponte Vecchio al Drago, near the gate of S. Gallo, and congratulate himself on having entered on a trade "where he should be free from the taunts of criticism, and hear no more of muscles, of foreshortening, or perspective."⁴ The means which had enabled him to take this strange step were, no doubt, soon exhausted ; and in March 1513 he was glad to accept a commission for a shield of arms in the Palace of the Medici, on the occasion of Leo X.'s elevation to the Papacy.⁵

The Annunciation at Munich, though undated, is but a continuation of the manner illustrative of this period in Albertinelli's career, combining the elegance and pious spirit of Fra Bartolommeo with a sentiment and method of colouring like that of Andrea del Sarto.⁶ It shows that Mariotto, in this instance at least, could succeed in uniting strong contrasts of light and shade to atmosphere and fusion of colour, and preserve at the same time true proportions and flexibility in nude.⁷

² Both these little pieces have been successively called by the names of Raphael, F. Francia, and Lorenzo Costa ; and are the finest specimens of Albertinelli when he strove to rival Fra Bartolommeo. In the Sacrifice, Abraham holds his knife to Isaac's throat, as the angel stops him and points to the lamb in a distant bush. The angel's wings are touched in gold.

A boy-angel and part of a second with flowers, with a piece of the dress of the Virgin, the rest of whose form and a piece of the Redeemer are in No. 324, whilst the third bit (No. 325) shows an angle of Christ's dress, and another boy-angel. These were perhaps done during the partnership with the Frate. These numbers at Carlsruhe are under the name of Fra Bartolommeo, but the drawing and execution are Mariotto's, the flesh lights being red, the shadows of a greyish blue, and the vehicle viscous.

At the very last, and when one might think that Albertinelli must have surrendered all hope of receiving useful inspirations from the study of great contemporary masterpieces, he was induced to proceed to Rome, whither, according to Vasari, he journeyed by way of Viterbo, after having finished there a picture begun by Fra Bartolommeo in S. M. della Quercia. He had scarcely given the final touch to a Marriage of S. Catherine for Fra Mariano at S. Salvestro, when he was seized with an illness which so prostrated him that he was brought back on a litter to Florence, where he died on the 5th of November 1515.¹

Some doubtful classifications in public and private collections make the following list desirable :—

Florence. Uffizi.—No. 1183. The Dead Christ, on the ground, at the foot of the Cross, surrounded by the Evangelist, the Maries and other females. Unimportant, but suggesting memories of Raphael's studies for the same subject. Not, certainly, by Mariotto.²

Florence. Prince Corsini.—No. 20. Wood. Painted from a cartoon assigned to Raphael in the Academy of Arts at Florence, by an artist subsequent to Ridolfo Ghirlandaio.³

S. Petersburg. Hermitage.—No. 21. Named M. Albertinelli. Marriage of S. Catherine in the presence of SS. John Evangelist, Nicholas, Stephen, Francis, Jerome, John Baptist, and two others. Wood, oil, figures large as life; formerly in the Braschi Palace at Rome. In its present condition, being much restored, this is a mixture of Sogliani and Bazzi, the style of the latter, especially clear in the Virgin and four principal saints at her sides, and in the sky with its dark cloud; the rest more Florentine, the S. Catherine particularly coarse and heavy. Age and retouching have changed the colour. Hence lack of harmony and transparency.

S. Petersburg. Leuchtenberg Gallery.—No. 43. Named Gaudenzio Ferrari. Wood, oil, figures almost life-size. Virgin and Child between S. Joseph and the sleeping infant Baptist, in a landscape, with angels playing instruments in the air to the left. Here the stamp of Mariotto is more marked than in the foregoing, but the surface has also been deeply damaged by retouching. The painter seems to be Sogliani or some other imitator of the same sort.

S. Petersburg. Prince Gortschakoff.—Round of the Virgin, Child, infant Baptist, and two female Saints. Wood, oil. The composition, after the fashion of the Frate, the forms and faces reminiscent of Raphael; the young S. John heavy and grotesque. The want of feeling and other features here betray Andrea del Sarto's pupil Puligo.

martyrdom, and S. Ottilia, with a dagger in her throat (wood, oil, figures almost large as life). The picture has been unevenly cleaned, the distance and foreground (the latter especially) being much abraded. The flesh shadows are slightly rubbed away, and hence a little cool and grey. Purchased at Florence in 1832.

London. National Gallery.—[No. 645]. Virgin and Child, once in possession of Mr. Beaucousin in Paris, like a Mariotto, but possibly by Sogliani when imitating Fra Bartolommeo.

Paris. Ex-Pourtales Gallery.—Wood, oil. Virgin, Child, the boy S. John, and S. Joseph in distance. Named Albertinelli. This is a rudely executed adaptation of Mariotto and Fra Bartolommeo by Sogliani.¹

In the number of Mariotto's pupils, Vasari names Visino, whom elsewhere he has called a disciple of Franciabigio.² Amongst his performances the historian mentions one "of Christ taken from the Cross together with the thieves, in which there is an ingenious and intricate arrangement of ladders."³ This description points to a panel now in the Galleria del Seminario at Venice,⁴ not unlike the joint Descent from the Cross by Filippino and Perugino, but carried out with a view to emulate Andrea del Sarto and Michael Angelo. Visino thus proves how an inferior talent assumes the garb of better ones, with a strange diversity at various periods.

A Virgin and Child, classed not improperly as Pontormo in the Academy of Arts of Bologna, but attributed by many to Visino or Bugiardini, is another example of the mixture above noted. There is something of the Michaelangesque, a little of Fra Bartolommeo, more of Del Sarto, particularly in tone. The authorship may therefore be the same as at Venice. But Visino is not alone in suggesting reflections on the productions of Mariotto's shop. Bugiardini, Innocenzo da Imola, and Franciabigio having been there, may all more or less have taken a part in the pictures that issued from it. Malvasia is inclined to doubt Vasari's assertion as to the connection between Albertinelli and Innocenzo, and perhaps his Florentine bias may be due to other causes. But setting him aside, and considering such pieces as raise doubts whether they are by Albertinelli or his journeymen, we may form a class apart, in which traits of Albertinelli and his disciples are commingled so that the result is unlike Mariotto absolutely, and also unlike what the several subordinates were when they assumed their independence. One of these is a Virgin and Child in the collection of the Duca Corsini at Florence, a round to which graceful grouping and a beautiful landscape, on the model of Mariotto and the Frate, give a certain interest, but in which paltry nude, pinched features, and affected melancholy are to be observed. These we are taught to consider as peculiarities in the first manner of Giuliano Bugiardini, leading us to the belief that the Madonna of the Duca Corsini may be his when under the influence of Albertinelli.¹ At Turin, too, is another specimen of the same kind, a round of the Madonna with a standing Child, the young Baptist, and S. Joseph leading the ass.² The Virgin's face varies little from Mariotto's type, whilst the aged head and short stature of the Christ, and the vulgar heaviness of the little S. John disclose the derivation of Bugiardini from a school where he was enabled to assume something of the air of the great masters without much original talent. Both at Turin and Florence, the colour is cold and a little raw.

Giuliano Bugiardini, whose earliest period of artistic development has thus been traced, was older by three years than Mariotto, and was born in 1471 in the suburbs of Florence.³

The diligence which he exhibited in the Garden of the Medici endeared him to Michael Angelo, whom he followed into the shop of Domenico Ghirlandaio.⁴ He afterwards performed the duties of assistant to Mariotto at Florence and Gualfonda, and was one of those whom Buonarrotti uselessly employed in Rome when he first undertook the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel.⁵ During a long service in irresponsible capacities, he was admitted to have been known for assiduity and precision in transferring the drawings of others to panel.⁶ When he advanced late in life to an independent position, his ability in undertaking original subjects was necessarily slight, and he confined himself to the handling of the simplest incidents.

The Virgin and Child, alone or accompanied by the little Baptist, sometimes attended by saints, was his usual theme; illustrations of which we find in the Madonna at the Uffizi known for years as by

Leonardo ; in a Virgin, Child, and Baptist at the Museum of Leipzig,¹ a Nativity at Berlin, and a Marriage of S. Catherine at the Pinacoteca of Bologna.

Bugiardini did not fail occasionally to discern the graceful and appropriate in his contemporaries. His grouping in the Madonna of the Uffizi is not without merit. The Virgin's face, with its broken outlines and wasted angular features, is cast in the mould of Leonardo's nun at the Pitti,² though tinged with a sickly melancholy. Her action is not without sentiment, her head being pensively bent, and her hand pointing at the breast which the Child has just abandoned. There is even a Raphaelesque movement in the Boy, heavy and round though His shape may be. The drapery gives a good account of the frame and limbs beneath, as it does in Mariotto and the Frate, but is rendered more after Michael Angelo's fashion. The colour is full of light, of good impasto, and fused like that of Albertinelli. We mark in fact the effect which a constant observation of the best models produces on Bugiardini.³ In the Leipzig Madonna, greatly as it has been injured, the same dependence is manifested ; and in a pleasant landscape Giuliano seeks to tint the hillsides with natural variety according to their distance, and to give depth on the principles of Da Vinci. But his types are more vulgar and fleshy, his drawing more incorrect, his drapery more festooned than at the Uffizi.⁴ The Berlin Nativity, of better preservation, is composed and painted more particularly in the method of Mariotto and the Frate, in a strong low key of harmonious tone, the figures still faulty and short.⁵ A more effective distribution, better forms and truer proportions in the Marriage of S. Catherine at Bologna, are insufficient to compensate for the bricky tinge and rawness of a picture marked by something like the manner in which Innocenzo da Imola afterwards betrays his contact with the Florentines.⁶

⁴ Leipzig Museum, No. 143. Catalogued "Giulio Romano," the inscription having been altered from "JUL. FLOR. F." to "JUL. RO. F." The Virgin holds the Infant in her arms, the Baptist in front pointing to him and holding the reed cross, the drawing heavy, puffy, and incorrect. The nimbuses have been removed ; and many parts, ex. gr. the shadow on the Virgin's cheek and neck, the Child's hand, and the foot of the Baptist, are repainted.

⁶ Bologna Pinacoteca. The Virgin has the Child on her knee, who gives the ring to S. Catherine, S. Antony with one leg on the step of the throne at the left side ; the little Baptist at the Virgin's feet. Wood, oil, all but life-size ; inscribed : "JUL. FLO. FAC."

Another phase in Bugiardini's character is to be noticed in genuine works in which the personages, instead of being short or puffy, are, on the contrary, thin and small. The tendency in these is to remind of Leonardo and Raphael, and, in certain motions, of Michael Angelo, the resulting cento being highly finished and far from unpleasant, though wanting in the stamp of independence and originality. In the Gallery of Signor Battista Mansi at Lucca, a Holy Family, inscribed with Giuliano's name and the date of 1520,¹ shows us the Saviour plucking dates from a palm and giving them to the Virgin, by whose side the infant Baptist kneels. The landscape is the old one of the Frate, but the composition is a mixture of one by Leonardo and Raphael's Madonna del Cardellino, the faces displaying an effort to attain the gentleness of Sanzio's.² A variation of this, at the Padri Filippini of Bologna, is equally pretty and soft in colour; smaller and most carefully handled.³

Michaelangelesque attitude is observable in the strained grace of the principal figure in a round at the Zambeccari Gallery in Bologna, where the Virgin sits on a bank with a book in her hand near a grove of trees, and turns at the call of the Infant Christ, who has caught sight of the young Baptist coming.⁴ The style is otherwise similar to that of the Virgin at Lucca. It may be recognised in a round at the Hermitage of S. Petersburg falsely assigned to Pacchia.⁵

The number of Bugiardini's panels in Bologna might lead to the inference that during the troubles of the years previous to 1530 he remained at a safe distance from Florence. His stay at the latter place in 1526 is known to a certainty by the record of payments for decorating the balustrade of the rostrum in the Palace of the Signori.⁶ After the peace he was constantly Michael Angelo's companion at Florence, and was wont to divert his melancholy by harmless vanity and amusing self-sufficiency. He had the conceit of a Florentine Boswell, following Buonarrotti like a shadow, and sunning himself in the borrowed light.¹ When the statues of the Day and Night at S. Lorenzo were finished in 1531, Bugiardini copied the latter on the wing of a triptych, with the accompaniment of a lantern in the form used for trapping birds at dark; an idea as ludicrous, says Vasari, as if he had copied a nightcap, a pillow, or a bat.² With some difficulty he once obtained a sitting from Michael Angelo for his likeness, and, having kept him two hours, produced a portrait in which one eye seemed awkwardly transposed into one of the temples. Nothing would induce him to correct the error, for if error there be, he said, it is in the original.³ The portrait is supposed to be that of the Louvre, which certainly has something of Bugiardini, though feeble even for him, and of a hard, dull, reddish tone.⁴

A letter of Giovan Battista di Paolo Mini, dated September 29, 1531, addressed to Baccio Valori, tells of a visit from Michael Angelo to Mini, together with Bugiardini; and a second, interchanged between the same persons in the following October, mentions the Rape of Dinah, which Giuliano was then finishing from a design by Fra Bartolommeo.⁵ The picture is now in the Belvedere at Vienna; and done clearly from the Frate's sketch, but without style or harmony of colour,⁶ and far less successful than the Martyrdom of S. Catherine, taken about the same time from a composition of Michael Angelo's for the Cappella Rucellai at S. Maria Novella of Florence. It is a pity, indeed, that so grand a distribution, one so complete in the relation of the groups to the Bugiardini also copied Raphael's Leo X., substituting Cardinal Cibo for Cardinal de' Rossi (ibid., vol. x., p. 350), and he took the likeness of the historian Guicciardini (circa 1534? VASARI, ibid., p. 349). These are all missing, as well as the frescoes at Baccio Valori's country-house and other things too numerous to mention (VASARI, vol. x., pp. 347, 348, 349, 350). We have seen that he restored the four battle pieces of Uccello at Gualfonda (see antea). [Bugiardini's copy of Raphael's Leo X. is probably now No. 584 of the Corsini Gallery, Rome.]

Few of Bugiardini's panels or canvases in addition to those we have mentioned remain to be noticed. Bugiardini died ⁸ at a good old age on the 17th of February 1554.⁹

Formerly in the Cappella Castellani. The character of the figures here is long, dry, and lean, the drawing somewhat in the style of David and Benedetto Ghirlandaio. Were Bugiardini proved to be the author, we should take this as an example of his style as he issued from the school of Domenico.

CHAPTER XVIII

FRANCIABIGIO

FRANCESCO DI CRISTOFANO, commonly called Franciabigio, was a more finished artist, and did more honour to the teaching of Mariotto Albertinelli, than Bugiardini. He was born in 1482,¹ and studied at the Brancacci. But when Michael Angelo exhibited his cartoon of the "War of Pisa" in the Sala del Papa at Florence in 1505, Franciabigio swelled the current of the crowd which flocked there with easel and portfolio. The acquaintance of Andrea del Sarto which he then made subsequently ripened into friendship; though circumstances kept the youths for a time in the workshops of different masters. The first frequented the atelier of Piero di Cosimo; the second visited that of Albertinelli; and the result was the infusion of different elements into their respective styles.²

Franciabigio is generally known by a manner resembling that of his friend; but an extant panel amongst those assigned to his early period would prove that his original tendency was to imitate Albertinelli, so as in some respects to resemble Giuliano Bugiardini. Of two subjects which were once preserved in S. Piero Maggiore at Florence, one is the Annunciation recently purchased for the Museum of Turin,³ in which Vasari admires the ready flight of the angel, the graceful attitude of the Virgin as she kneels to receive the salutation, and the ingenious perspective of a block of houses. He neglects to add that in the sky to the left the Eternal gives His blessing from a cloud in which pretty cherubs fly; and sends down the Dove with a ray from His glory. In considering the question of authorship, we note that the ruddy flesh tints with their cool shadows are in some measure like those of Pontormo. But the broad mask of the faces in the Virgin and Angel, the bony shape and small pinched features, the trite and straightly-lined drapery, seem a modification of Bugiardini's by a man of superior attainments. The sombreness of the colour is apparently derived from Leonardo through Mariotto, and the buildings, so justly praised for their perspective, are not dissimilar from those of Del Sarto.¹ Everything thus points to Franciabigio.

² Vasari says that Franciabigio only learnt for some months from Mariotto. The effect at all events was powerful and lasting.

³ Turin Museum [No. 121]. Figures half the size of life,

Another contribution to the embellishment of the altars in S. Piero Maggiore was, according to the historian, the Virgin with the Saviour grasping her neck, and a boy Baptist playing with Him,² a panel which has been missing for many years, though quietly ensconced at the Uffizi under the title of Madonna del Pozzo.³ Passavant very properly expels this from the catalogue of Raphael's works,⁴ though it is of a period when Sanzio left a clear impress on Florentine art. The playful clinging of the Redeemer to His mother's bosom, as if He had sprung there into charming security at the approach of the Baptist, the Leonardesque turn of her movement, are quite as characteristic of Franciabigio when his style was not yet very distant from that of Bugiardini, as are the round head of the Virgin, the forms of the Infants, and the dresses. In these we meet with a cento of Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto, whilst the landscape is still nearer to one by the Frate, and the surface has the polished enamel of the Florentines of this time. The type, shape, and figures are almost as much Franciabigio's as are those of the Bathsheba at the Dresden Gallery, or the frescoes in the Scalzo.⁵ Diligence and a cautious attention to the rules of proportion were, in Vasari's opinion, the qualities of Franciabigio's oldest creations.⁶ They would have been more enticing if hardness and ungainly heaviness had not disfigured them. But, independently of their intrinsic value, they interest us by laying open the current of thought and of study in the master, and by revealing the influences exerted on him by the teacher from whom he learnt to admire Fra Bartolommeo, and the friend towards whom he was attracted by conformity of taste and inclinations. They cause us also to remember that Leonardo and Raphael were the idols of their fellow artists, and that they more or less affected most of the rising men of their age. We shall see that it was to be Franciabigio's constant chance to have his best performances called after Raphael and Del Sarto. That they should have received the last of these names might seem an easy consequence of the connection between two men who were comrades at school and kept a joint atelier afterwards. But that the first should have been still more frequently used is a distinction of no common kind.

We have no sure grounds for assuming any fixed date for the association with Andrea del Sarto ; Vasari's statements being too general to permit of any safe deductions on that point, and Franciabigio's works being from the beginning affected by the acquaintance of his future companion. We are inclined, however, to place before the Sposalizio of 1513, in the court of the Servi at Florence, the Virgin and Child between SS. John Evangelist and Job, now at the Uffizi, the two angels at the sides of Sansovino's S. Nicholas in S. Spirito, and the Calumny of Apelles in the Pitti. Reminiscent still of the masters we have mentioned, and extremely smooth in surface, they are, all three, in a state that almost forbids criticism, but the Calumny is put together with figures of good though short and fat proportions, and outlined with a view to reproduce a well-fed and somewhat puffy, not a finely-bred or noble, nature.¹

That neither Del Sarto nor Franciabigio were asked to paint the curtains of the altarpiece by Filippino and Perugino at the Servi, as Vasari pretends,² is testified by the records of the convent, which contain the payment of that work to Andrea di Cosimo.³ That Franciabigio was employed at the Servi in 1513 is testified by documents. It is credible that about that time a partnership existed between him and Del Sarto ; and it cannot be denied that he had then acquired much more skill than is shown in the panels of his younger days.

In the court of the Servi, the High Priest unites Joseph and Mary in front of a noble palace, on the walls of which bas-reliefs represent the Sacrifice of Isaac, Adam and Eve near the Tree of Knowledge, and Moses receiving the Tables of the Law. The joy of the grey-haired S. Joseph is tempered by the expectation of the buffet from the best man, who stands behind him. The despair of the unsuccessful suitors is well depicted in one who wrings his hands to the left, as well as in a second, who sits and breaks the rod that would not blossom. To the right, two youths stand with their arms interlaced, and a female chides her crying child.

As the fresco was all but finished, a day of great solemnity for the Servites came on, and some of the monks took upon themselves to remove the screens which covered it. The wrath of Franciabigio was such that he walked straight from his lodging to the convent, and with a mason's hammer almost struck out the heads of the Virgin and some males and females. This act of choler was so much approved by Franciabigio's fellow-craftsmen that none of them would consent to restore the parts he had destroyed, and though as late as 1515 he was peremptorily ordered to put the wall into its original state, he successfully resisted every threat; and the fresco remains to this day in the condition in which he left it.¹ Enough has been preserved to justify Vasari's eulogy of the artist's diligence; and the soft contrasts of tints as well as the vague fusion of colour which rivals that of Del Sarto in rosy airiness and transparent delicacy, is an instance of the ability he possessed, and the great practice he had attained. The composition is correct according to the most rigid maxims, but there is a stilted affectation in some poses which cannot be commended. The drapery is fair, but has too many straight or parallel folds. The nude is well proportioned, but the drawing of the parts might be more careful, and the transitions from light to shadow should be better defined. Franciabigio, however, never did anything better, and the Sposalizio of the Servi is his masterpiece in fresco.

The two angels likewise noticed by VASARI, vol. ix., p. 97, are half as large as life, one with a lily, the other with a book ; the surface cracked or blackened in the shadows.

The Calumny [No. 427], at the Pitti, a small piece, has become sombre, and is excessively retouched, but was originally of the same class as the foregoing. The initials "F. B." are on the plinths of the distant pillars, and an inscription at the base runs thus : "CLAUDITE, QUI RECITIS POPULUS HIS VOCIBUS AURES SIC MANIBUS LAPSUM NOSTRIS PINXIT APELLES."

Whilst he was thus giving evidence of talent in mural decoration, he strove to gain a reputation as a portrait-painter, and in that capacity achieved perhaps the most flattering of successes.

Every frequenter of the Louvre knows a sombre portrait of a young man standing, with his elbow on a ledge, at an opening through which a landscape and two little figures are seen. His hollow eyes are sunken under a marked, bony brow. His hair, cap, and dress are black. The forms of the face and hands are scant in flesh, and broken in contour, the cavities and retreating parts in deep unfathomable shadow.² Hundreds of students have copied this piece, round the melancholy charm of which a halo has been thrown by the name of Raphael. Yet critics have long agreed that that name is not to be sustained; and in its stead have called that of Francesco Francia, whose technical system is different, or of Bugiardini, whose powers are too humble. The most obvious objection to the nomenclature hitherto preferred is derived from the essentially Florentine character of the likeness and its accessories. It discloses the studious effort of a highly accurate draughtsman, deeply impressed by the examples of Leonardo and his mode of handling, and familiar with the methods applied in more than one of Da Vinci's heads.³

It defines a skeleton of bone like that in the Virgin of the Turin Annunciation. Its features, instead of being simplified into grandeur, as Raphael would have done, are elaborated to the loss of simplicity, full of research rather than of feeling. One might apply to the author Vasari's opinion of Franciabigio; "a man of slight refinement, because he laboured too much, producing with a certain hardness, but cautious and diligent in the measure of proportions."¹ The colour is of a low tinted, hard, and glassy enamel unknown to Raphael, its shadows thin and dark, its execution that of Franciabigio, and betraying an acquaintance with that of Andrea del Sarto.

Had not other portraits of the same class presented themselves for comparison with this of the Louvre, it would have been becoming to put the question more in the light of an inquiry. But a whole series of similar ones exists; some of them catalogued as by Franciabigio, and bearing his monogram; others with a similar cognisance, yet classed as by Raphael or Andrea del Sarto.

The first, known for centuries as Franciabigio's, is that in the Pitti Gallery at Florence, of a youth in cap, tunic, and mantle, at a window through which we look at a pleasant, but not brightly lighted, undulating distance. A glove is in his right hand. The left gesticulates naturally. The pose is free, showing to advantage a handsome and juvenile person; the face is open, and the eyes beaming with a suppressed smile. A good flow of hair falls from his black cap to the dark dress that covers the shoulders.² On the border is the monogram twice repeated and the date: "A. S. [anno salutis] MDXIII." Restorers have seriously interfered with the beauty of the figure; and the flesh has become tawny from time and retouching, but the style is here and at the Louvre perfectly alike, though it betrays a more recent date, and a more habitual skill in the painter.

Superior to this of the Pitti, in every sense, is the fine portrait at Stanstead House,³ which Mr. Fuller Maitland attributes to Raphael in spite of Franciabigio's monogram. We cannot affect to condemn the reasons which induce the owner of such a masterpiece to cling to the name of Sanzio, when we remember that that of the Louvre has been for years so-called; and the stamp of art is similar and discloses the same hand in both. Whilst in the latter Franciabigio exhibits the diligence, the precision and power of a man full of eagerness to excel, as well as to embody the maxims of Leonardo, the former discloses less carefulness, but more self-possession, a greater ease in the use of colours of a solid texture, more elasticity and good-breeding in the pose, beauty in the contour and modelling in form. In this very progress lies, we admit, an additional ground for the supposition of Raphael's authorship. But the execution is not less decisive against Sanzio at Stanstead House than at the Louvre, and the Leonardesque system as derived from the companion of Fra Bartolommeo, or even from the contemplation of the Frate's own creations, is so clear that, independently of Franciabigio's sign-manual, no doubt can be allowed to exist as to his right to this piece. So perfect indeed is the coincidence between the technical habits of Della Porta and those of Franciabigio here, that years have caused their works to undergo exactly similar changes. We have seen the flesh tints of the Frate gain a strong low tinge and dark shadows that rob the surface of its original transparence and softness. This is what time has done for Franciabigio in this instance, without, however, depriving him of any essential charm. The undulating landscape behind the figure is of the pleasing nature observable in all those of Fra Bartolommeo and Raphael; the slopes neatly cut up by paths, dotted with trees and houses, and the vale parted by a stream flowing gently through meadows and crossed by a bridge. Every detail is touched with taste and accuracy. The person at the opening seems disinclined to enjoy these beauties. His age may be from twenty-five to thirty. The dark cap that casts its shadow on his forehead covers long locks of brown hair, and his dress, with ample sleeves, is adorned with an order of knighthood. His regular features and penetrant eyes are slightly contracted by melancholy thoughts, and he gazes at the spectator as he abstractedly holds a letter in both hands; repeating inwardly perhaps the motto written on the parapet: "TAR UBLIA. CHI. BIEN AIMA." Of the note itself the words are illegible. A date 1514 (? 1516) is on it, but no clue to the identity of the person to whom it is addressed.¹

Next in order to this, and in the same manner, though much restored, is a half-length of a man at a window, in the collection of Lord Yarborough in London, supposed to be Antonio Cardosso of Milan, by Raphael. Yet here, as at the Pitti, are the interwoven ciphers of Franciabigio at each side of the date "A. S. MDXVI." The person reproduced is a jeweller, about fifty years old or more, portly, shaven, and of full flesh; his cap on, his dress of a brown coffee-colour. In his left hand he holds a plate of glass on which he has been tracing lines with a ring to try the genuineness of a diamond. Three other rings are on the window-sill. The execution is already freer than in the panel of Mr. Fuller Maitland.¹

More interesting again, because we stumble on a portrait of which Vasari has spoken, is the factor of Pier Francesco de' Medici, ascribed to Andrea del Sarto, in the state drawing-room at Windsor Castle. Though restoring has left blemishes on particular spots, and the colour has the dinginess of age, especially in the shadows, there is no mistaking the hand of Franciabigio, whose monogram also is clearly outlined on the curved blade of a chopper hanging with another instrument of the same kind from a nail in a wall. The man is about fifty, in the usual dress of the period, with his head covered, writing in a book, a bunch of keys hanging from his wrist; an ink-bottle in his left hand; a shield in the border of stone upon which he rests bearing the six golden balls of the Medici; and an olive-branch denoting the peaceful nature of his occupation. Originally in the collection of Charles I., this fine half-length is singularly ready in movement, laid in with a full sweep of strongly consistent colour, in which we miss too obviously an absence of transparence in tones merging from fair yellow in flesh light to a cool grey in the half-tones, and black in the shadows. We thus perceive how Franciabigio modifies his style, and gradually disimproves by assuming bolder and easier habits.² It is in this phase that he found himself when he finished a bust of a male in a cap and dark-laced dress, with falling auburn hair, catalogued as by Sebastian del Piombo at the Berlin Museum, a thoughtful face, well drawn and modelled, and of substantial impasto.³ The latest example of the series is the half-length in the same collection, of a man almost in full front, with a pen in his right hand, and his left arm on a desk, done with great freedom; and less pleasing in tone than successful in the swing of the pose and knack of the handling. The date of 1522 and the monogram leave no doubt that we see in this the most advanced and least perfect thing of its kind by our artist.⁴

² On the back of the panel is the royal mark R. C. surmounted by the royal crown. The portrait is in the catalogue of King Charles' Collection (copied in WAAGEN, Treasures, vol. ii., p. 478), under A. del Sarto's name. VASARI speaks of it (vol. ix., p. 103). The monogram is upside down on the chopper. The figure size of life. All the flesh shadows darkened, and part of the left cheek, right hand, and dress, restored. The background is a wall, the writing in the book not legible, and probably never intended to be so.

Whilst devoting himself, as occasion required, to portraits, Franciabigio did not neglect the more difficult exercise of fresco. A much injured "Cena" in S. Giovanni Battista della Calza,¹ and another in S. Maria de' Candeli, with the initials of his name, due perhaps to the industry of his assistants as much as to his own, exhibit his talent in a less favourable light than at the Servi in 1513; whilst an Annunciation, a Crucifixion between S. Thomas of Villanuova and S. Antony of Padua, a triad with S. Augustin, and a Nativity, also at S. Maria de' Candeli, serve to illustrate the carelessness to which men of fair attainments may occasionally succumb.² The truth may be that there was much in the occupations of artists at this time to favour the growth of slight or scenic painting; and when we find that Franciabigio was invariably one of those engaged on public occasions, whether mournful or the reverse, in which decorations were required, as on the funeral of Julian de' Medici in 1516, and the Wedding of Lorenzo de' Medici in 1518,³ we seek no other reasons for the hasty manner which he occasionally assumed.

At the Scalzo in 1518 and 1519, Franciabigio was employed to fill the void created by the absence of Andrea del Sarto. But previously to that time, and possibly when still in partnership, he might have had a share in the Baptism of Christ which is framed in one of the compartments next to the allegory of Charity. It has been usual to give this feeble number of a great series to Andrea del Sarto;⁴ though the drawing is loose, defining short fat forms without any of the vigour which we expect from Andrea; and were it even proved that the commission was his, we should suppose the work to have been done with the help of Franciabigio, when both men lived in common at their shop in the Piazza del Grano.⁵

In the Departure of S. John for the Desert, and the Meeting of Christ with the Baptist, the figures are designed with neglectful ease, in proportions far too curt and pinguid to please the eye; and the absence rest of a cold tone, at one painting; the landscape clear and pleasant. A paper on the desk contains the monogram of Franciabigio and the words: "1522, A DI 24 D'OTTOBRE."

¹ This fresco is in the refectory, and has been injured by damp. It is mentioned by VASARI, vol. ix., p. 100.

² S. Maria de' Candeli is now the Liceo Militare in Via de' Pilastri. The Last Supper is in the usual form, with Judas alone at the front side of the table. Near him is the inscription: "F. B." The figures are almost life-size and rudely reminiscent of Fra Bartolommeo. SS. Nicholas and Monica, near the Last Supper, are a little better perhaps; but all the other work in the refectory is poorer, and probably by pupils, of whom the chief may have been Sogliani.

³ VASARI, vol. ix., pp. 101-12; vol. xi., p. 203.

⁴ VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 254-5.

of breadth and mass in light and shadows which alone produce a perfect semblance of relief, as well as coarse features and festooned draperies, place Franciabigio in unfavourable contrast with his rival.¹

When both men subsequently competed (1521) at the Medici Palace in Poggio a Cajano, the same comparison might have been made; and although Franciabigio showed that he possessed the power of animating his personages, and distributing them with propriety, he not only proclaimed a decline from the standard erected by himself at the Servi, but he fell into greater coarseness and heaviness than was consistent with his duty. His Triumph of Cicero, with all its apparatus of obelisks, rostra and temples, is coloured without much harmony or transparence; and the supernatural proportions of his people are common and square. But in spite of this he surpasses Pontormo, and shines by the side of the later Allori; and the general division of the decoration which he planned is not altogether amiss.²

Franciabigio's endeavour at last was, it is clear, to make a livelihood by rapidity of hand. On Vasari's own showing, his first wish had been to lay a strong foundation by the constant study of nude and anatomy,³ but finally he accepted on principle every order that was given to him; having come to the conclusion that he had not the stuff for rivalling men of superior genius. Still, to the last he kept at a respectable level, especially in small things, and the Bath of Queen Bathsheba and her Nymphs, with the Royal Feast at the Dresden Museum which he finished in 1523, secures respectful if not unconditional admiration. We may object to the short stature and puffiness of the females, yet praise the vigour and lucidity of the colour, the freedom of the touch, the beauty of the composition, and the natural force and truth of the movements. We observe, as before, a style ingeniously formed on the models of Fra Bartolommeo and Andrea del Sarto.⁴

The death of Franciabigio took place at Florence on the 14th of January 1525 (n. s.).⁵

The catalogue of works unnoticed in the foregoing text will be short:—

² Andrea del Sarto did his fresco in 1521, as is shown by the inscription, and VASARI says he and Franciabigio painted together (vol. ix., p. 101). Pontormo's work dates 1532, Allori's 1582. The waggon roof, with white relief ornament, on gold ground, and the Medici arms are Franciabigio's.

It seems appropriate to close the list of men who assumed the manner of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto with Giovanni Antonio Sogliani, who first learnt the elements from Credi, and then sought to gain the qualities which he did not find in his own master by looking at the works of most of the great Florentines. Sogliani was born in 1492;² he stayed in Credi's atelier twenty-four years,³ was registered in the Guild of Florence in 1522, and must therefore have been apprenticed at a very tender age.⁴ Few of his pictures have dates, except the Martyrdom of S. Arcadius of 1521 in S. Lorenzo, and S. Dominic's Miracle of the Bread, a fresco of 1536 in S. Marco, at Florence. But some of his numerous panels at Pisa are done after the return of Perino del Vaga from Genoa (circa 1528), and others after the death of Andrea del Sarto in 1531.

We have had occasion to mention his name in connection with Credi's least successful productions. We see how he could imitate that artist in the poor copy of his Nativity at Berlin,¹ and ape his smoothness of tone in the somewhat empty lucid colour of a S. Martin, on one of the pilasters of the church of Orsanmichele.² In the Martyrdom of S. Arcadius on the Cross, at S. Lorenzo in Florence, Sogliani has occasion to introduce a broad exhibition of nude, in which he betrays the study of Mariotto, Franciabigio, and Andrea del Sarto, preserving at the same time an exceedingly even and polished surface of reddish tone. It is in good condition, handled with tolerable judgment; and not wanting in life, yet without the stamp of originality.³ In the Assumption at S. Giovanni Battista, contiguous to the Spedale di Bonifacio, there is something incongruous and fantastic in the arrangement of a glory in which the Eternal floats above the Virgin, holding up the train of her cloak, whilst His own mantle is raised by angels. On the foreground, the group of saints and the prostrate Adam disclose a judicious clinging to nature, correct outlines of limb and extremity, fair movement, but square shapes, with a scruple of Fra Bartolommeo's grandeur in air and drapery. The mask of the Eternal is reminiscent of Mariotto, and traces of Credi are in the puffy contours of the angels.

In colouring this subject Sogliani strives also to master the methods of the Frate and of Albertinelli, combining them with the excessive smoothness of Lorenzo, his teacher, and a misty vapour known only by the Italian word sfumato.⁴

At S. Jacopo sopr' Arno, a Trinity, with three Saints, illustrates the same phase in Sogliani, though raw and feebly done at one painting.⁵ But the best example of it is the Sacrifice of Noah, in the choir of the Pisa Duomo, in which the males have a bold masculine strength, and the females compensate for vulgarity by feeling.⁶

Two figures of Cain and Abel in this cathedral, and a Virgin, under a conical daïs, with numerous saints, are of a later date.¹ The last indeed had been commenced by Perino del Vaga, and presents for that reason perhaps an unusual slenderness in the forms, and a composition akin to those of Rosso, but the system on which the whole is coloured is true to the maxims handed down through Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto from Da Vinci; and the deep brown tone has been darkened by the effects of age.²

Having in this instance taken a subject to finish which a Raphaelesque Florentine had sketched out, Sogliani next attempted the Virgin with Saints at the altar of the Madonna delle Grazie in the Duomo of Pisa, a panel which Andrea del Sarto had begun for the Compagnia di S. Francesco. In most of the figures he kept the outlines of the original cartoon, except perhaps in the kneeling S. Jerome on the foreground, who is colossal and heavy.³ He reverted to his own distinct manner in the Miracle at S. Marco, where S. Dominic is seated with his brethren whilst the food is brought in by two angels, and in a Crucifixion with Saints in a lunette above it.⁴

His friendship for Credi lasted till the death of the latter, in proof of which it is only necessary to state that Sogliani witnessed Lorenzo's will in 1531.⁵ From that time till 1544, when he died,⁶ he doubtless furnished many pieces of which we can only register the following:—

Anghiari. Chiesa di S. Maria del Fosso.—Last Supper (not seen). Described by VASARI, vol. ix., pp. 44–5, and by REUMONT, Life of Del Sarto (Leipzig, 1835), pp. 164–5, as a panel in oil, on the model of Del Sarto's Cena in S. Salvi at Florence.

Fiesole. S. Domenico.—Adoration of the Magi, finished, according to VASARI, vol. ix., p. 43, by Santo di Tito. This bears no trace any longer of the hand of Sogliani.

² Wood, oil, figures life-size. Two angels supporting the conical daïs are a distant echo of those of the Frate. S. Catherine and S. Barbara, seated in the foreground, are of fair proportions and in easy pose. S. Torpé to the right, with his shield, is grand enough, S. John the Baptist, opposite to him at the other side, too slender in contrast. The other saints are five in number, amongst them Peter, Francis, and a female. The colour is sombre, but careful, fused, and sfumato.

³ This picture (wood, oil, life-size) was long in the Compagnia di S. Francesco (VASARI, vol. ix., p. 47; vol. viii., p. 288), and was transferred to the Duomo in 1785, the Compagnia having in the meantime been suppressed (MORRONA, Pis. Illus., ubi sup., vol. i., p. 207). The Virgin is enthroned in a landscape, with the Child, between the young Baptist and an angel playing a viol. In front, besides the S. Jerome, are SS. Nicholas and Bartholomew, erect.

⁴ Besides the Magdalen and S. John Evangelist, S. Antonino and S. Catherine of Siena kneel at the sides. The date of 1536 is on the frescoes, the lower parts of which are injured. Sogliani had intended to paint the Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes, but was prevented by the fathers of the convent (VASARI, vol. ix., pp. 47–8).

⁶ He died July 17, 1544. Tav. Alfab.

Florence. Monache della Crocetta.—A Last Supper, in oil (VASARI, vol. ix., pp. 43–4), much injured.

Florence. Ex-Palazzo Taddeo (now a magazine, Via de' Ginori).—Fresco of the Crucifixion, greatly damaged.

Florence. Uffizi.—[No. 166]. Virgin with the Child blessing the young Baptist. Wood, oil. The origin of Sogliani's education under Credi is marked in the puffy forms of the children. The execution is that of a follower of Mariotto. The panel is the best of the following series at Paris, Brescia, and London.

Paris. Louvre.—Virgin, Child, and Baptist. Noticed in "Mariotto."

Brescia. Galleria Tosi.—Nativity. See antea in "Fra Bartolommeo," p. 474.

London. National Gallery.—[No. 645]. Ex-Beaucousin collection. Virgin and Child. See antea in "Mariotto."

Florence. Duca Corsini. Porta al Prato.—Virgin with the Child and the infant Baptist at her knee. A genuine Sogliani, of heavy aspect and hard diaphanous tone. Wood, oil, figures half as large as life.

Brussels. Museum.—No. 305. "Unknown." Virgin with the Child, to whom the young Baptist presents a cross; small panel in oil, in Sogliani's manner when still reminiscent of Credi. The composition is almost similar to the following.

Turin. Museum.—No. 123. "Cesare da Sesto." Virgin, Child, and Baptist, by Sogliani or one of his followers.

Brussels. Museum.—No. 309. Holy Family, with the initials: "M. A.," suggestive for this of Mariotto, but not unlike a work of the school which Sogliani cultivated; perhaps by Mariano da Pescia.

Florence. Academy of Arts.—Virgin, Child, Archangel with Tobit, and S. Augustine. In Sogliani's manner. Same Room. The Virgin gives the Girdle to S. Thomas; SS. John Baptist, Catherine, and Giovanni Gualberto; dated A.D. MCCCCXXI. Originally at S. Maria sul Prato. This is by a follower of Sogliani who imitated Fra Bartolommeo. His name is Sigismondo Foschi of Faenza, by whom we possess a Virgin and Child between Saints at Milan.

Milan. Brera.—Signed: "SIGISMUNDUS FUSCUS FAENTINUS FACIEBAT 1527." In this the imitation of Fra Bartolommeo is still more clear. A glory of angels in the arching is a broad caricature of the Frate, such as Bacchiacca might have done. The composition is like that of the Frate's Madonna at S. Marco. The outlines are mannered, the nude exaggerated in the Michaelangelesque direction; the colour dull and of thin texture, with an excessive use of bitumen. The following is another example of the same kind by Foschi.

Faenza. Academy.—Virgin and Child between the erect SS. Paul, John the Baptist, Benedict, and Sebastian, and the kneeling SS. Catherine and Apollonia. Here is a still stronger sfumato, and less truth and vigour than before in style and drapery.

Florence. S. Giovanni Battista. Contiguous to the Spedale di S. Bonifazio.—S. Brigitta, on a pedestal, between several nuns and friars, in prayer, looks up to a vision of the Virgin and Child, and issues the rules of an Order. At her feet is a crown, and on the pedestal the words: "ORATE PRO PICTORE 1522" (wood, oil, figures life-size). The composition is in Fra Bartolommeo's fashion, and some of the figures are carried out with elegance and feeling; but the colour is fluid and laid on at one painting with copious vehicle. The names of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto, which first come into consideration, become doubtful in respect of the execution, which is more according to the habits of Sogliani. Yet it is almost too good for him, and something Bolognese in its appearance might point to Innocenzo da Imola, and confirm Vasari's assertion that he studied under Mariotto. In the same place is the Annunciation assigned by Vasari to Soggi, but more like a Sogliani, as we have already noted in this volume, antea.

CHAPTER XIX

RIDOLFO GHIRLANDAIO

ON the 11th of January. 1494, intelligence was given to the officers of his quarter at Florence that, early in the morning, Domenico Ghirlandaio had died of pestilential fever, after four days' illness. The consternation caused by this announcement was so great that the family was not allowed to perform the ceremony of burial in daylight; and the corpse was taken at midnight by the brethren of the Company of S. Paolo to the house vault in S. Maria Novella.¹

Florence lamented the untimely death of its greatest painter in the ripeness of his talent. The real mourners on this melancholy occasion were the widow, Antonia, the brothers, Benedetto and David, and six children, of whom three were sons.² In little less than four years, Antonia and Benedetto followed Domenico to the grave, leaving David guardian of the children.³ Of these, the daughters had the good fortune to marry men of respectable condition; two sons, Antonio and Bartolommeo entered holy orders, and the third, Ridolfo, was brought up to the profession of his father.

During the life-time of Domenico, his brothers had been chiefly employed on his behalf; and it is related of them both that they shared with Granacci the honour of finishing, after his decease, the altarpiece of the Tornabuoni at S. Maria Novella. Of the five pieces parted from this decoration and carried to Germany, the Resurrection at Berlin, exhibits most imperfection, in the stiff and strained action of the figures, the addled confusion of the drapery, and the dull flatness of the colour. The S. Vincent is still reminiscent of Domenico, being a tempera of good outline and proportion; whereas the S. Antonino, in oil, is in most respects a companion to the least successful parts of the Resurrection.⁴

² See the genealogical table in VASARI, vol. v., pp. 88-9.

The latter, being distinctly assigned by Vasari to Benedetto, together with a S. Lucy of the same class in S. Maria Novella,¹ may thus be considered typical of the man, and justify the name attached to a Christ on the Road to Golgotha in the Gallery of the Louvre.²

In this ill-favoured performance, an executioner, threatening the Redeemer with his fist, betrays an extraordinary absence of refinement. Not in the action only, which stiffly renders a quick and passionate movement, but in the coarseness of the face and expression, is vulgarity betrayed. Meanness of station and want of breed are to be found in most of the other actors in the scene, but chiefly in a S. Veronica, whose face is altogether rigid and ignoble. The anatomy of the human frame is in every instance false, the drapery without style, the outline continuous and wiry, the colour sombre and without transition. Such a combination of bad qualities in a man whose chief was remarkable for the dignity of his conceptions, is surprising, but may be explained by the fact that Benedetto, who had been a miniaturist and had almost lost his sight, would naturally be unsuccessful in works of importance and compass.³

David Ghirlandaio was superior in talents to Benedetto and his elder in years. He was married and fifty-eight years old when his brother died, and a master in the Guild of Florence.⁴ His chief occupation was the setting of mosaics, of which he furnished specimens, in a Virgin amidst Angels (1496) now in the Cluny Museum in Paris,⁵ on the front of the Duomo at Orvieto (1492),⁶ in the Cathedral of Siena (1493),⁷ in the Cappella di S. Zanobi at S. M. del Fiore of Florence (1501),⁸ and at the SS. Annunziata de' Servi (1504-14).⁹ He had previously painted a Crucifixion in the convent of the Angeli.¹⁰ But in no instance did he display any extraordinary talent, being a mere mechanical executant, without ability in reproducing life, without feeling for colour or relief. Yet it was to be his duty to direct the talents of Ridolfo, who lived with him in the Via del Cocomero and frequented his shop on the Piazza S. Michele Berteldi.¹

Ridolfo was born on the 14th of February 1483; and threatened to be of a sickly complexion.² But he grew up strong and hearty, and had the advantage, after his father's death, of being acquainted with most artists of promise in Florence, whose rivalry or counsel might compensate for the deficiencies of his uncle. He went early to the Brancacci Chapel, where most of his contemporaries copied the frescoes of Masaccio, and later to the Papal Hall, after the cartoons of Michael Angelo and Leonardo had been opened to public view;³ but the persons to whom he was most indebted for guidance and encouragement were Granacci, Piero di Cosimo, and perhaps Rosselli himself.⁴

Under the combined influence of the examples bequeathed by his father and uncles, and of the precepts instilled into him during the course of a careful education, he laboriously perfected a Procession of Christ and the Maries to Calvary now in the Palazzo Antinori a S. Gaetano in Florence.⁵ Benedetto's idea of this subject had obviously left a vivid impression on his mind; and whilst he probably felt how little it was calculated to satisfy the requirements of the time, he appropriated some of its principal combinations with intuitive tact. We thus see at the Palazzo Antinori a composition more artfully balanced, richer in details, and more copious in its filling than that of the Louvre, and drawing that reveals more study of models or of nature; but we mark also the repetition of unattractive types like that of the S. Veronica with its round, staring eye, or of scowling soldiers, with features gathered into wooden corrugations. The weighty coarseness peculiar to Granacci contrasts here and there with more select shapes such as that of the Redeemer, whose bending figure recalls Leonardo, the Virgin who wrings her hands with dignified grief, or the female in rear of her, whose pleasing and regular face is replete with soft melancholy. Slightness of build is usually noticeable; and the tones are laid on with the smoothness of the Leonardesques, Credi, and Piero di Cosimo.⁶ How strongly Ridolfo's young mind could be affected by the constant observation of master-pieces by Da Vinci and Credi, may be judged from the low-tinged but highly-finished Annunciation that still hangs in the sacristy of the Mont' Oliveto Abbey outside Florence; a panel in which the gently-curved contours and pretty mould of slender and youthful personages, the broken draperies, and hilly landscape are not less characteristic of this tendency than the hard enamel and thick substance of the colour.¹ There was scarcely one amongst the aspirants to fame in Florentine art at the opening of the sixteenth century who did not feel himself attracted towards Da Vinci, and it probably happened that Ridolfo, knowing Cosimo Rosselli, and being acquainted with Baccio della Porta, as well as Mariotto and Piero di Cosimo, caught their enthusiasm for that master, and devoted particular attention to his creations. Vasari indeed affirms that Ridolfo studied under Fra Bartolommeo, insinuating that this occurred at the time when Raphael and the Frate had close intercourse with each other; but they might, and we think they did, meet in the shop of Rosselli, whose mode of distribution and thick coating of sombre reddish tints Ridolfo imitated in 1504, in a Coronation of the Virgin undertaken for the nuns of the convent of S. Jacopo di Ripoli² at Florence and since transferred to the Louvre.³ From the comparative imperfection of this work, in which we trace an approach to Mariotto and Baccio della Porta through Rosselli and Pier di Cosimo, to the more successful mode of delineation, truer proportion, and more plastic relief in four Saints at the same convent, a marked phase of improvement is evident. Not that the general tone is less strong or of less lustrous impasto, but that it is richer in the warmth of the yellow lights and brown shadows, whilst the thin figures are more energetic in the lower part, and generally deprived of its glazes, the result being yellow flesh with earthy shadow. The picture was once in S. Gallo at Florence (VASARI, vol. xi., pp. 287-8). A replica of it, done with the help of Michele di Ridolfo, is in S. Spirito at Florence.

¹ This panel (wood, oil, figures one-third life-size) has remained unobserved, and at first suggests the name of Granacci; but on comparison with the picture previously described, seems more appropriately to come under that of Ridolfo. The surface has undergone some cleaning, and the head of the Virgin is raw from that cause. There is some resemblance in her face to that by Domenico Ghirlandaio in the panel once at S. Giusto and now at the Uffizi, lately changed from No. 1206 to No. 1295. [Now No. 3450 of Uffizi. This work has long been ascribed by the official catalogues, as well as by Dr. Bode and many others, to Leonardo Da Vinci's youth. Morelli gives it to Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, in accord with Cavalcaselle. Mr. Berenson ascribes it to Verrocchio, with the possible assistance of Lorenzo di Credi.]

The figures are more or less dry and bony (wood, oil), small panel, with the date: "MDIII," not 1503, as stated in the catalogue.

play of limb and muscle, more correct and natural in movement, in cast of drapery, and in transitions from dark to light.¹

In a Nativity of this period at the Hermitage of S. Petersburg, we follow Ridolfo in the same track as at Ripoli, yet combining peculiarities derived from the ateliers of Rosselli, Mariotto, and Baccio della Porta with those of his old friend Granacci. Granacci's name indeed is that under which this piece has been placed, although it exactly corresponds with Vasari's description of one in the life of Ridolfo.²

"Having received an order from the monastery of Cestello for a Nativity of Christ, he took pains to surpass his rivals by extreme labour and diligence, depicting the Virgin in adoration before the Infant Christ, S. Joseph and two figures of S. Francis and S. Jerome kneeling, and a beautiful landscape like that of the Sasso della Vernia, with a choir of angels singing above the penthouse, the whole well coloured and of fair relief."³

The full and weighty shape of the S. Jerome as contrasted with the more delicate Virgin and S. Francis, and the polished surface of the fused colour most remind us of Granacci, whilst the strong, well-harmonised tints, and vigorous chiaroscuro, and the atmosphere which pervades the groups are all characteristic of Ghirlandaio. But it is of interest to find in a picture like this the proof that Ridolfo, as Vasari states,⁴ was still in a position to accept assistance from a favourite pupil of his father.

There is another feature, meanwhile, deserving of special remark. The landscape, with its rich and pleasant vegetation, its distant edifices, its ruins, and episodes, is treated in the manner of Fra Bartolommeo and Raphael, and introduces us to the time when they became friends, and might by their interest for Ridolfo give an additional spur to his exertions.⁵

² Hermitage. Wood, oil, life-size.

⁵ The picture is in oil, a little out of balance as regards composition, in consequence of the size of the S. Jerome; slightly out of keeping from abrasion and retouching of the flesh tints in the S. Joseph, S. Francis, and Virgin. The piece has been transferred with success to canvas.

In the same Gallery of the Hermitage we find three pieces under the name of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio. No. 29, wood, transferred to canvas, is a round of the Nativity, within the penthouse, almost entirely renewed. But from what remains of the original in the Infant, the young Baptist, and two angels, as well as of the draperies and bits of unaltered colour, the hand is more likely to be that of Franciabigio or Bugiardini. No. 30, Virgin, Child and Baptist, round, wood, transferred to canvas; and No. 31, Virgin and Child. square, wood, transferred, are both by one painter, a follower of Ridolfo, either Michele di Ridolfo or Mariano da Pescia. The handling is careful, the colouring raw, and there is some want of feeling in the figures. The conception is that of Raphael's, carried out by the feebleness of the men above named.

That Ridolfo's art between 1504 and 1508 entered upon this phase, is notorious; and it is pleasant to trace it from this beginning to its subsequent development. The change which was then produced did not affect his idiosyncrasy. He still held to his usual brown and somewhat hard enamel tones; but he became a thorough master, not merely of form as derived from nature, but of select form, in true relief, of perfect modelling and outline. Whilst he felt in this sense the effects of the companionship of the Frate, he was moved by that of Raphael to a tender youthfulness of type in his impersonations, to a soft fleshiness, especially in children, and to brightness in minutely touched landscapes. Of this we have examples in a pretty Raphaelesque Nativity at the Berlin Museum,¹ and in a bolder, more brilliant, and facile specimen of the same subject in the Esterhazy Collection at Vienna.² The severer qualities of plasticity united to breadth of light and shade, he exhibited in a female portrait of 1509 now at the Pitti,³ where his powers appear undoubtedly superior to those of Granacci and Piero di Cosimo; whilst in a predella at the Oratory of the Bigallo at Florence, his composition and his drawing emulate the energy, grandeur, and fulness of life distinguishing the works of Mariotto and the Frate; and his colour assumes a new richness and warmth.⁴

Raphael's trust in the talent of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio was so full and complete that we are told he allowed his friend to fill in a part of the drapery in the Bella Giardiniera, which was to be sent to Siena;⁵ and when Sanzio reached Rome in 1508, nothing pressed him more than the desire to get Ghirlandaio to join him. But Ridolfo, though still living in the house of his uncle David, was probably married, and encumbered with the cares of property and children.⁶ He had a strange aversion to moving out of sight of the cupola of S. Maria del Fiore, and clung to his native place with extraordinary tenacity. He therefore refused Raphael's kindly offers, and stayed quietly at home.¹

It was under these circumstances that, continuing to follow the path of progress into which he had entered, he completed in 1514 the ceiling of the chapel of S. Bernard, in the Public Palace at Florence,² and the Assumption and Gift of the Girdle, now in the choir loft of the cathedral at Prato.³

One of the striking features of his earliest productions had been slenderness of shape in figures. When he began more assiduously to study Mariotto and Fra Bartolommeo, he fell into the habit of giving shortness and plumpness to the human frame. He now corrected even this defect, of which evidence is given in the Assumption at Prato, whilst in two first-rate representations of single saints as S. Girolamo sopra la Costa a S. Giorgio in Florence, he is perfect in proportional division, and at the same time bold, and easy as a thorough craftsman might be who still honours and reveres the pattern of the Frate.⁴

In 1510 Mariotto Albertinelli had, with incredible labour, as we have seen, furnished a Virgin and Angel Annunciate to the Compagnia di S. Zanobi, which was valued by Perugino, Granacci, and Ridolfo Ghirlandaio.⁵ After a time, the brethren resolved to ask another to do the miracles of S. Zanolius on two panels at the sides of the Annunciation; and they gave the commission to Ridolfo. We shall not describe the composition of the Raising of the Child, but merely point out that in this, as in the Burial of the Saint, Ghirlandaio's skill has reached its highest expansion.⁶ Extraordinary liveliness and nature stamp the movements and expression of the eager and wondering crowd which presses round the kneeling bishop, as with uplifted arms he restores life to the fallen boy. Masterly are the drawing, modelling and transitions of light and shade, warm, rich, and harmonious, the strong tone of colour. Grandeur, imposing by its simplicity, marks the bishops who carry the corpse of the Saint; and there is a dignity and breadth in action and drapery that almost equal those of Domenico.¹ The system of handling peculiar to Mariotto and the Frate had never as yet been so successfully applied by Ridolfo, who having previously surpassed Granacci and Piero di Cosimo, now rivalled even Andrea del Sarto. Admirable as the latter had been in embodying the highest laws of art; unapproachable as he then was in the knowledge of fresco, he lacked something to entitle him to equal praise in the execution of easel pictures, his tones being too unsubstantial and misty to give unexceptionable satisfaction. Ridolfo as a Florentine and an oil painter now stood at the head of his class, in a position exactly contrasted with that of his father Domenico, who had achieved fame by the production of unrivalled mural decorations. Nor was this a fleeting interval in his career. The same nobleness is to be found in the Madonna and Saints of S. Pier' Maggiore at Pistoia as in the Miracles of S. Zanolius, with an additional touch of Raphaelesque grace;² and Ridolfo deserved, as indeed he obtained, all the encouragement of his countrymen. He had inherited from his father a principle which had been held by many great men before, that an artist, if he kept a shop, should attend to every order that was brought to him, however small it might be. He never grumbled for that reason when asked to make pennons, standards, or banners, or to colour crosses, curtains, or processional properties.³ He preserved by this means the facility required for carrying out vast scenic canvases of which the Florentines were profuse during the first half of the sixteenth century. The earliest of these with which he was connected were made for the wedding of Giuliano de' Medici.⁴ But the most magnificent were undertaken for the solemn entry of Leo X. into Florence, in November 1515.⁵ On that occasion the Republic and the Medici⁶ vied with each other in the sumptuous character of their preparations. Triumphal arches in the principal streets of the city were raised and painted by Baccio d'Agnolo, Jacopo di Sandro, Baccio di Montelupo, Giuliano del Tasso, Granacci, Aristotile da S. Gallo, and Rosso. Mimic temples, obelisks, pillars and statues like those of Rome were got up by the ingenuity of Baccio

² The Virgin sits in a semicircle of saints the nearest of whom to the spectator are S. Sebastian and Gregory on both sides of the foreground, the rest being S. Antony, two female Saints, and S. James. The figures are life-size (wood, oil). The panel scaled here and there, and the colour opaque in certain places from retouching. This work is noticed in VASARI, vol. xi., p. 882.

Bandinelli, Antonio da S. Gallo, and others. Andrea del Sarto and Jacopo Sansovino restored for a day the front of S. Maria del Fiore. Masquerades and triumphs were imitated from those of heathen times. The Guilds, as they followed the procession of Leo, were all gaily dressed in new costumes, and waved flaunting banners or flags on models invented by Ridolfo and his journeyman Granacci. Ghirlandaio himself adorned, with the help of his apprentices, the papal residence at S. Maria Novella, and the palace of the Medici, and produced, with Granacci, the scenes for the comedies that were given in the evening.

From festive days like these to mournful ones which also required the aid of artists, there was but a step; and Ridolfo arranged the funeral of Giuliano de' Medici, who died in retirement at the abbey of Fiesole in March 1516.¹

From grave to gay again. In 1518 Lorenzo de' Medici, Duke of Urbino, held grand court on the day of his wedding at Florence, the "apparato" and plays being prepared under the joint superintendence of Ridolfo and Franciabigio, with the assistance of Aristotile da S. Gallo and Andrea di Cosimo.² Equal pomp, but of a doleful kind, at Lorenzo's death in 1519, when Ridolfo is more in request than ever.³

The Medici were grateful to him for his success and punctuality on so many of these occasions of joy or grief. They gave him special marks of honour as a citizen of Florence; and he was made "painter" of the opera of S. Maria del Fiore.⁴

The property which he had inherited from his father increased, in spite of the heavy charges that weighed upon him in the shape of fifteen children; and he was able to number, in his returns to the "catasto," a continual increase in his possessions of land.⁵ In the midst of prosperity he remained consistently honest and conscientious in the pursuit of his art; and in spite of the numerous works which he had carried through, he showed no signs of relinquishing any of the diligence that had been so conspicuous in his first manhood. Of this we have a convincing proof in a Pietà of 1521, at S. Agostino of Colle di Valdelsa, where the Saviour supported by the Virgin and Baptist, mourned by the Magdalen, and adored by SS. Jerome and Nicholas, discloses his talent in the same path as of old. Composition in the fashion of the Frate and Mariotto, refined forms, noble nude, and true harmony of keys exhibit the unaltered perfection of his style; and the sole difference that one perceives is in the comparative lightness of tones which have lost some of the old richness and fulness.¹

With greater bravura, but in the same system, he furnished the dexterously handled Assumption of the Compagnia de' Battilani at Florence, now in the Berlin Museum, in which the only fault that can be found is slight emptiness of colour;² and we begin to perceive that Ridolfo is thinking of his ease and puts his confidence in the aid of his disciple Michele. We then enter fully upon a period in which the vigour of the man seems on the wane, producing the flat and unrelieved S. Jerome Penitent,³ and the loosely executed Annunciation, at S. Girolamo,⁴ closing, as it were with the Last Supper of 1543 in the refectory of the Angeli at Florence, in which Del Sarto's Cenacolo at S. Salvi is copied with unnecessary fidelity.⁵

In this long interval, however, many incidents of interest are worthy of notice. We find Ridolfo, in 1520, valuing with Bugiardini an altarpiece by Jacopo del Sellaio,⁶ and in 1524 appraising frescoes by Guglielmo di Marcilla.⁷ In 1525 David Ghirlandaio dies in the arms of his nephew and surrounded by Ridolfo's children.⁸ In 1536 the entrance of the Emperor Charles V. into Florence gives rise to a display equalling if not surpassing that of 1515, in which Ridolfo erects and adorns with great splendour in company of Michele di Ridolfo, a triumphal arch at the Canto alla Cuculia.⁹

Similar rejoicings take place at the marriage of Cosimo de' Medici in 1539, and at the christening of his son Francesco in 1541.¹⁰ Ridolfo is constantly busy for the Grand Duke of Florence in his palace, and he

After the siege of Florence in that year Ridolfo repainted the lower part that had been spoilt. In truth the lower Apostles are treated more frankly than the glory, the latter being nearer in style to the Frate, the former to Sanzio. The portrait is the head of the Saint next to S. John the Baptist.

paints, 1543, a series of frescoes in the monastery of the Angeli.¹ In the meantime his children are well educated and enter into business as merchants in France and at Ferrara. Ridolfo, without giving up his profession, becomes almost a sleeping partner in his own business, suffers from the gout; but lives on for a while, rolled about in an easy chair. At last he is taken from the world in 1560, outliving most of his contemporaries, except the immortal Michael Angelo.²

Of the altarpieces which may be said to have been jointly done by Ridolfo and his disciple Michele di Ridolfo, we make the following list:—

Florence. S. Felice in Piazza.—Virgin, Child, and SS. Bartholomew, Sebastian, Peter, and another, with the Eternal amongst angels in benediction (wood, oil, figures life-size), injured by restoring. There is some affectation in the Madonna. The enamel surface is like Bronzino's (this is not the "tavola" mentioned by VASARI, vol. xi., p. 295).

Florence. S. Spirito, originally in the Cappella de' Segni, now in the left transept (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 295). Virgin and Child, behind whom is S. Ann. At the sides, four standing Saints and SS. Mary Magdalen and Catherine kneeling (wood, oil, much damaged). Same as above. Virgin and Child between SS. Bartholomew and Benedict, erect, Giovanni Gualberto and another kneeling (wood, oil, life-size). Christ carrying His Cross. The first is a soft and rather feeble production, reminiscent of the Raphaelesque in the Virgin and Child, of a mild, rosy tone, with a touch of Credi from whose school Michele came. The second is a sort of replica of the altarpiece at the Palazzo Antinori.

Florence. Academy of Arts.—No. 85 [?] Virgin and Child between the kneeling SS. Francis and Chiara, the standing James and Lawrence. Wood, oil. Same Gallery, same room. [No. 69 ?] Marriage of S. Catherine. The first was once in SS. Jacopo e Francesco (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 295); the second in S. Catarina at Florence. These are also weak and of a rosy tone. Same Gallery. [No. 189?] Martyrdom of the Companions of S. Ursula. Doubtful. [? By Michele Ghirlandaio.]

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 180]. Holy Family, better than the foregoing, and apparently done by Ridolfo, with little or no help from Michele.

Florence. S. Marco, Sacristy.—Annunciation, in the same style as the pictures at the Academy (but see antea, "Fra Bartolommeo").

Florence. Galleria Torrigiani.—Of the same class and character as the foregoing is a fine copy of a Virgin and Child by Raphael, now No. 38 in the Bridgewater Gallery in London.

Florence. S. Jacopo di Ripoli.—Two pieces here have been already noticed. A third, of a different period, may be added to them. It represents the Marriage of S. Catherine (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 287), the Virgin and Child recalling Sanzio; and takes a place in the series here classified on account of the gentleness of the types, the light rosy tints, and slight shadows.³

Florence. S. Martino delle Monache.—Virgin and Child, on clouds; below, S. Sebastian and another saint. Two angels fly above the head of the Madonna. Distance, landscape (wood, oil, figures large as life). Similar to the last mentioned.¹

Prato. S. Rocco.—Seen in 1857. Once in possession of Signor Giov. Gagliardi of Florence. Virgin, Child, S. Sebastian and S. Roch (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 296).

Florence. Gates of S. Gallo, al Prato and alla Croce.—There are remnants, in the first, of a Virgin and Child between SS. John Baptist and Cosmo; in the second, of a Madonna, with the same saints; in the third, of the Virgin and Child, between SS. John the Baptist and Ambrose (VASARI, vol. xi., p. 298).

Venice Academy.—No. 536. Virgin and Child between two angels with lilies, SS. Peter Martyr and Lucy (much repainted, the angel at the side of S. Peter renewed as to the head); a work more like Mainardi than Ridolfo.

Rome. Galleria Borghese.—No. 35. Portrait of a man three-quarters to the left, in long hair and cap, assigned to Raphael, injured by restoring and in the manner of Ridolfo.

Hampton Court.—No. 1084. Portrait of a man, in very bad condition, but recalling Ridolfo.²

Of Ridolfo's pupils we shall at present only mention Mariano da Pescia, whose pictures may be taken in the following order:—

In Francesco Granacci, who preserved through life an intimate connection with the family of the Ghirlandai, we see how happily a man of respectable attainments can reach a haven of comfort in his old age, when his ambition does not exceed his skill, and when he shows in daily intercourse a kindly and cheerful disposition. Granacci seems to have possessed, in a supreme degree, the art of being companionable. He was quick at discerning talents surpassing his own, and before these he took off his hat, acknowledging with surprising modesty the superiority even of those who were by many years his juniors. Hence the friendship which united him with Michael Angelo, and his willingness, at a later period, to act as the assistant of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio. Hence his inability to fill any of the high places reserved for the great men of his age. He was born in 1469,¹ and bred in the atelier of Domenico and David Ghirlandaio.² In the Brancacci Chapel, where he studied like most candidates for pictorial fame, he sat to Filippino Lippi, who took his portrait in the Resurrection of the King's Son.³ His youth was thus spent in the company of the best masters of the fifteenth century; and in the shop where he served, he was held to be the most promising of draughtsmen.⁴ As Michael Angelo began his time with Domenico Ghirlandaio in 1488, Granacci at once observed the lad's precocious nature, and furnished him abundantly with drawings; and thus laid the foundation of a lasting intimacy.⁵ It was about this period that Lorenzo de' Medici, having placed his collection under the charge of Bertoldo, had determined to try, if it were not possible to bring up some boys as sculptors, in view of restoring to that branch the importance it had lost in consequence of the great pre-eminence acquired by professors of painting.⁶ Domenico Ghirlandaio having been consulted upon this subject, entrusted Granacci and Michael Angelo (1489) to

Lorenzo as the most likely scholars ; and thus the companionship which had begun under favourable circumstances seemed destined to a happy continuance. Michael Angelo soon did justice to the choice of Ghirlandaio, and during his rapid progress repaid the kindness of Granacci by presents of designs and by advice.¹ But Granacci did not for his part take to sculpture ; and Lorenzo was only enabled to use him as a draughtsman and decorator in the jousts and triumphs with which he kept the Florentines in good humour at carnival time. In these, however, according to the testimony of Vasari, Granacci was admitted to have been highly successful ; and here also Domenico Ghirlandaio approved himself a competent judge of the ability of his pupil.²

If it ever happened to Granacci to take an extensive share in any of the numerous undertakings in Domenico's atelier, we should say he may have been principally occupied in the production of a Madonna amongst Saints, now at Mr. Barker's in London,³ or a Coronation of the Virgin in Santa Cecilia at Città di Castello.⁴ In Ghirlandaio's great frescoes at S. Trinità, or S. M. Novella, his help was of too general a character to be perceptible. But he took part in the altarpieces finished by Benedetto and David after 1494 ; and two figures of Saints—S. Antony, in which his co-operation is proved by Vasari,⁵ or S. Vincent, upon which, though finer, the Aretine is silent—disclose a notable superiority over the brothers of Domenico Ghirlandaio, an approximation, indeed, to the latter in form, proportions, outline, and drapery.⁶

We might believe, in consideration of two very clear toned, and slightly relieved, but much finished bust likenesses of a male and female, in the Museum of Berlin, and in the Gallery of Oxford, that Granacci was frequently engaged in his youth as a portrait painter.⁷ His tendency from the beginning to imitate the Michaelangesque might be illustrated in a tempera of the Virgin, Child, and Saints at Berlin.¹

Another early contribution to the collection of his works is to be found in the kneeling S. Jerome and S. Francis, part of an Adoration of the Virgin, in the Berlin Museum. The S. Jerome especially denotes a masculine and vigorous complexion in the artist, without the feeling which avoids reproducing the vulgarity or Herculean nature of a model. For the same reason the anatomy is correct whilst the drapery is involved and bundled into heaps. Unlike the rest of the picture, the two saints are in oil, of a hard, even brown red impasto, with dull shadows sharply contrasting with the lights, yet of insufficient relief. They are freely handled in the imperfect system common to Rosselli and Piero di Cosimo. The art is that apparent in the Madonna and Saints at S. Pietro al Terreno, with the difference that the figures at Berlin are carried out in a more facile and manly spirit, and have a muscular appearance akin to that with which we are familiar in Michael Angelo.²

Granacci therefore appears to us at the close of the century as a man who had already surrendered much that he might have learnt in the atelier of Domenico Ghirlandaio, in order to adopt the energetic hardihood of his friend Buonarrotti.

That he should seek, at the same time, to acquire the technical improvements taken by Piero di Cosimo from Leonardo, and still more ably applied by Mariotto and Fra Bartolommeo, was probably owing to the fact that Michael Angelo could not assist him in this respect as he did in the rendering of form.

For a considerable interval Granacci preserved this duplicate tendency. Without making any progress in the mode of imparting relief by light and shade; now and then giving short proportions to the human frame, as in the four Saints of the Munich Pinakothek,³ occasionally long and slender ones, as in the six predella scenes from the life of S. Apollonia in the Academy of Arts at Florence⁴—he made himself known by freedom of movement, and by a decisive and broad sweep of touch allied to great finish and fusion. His colour no longer had its previous monotony of brown redness, nor dulness of shadow, but a transparent gloss due to copious vehicle, and a gaudy lightness producing the effect of emptiness. Bravura in carrying out, a strong accent upon action in torso and limb, are the characteristics of a Trinity very fairly assigned to Granacci, at the Berlin Museum, and doubtless of this time.¹

But the most favourable specimen of his manner under these conditions is the Assumption and Gift of the Girdle in the Casa Rucellai at Florence.² There is soft gravity in the deportment of the saints conversing by the tomb; and the drapery is grand in the breadth of its cast. Two angels supporting the glory of flaming rays, almost embody the grace of Filippino. But the muscular type and energetically forced motion of the S. Thomas rising from his knees to take the girdle handed down to him by the Virgin, as well as the enamelled surface of the panel, and its minute laboriousness, are derived from Michael Angelo, in emulation perhaps of the Madonna at the Uffizi, which seems to date from the first years of the sixteenth century.³

Whilst Granacci thus faithfully followed his great and now celebrated guide, forgetting as he proceeded the atelier out of which he had originally sprung, there was one quality which he could not reach, and that was the quality of relief, in which he was far surpassed by Ridolfo. His method of dealing with colours was in so far different from that which Leonardo perfected, that he always sought transparence from the white ground. He tried to get light in the greatest fulness, even to the sacrifice of shadow which, when properly used, is a set-off to light.

Granacci's devotion to Michael Angelo lasted long. He was, no doubt, one of the firmest supporters of his friend's opinion when, in 1503, he was asked, with many others, to choose the place for the gigantic David.⁴ Though he was affiliated to his guild in 1505,⁵ he did not disdain to join Ridolfo, Del Sarto, and the host of their companions as they copied the rival cartoons in the Papal Hall.⁶ Yet he could not remain an inattentive spectator of the coming of Raphael; and there are pictures like the Holy Family, in the Casa Rucellai, in which we already notice a prettiness and elegance that can only have been suggested by the careful examination of the works of Sanzio.

⁶ VASARI, vol. xii., p. 179. He belonged to the club of the Cazzuola, of which we shall speak.

This tendency to fall off from his old allegiance may have been hastened by an incident which could not but cool the relations between Granacci and Michael Angelo. In 1508, it was proposed that the vaulting of the Sistine Chapel should be decorated with frescoes, and Buonarrotti, upon whom this duty devolved, sent to Florence for assistants, amongst whom Bugiardini and Granacci were the most prominent. Upon trial, even these were found very far from the mark by their fastidious employer, who, instead of dismissing, locked the door of the chapel as well as of his own house, against them.¹ It was natural that Granacci after this rebuff should feel very greatly angered, and rather inclined to forget than to remember the lessons of a man to whom he owed much indeed, but who had treated him too rudely.

Certain it is that the influence of Raphael now gained the ascendant with Granacci; and there are two very fine Virgins in Glory, at the Uffizi and Academy of Arts in Florence, as well as some Holy Families which fully bear out this statement.

In the Virgin in Glory, at the Uffizi, two angels at the sides of the glory are Raphaellesque rather than purely Florentine. The Virgin's own face is of a gentle softness which certainly had not its origin in Buonarrotti; whilst the S. Thomas, to whom she hands the girdle, and the Archangel Michael, below, are more in the Herculean mould.² The same contrasts are to be seen at the Academy, where the Virgin looks down from heaven at four kneeling saints;³ and a Holy Family at the Pitti, though a little low in tone and reminiscent of Puligo, still seems to have been composed by Granacci in the same mood.⁴

Elsewhere we trace in Granacci a bias in the direction of Fra Bartolommeo, as in two ovals representing S. Anthony and an angel, in the University Gallery at Oxford;⁵ and the same aspect of his talent is divulged in an Assumption belonging to the Earl of Warwick, considered hitherto by many as a masterpiece of Raphael and the Frate.⁶

We believe that Granacci surrendered himself to scene-painting chiefly when he joined the atelier of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, after his return from Rome and his quarrel with Michael Angelo. As Ridolfo's partner probably he assisted in valuing Mariotto's Annunciation in 1510;¹ and in the same subordinate position he painted standards, theatrical hangings, and one of the triumphal arches at Florence, in 1516, at the solemn entrance of Leo X.² He also furnished cartoons for glass to the brotherhood of the Gesuati.³ But he lived for many years after that, making a will in 1533,⁴ and died in 1543,⁵ without our being able to ascertain whether he was entrusted in the interval with any great or independent commissions.⁶

We can see, in this picture, nothing of the Frate or of Raphael, but we perceive that it is the work of a Florentine under the inspiration of both those masters. The technical handling is like that of Ridolfo Ghirlandaio and Granacci, the composition essentially that of the latter.

CHAPTER XX

ANDREA DEL SARTO

THOUGH Andrea del Sarto was but the son of a tailor, his pedigree has been traced with ease into the fourteenth century. His great-grand-ather, Luca di Paolo del Migliore, was an agricultural labourer, his grandfather a linen-weaver. Agnolo, the tailor, was twenty-seven years old when his wife Costanza gave birth (1487) to Andrea del Sarto. Their usual place of abode was Gualfonda, until 1504, when they lived in the Popolo di S. Paolo;¹ but previous to the latter date, the future painter had been apprenticed; and almost before it was possible that he could read (1494) he was introduced to the shop of a goldsmith.¹

Amongst the ancestors of Andrea del Sarto, Luca lived in S. Maria a Buiano (Catast. 1427 Port. d. Contado Quart. S. Giovⁱ, Popolo S. Maria a Buiano, Piviere di Fiesole. Luca is then thirty-five years of age). He afterwards went to S. Ilario a Montereppi (Catast. 1455, Port. d. Contado Q. S. G. P. d. Fiesole, Popolo di S. Ilario a Montereppi. Potesterie di Sesto).

Francesco came to reside near Florence. Piviere di S. Giovanni of Florence (Catast. d. Contado 1471, Quart. S. M. Novella Piv. S. Giov. ? Pop. S. Lorenzo di Dentro da S. Gallo, Potesteria di Firenze. Francesco, who makes the return, is forty years old.

A declared aversion to cold chisels and files was the first sign that the boy gave of his unfitness for the business he was bound to. But he showed no such disinclination for the models from which the journeymen of his master were made to work. His childish cleverness in drawing from them was watched with interest, if not by the goldsmith, at least by his neighbour Gian Barile; and the result was the transfer of Andrea from the one to the other.

Whatever might have been the chagrin of Agnolo that his son should be withdrawn from a great guild to be entered into a lesser one, he was obliged to yield to circumstances, and Gian Barile kept Andrea till about 1498.

There is no telling how Del Sarto would have turned out had the connection lasted longer. Gian Barile was a man of contemptible talents and coarse manners,² to whom his pupil may have been indebted for much that was slipshod and common in his ways; but if he had faults, want of sympathy and generosity was not one of them, and this he proved by recommending the youth as a draughtsman and a colourist to Piero di Cosimo. Upon trial, this eccentric artist fully approved of Barile's judgment. He kept Del Sarto for years, allowing him spare hours for outside study,³ especially at the cartoons of Michael Angelo and Leonardo, and delighted to hear that amongst all the striplings who copied there, his garzone was one of the ablest.⁴

In the Papal Hall, where these famed compositions stood, the earliest visitors were Ridolfo Ghirlandaio, Raphael, Granacci, Baccio Bandinelli, and the Spaniard Berruguete; in Andrea's time, that is about 1507-1508, Franciabigio, Jacopo Sansovino, Rosso, Maturino, Lorenzetto, and Tribolo.⁵ It was there that the friendly intercourse of Del Sarto and Franciabigio commenced, there that they matured a plan for opening a joint shop of their own.

We shall not pretend to give an exact date to this event, though we suppose that it occurred before the frescoes illustrative of the life of the Beato Filippo Benizzi were begun in the court of the SS. Annunziata de' Servi.

⁴ Ibid., vol. viii., p. 252; vol. x., p. 296. The Aretine only alludes to one instance where Andrea del Sarto had a share in Piero di Cosimo's works, and that is when the car of death was made for one of the carnivals during the supremacy at Florence of the Soderini (vol. vii., pp. 115 to 117).

Franciabigio and Del Sarto took a lodging together on the Piazza del Grano, in the heart of Florence, and are said to have worked in common, their maiden undertaking being perhaps the Baptism of Christ at the Scalzo, which Vasari classes amongst the first of Andrea's efforts. We must confess grave doubts as to whether this episode could have been executed by Del Sarto alone—so different is the neglected drawing, or the unrefined character of the figures, from that which is to be found at the Servi. We might, however, admit that such a production by two young masters just entering upon their career would be accepted as an instalment of great promise and induce many to give them their patronage. As a cento of Franciabigio and Del Sarto in which the impress of Andrea is preponderant, we may look upon it as a valuable and perhaps unique product of an association which was soon dissolved. The two men had both been nurtured at one source. Andrea at the school of Piero di Cosimo, the imitator of Leonardo, and the companion of Fra Bartolommeo and Mariotto; Franciabigio under the tuition of Mariotto. Franciabigio had less genius than Del Sarto, but he was the elder of the two. So the partners probably agreed to live together, but to paint apart. They often spent their days in the same places, but never, as far as we know, divided the labours of one and the same picture.¹ They competed at the Servi, at the Scalzo, at Poggio a Caiano; but contemporary history contains no reference to anything that they did in companionship. That the Baptism of Christ was the first of a long series at the Scalzo, and that it was followed by the scenes from the life of the Beato Filippo Benizzi, at the Servi, is as clear from Vasari as from the evidence of style, the latter being entirely Andrea's without assistance from Franciabigio. But the mere fact of two such competitors living in constant intercourse led to the inevitable results, that Franciabigio assumed and kept a reminiscence of Del Sarto, and Andrea for his part took something from his friend.

There is a panel in the Duke of Northumberland's castle of Alnwick, in which a man of twenty, in a black cap covering long hair, sits resting his elbow on a table. The hand thus reposing holds a scroll with an illegible direction. On the table itself is an ink-bottle, a pen, and a sheet of paper, on the corner of which one reads: "AL DI . . . ANDREA DEL SARTO PICTORE . . . ENTIA."² This is supposed to be Andrea's own portrait, though it might represent another and unknown person. It is coloured in a soft and harmonious manner in oil, with well-fused and fatty impasto ; but it is somewhat empty, feeble in the transitions from light to shade, and timidly drawn. The technical method is that of Franciabigio's teacher, Mariotto, the character generally that of Del Sarto in the frescoes of the Servi, but without the breadth to which he already expands there. In this effort to approximate to Albertinelli and Fra Bartolommeo, we trace the force of Franciabigio's persuasion or precept on Andrea ; unless we assume that Franciabigio is himself the author, in which case he and Del Sarto would have painted exactly alike. Yet as Andrea for some time longer felt a sympathetic leaning towards the Frate and Albertinelli, we may consider him more likely to have done the portrait of Alnwick Castle than Franciabigio.

² The words immediately following "Al di" are not particularly clear, and may be omitted.

Since the days of Baldovinetti and Cosimo Rosselli, the court of the Convent of the Servi had received no additional decoration. In one corner Alesso had left a Nativity, carried out in new and perishable materials ; in another, Rosselli had scarcely finished a Miracle of the sainted Philip. The Brotherhood of the Servi, though poor, was ambitious of completing these adornments, and with much tact sought out rising men from whom skill and small charges were to be expected. Thus it was that from 1509 to 1514 it had in employ three young fellows of great promise—Franciabigio, Andrea del Sarto, and Andrea Feltrini. We can scarcely tell, indeed, whether most to admire the cleverness which could discern the value of these youths, or the cunning with which jealousy was sown between Franciabigio and Del Sarto, in order that the convent might reap the advantage of their rivalry. To the latter, who had already the reputation of being soft and malleable, the sacristan Fra Mariano suggested how quickly his name would become known were he to leave a successful proof of his talent in a public and much frequented locality ; and how important it would be for him to work rather there than elsewhere, even for a minimum of wages. It was hinted meanwhile that if he refused so favourable an offer, Franciabigio would accept it—nay, had already consented to do so. This final argument appeared so conclusive to Andrea that he signed a contract for three frescoes, which he immediately began ; and in a few months he had uncovered S. Philip sharing his Cloak with the Leper ; S. Philip cursing the Gamblers ; S. Philip restoring the Girl possessed of a Devil.¹

Age has affected the episode of the Saint and the Leper, in which Andrea's ability as a draughtsman and an imitator of easy motion is divulged in figures of good proportions. The Curse of the Gamblers is more spirited, and illustrates Andrea's versatility in thought, as well as the power with which he gives life to every part of a vast landscape. The rabble of men-at-arms playing cards under a tree has been overwhelmed or dispersed by a stroke of lightning at the moment when the saint turned to assure them of the wrath of God. The two attendant brethren have stopped because S. Philip halted. The muleteer in the distance hurries away as he looks back at the havoc ; the whole scene, so vivid in its contrasts, so happily impulsive in their rendering, that little remains to be desired except perhaps some of that higher and less homely quality the lack of which makes Andrea take a place below Fra Bartolommeo. A ready action, variety of position, appropriate drapery, fine and accurate drawing of frame and limb, disclose his inborn strength, as well as facility for making the best features of the great masters his own. Space, divided according to the rules of the best Florentines, is filled up with a sense of the undoubted dignity and earnestness of legendary history. In the groups, life, pulsation, and the boldness of Uccello distinguish every personage. The execution is that of a man already confident in himself, uniting freedom with rapidity in reproduction, not clinging rigidly to pure science and severe measure, but substituting for these quickness and spirit.

The same simplicity and tact are preserved in the central episode of the fresco in which S. Philip drives the demon out of the female supported in the arms of her relations ; the interest of the spectators in the miracle being well kept up and made evident without coarseness either in attitude or in expression.

The applause which these three pieces received encouraged Andrea to proceed, and he at once resumed the brush for the Death of S. Philip, and the Children Cured by S. Philip's Garment.

The first of these, arranged in a form that was scarcely to be avoided, represents a friar behind a couch, leaning over the prostrate body of the saint, whilst two groups stand on the sides of the foreground. The clergy in rear to the left suspend their chant in order to express their surprise at a wonder occurring before their eyes. A child lies dead on the floor, and revives at the touch of the bier, the two incidents of the death and resurrection being judiciously compressed into one. In this, more than in any other composition of the series, Del Sarto tells of the study which he devoted to Domenico Ghirlandaio, not only for the sake of fit distribution, but for the purpose of acquiring a just partition of the masses of light and shade. Nothing can be more clearly demonstrated than this in the head of the friar who leans over S. Philip, where the transitions are given with remarkable force ; nor would the fresco as a whole have lost anything had this law of equilibrium been extended with equal impartiality to the rest of the dramatis personæ. But Andrea seems never to have been fully penetrated with the necessity for applying the strict rules of chiaroscuro. Carried away by his feeling for harmony of colour, and charmed whenever he could realise a vague and vaporous twilight of tone, he was unable to combine that appearance with absolute neutral contrasts ; especially when urged onwards by the supreme ease and confidence with which he was gifted. But whilst he was thus robbed of one quality, the balance was almost restored by the facility with which he obtained transparence, gay colours, and smoothness in the melting of tints into each other. Without hesitation, and, as Vasari said, "senza errori," in a somewhat subdued and quiet key, he overcame the greatest difficulties of his art, and if not in 1510, certainly in 1514, deserved to be called the best fresco painter of Central Italy, not excepting even Sanzio. If his aim principally was to reach this point, it was natural that he should be unable to stop at will to attend to the modelling of form or to achieve that which a more phlegmatic but less able frescante would have done. For if the latter had failed in this at one sitting, he would have tried to supply the deficiency at a second by dry touching, a remedy which Del Sarto habitually disdained.

The Children Cured by the Dress of S. Philip is attractive, symmetrical, and full of truth. A priest, in a doorway, lays the cloth on the head of a child kneeling in front of its mother. Two persons ascend, or stand at the foot of the steps on each hand. To the left, a cripple receives charity ; to the right, an aged man leaning on his staff is the portrait of Del Sarto's friend, Andrea della Robbia. Fleeshy rounded curves in the contour of females denotes sensuality in the artist. Males are depicted with a rougher, coarser grain of flesh. Each party to the action has his individuality. Avoiding an ideal of perfection to which he might be obliged to cling, as we see the Frate occasionally doing, Andrea has no thought for anything but the reality. Yet that reality, if below the ideal and not absolutely select, is dignified and genuine. The drawing is good in style and invariably correct. The motions are without strain, and generally appropriate. There is a conscientious attendance to all requirements, such as we are not always able to find at a subsequent period. The general tone is powerful, harmonically without discord, tasteful, and pleasing.¹

As a whole, we possess in these five frescoes, done, we must remember, before the close of 1510, a very creditable series, in which we find no difficulty in tracing how much Andrea del Sarto was indebted to the works of Leonardo, Fra Bartolommeo, and Mariotto. From the first he took a dimpled smile that might almost be called stereotype ; and from the two last, certain models of form and the peculiar seeking after elegance which they derived from Da Vinci. To the warm and sympathetic gaiety of colour remarkable in the Frate, he gave an additional vagueness and transparency; to the full and swelling forms of female beauty in Della Porta, something more of the sensuous. The public justly applauded his performance, and as he began to feel the position he had won, he observed to his clients, that greatly as he was honoured by the patronage of the Servi, he still preferred employment of a less barren kind.

In order to avoid the fatigues and loss of time consequent upon a daily walk from the Piazza del Grano to the Servi, Andrea had taken rooms with Franciabigio in the Sapienza, a block of buildings close to the SS. Annunziata, where Jacopo Sansovino and Rustici already had their lodging,¹ and not far from the shop of Nanni Unghero.² In Sansovino, Del Sarto found a friend with whom to discuss the most diverse problems of his profession. He had been at Rome, and witnessed the meeting of two generations of celebrated painters there.³ His experience was already great, his conversation probably instructive. He was reserved for a noble career as an architect at Venice, and in the meanwhile was a student of sculpture at Florence. He and Andrea constantly exchanged views and opinions, whilst not unfrequently his models were those from which Del Sarto made drawings for his pictures.⁴

Rustici was a sculptor too, but older; a man of independent means, whose house was the rallying point for artists in general, and the seat of a club of twelve or dodeka, to which Andrea del Sarto belonged. This club, which was called the "Company of the Kettle," was chiefly remarkable for the jollity of its dinners, to which every member was allowed to invite four strangers. At these convivial gatherings each brought his own food, and was fined if his dish happened to be that of his neighbour. But on grand occasions, concert being required, previous consultation took place; and ingenuity was exhausted in making temples of pastry and sausages, and figures carved out of cold beef or sucking pigs. Yet, eating and drinking was not the exclusive business of the association; and we are told that in 1519, when Franciabigio became chairman or "archipaiuolo," he recited a comic epic called the "Battle of the Mice with the Frogs," which has been assigned by some to Andrea del Sarto, whilst others believe the author to have been Ottaviano de' Medici.⁵

As it often happens when such clubs consist not merely of boon companions, but of persons known for talent in their business, the more exclusive circles are moved by curiosity to visit them; a connecting link is created between persons whose relative rank would otherwise keep them for ever apart ; and a curious mixture is produced in which the worker has a chance of learning to ape the polish of the high-bred noble, and vice versa, the man of station condescends to a dangerous familiarity with those whom he has not ceased to regard as his inferiors. After the successful establishment of the Kettle Club, that of the "Trowel" arose in 1512.¹ The associates were ranged in divisions answering to those of the great and small guilds of Florence, with a third class adjoined and called "Adherents," of whom Del Sarto was one. Here it became fashionable to read burlesques and to get up masquerades, the arts as usual contributing to the entertainment by quaint decorations, or by scenic paintings.² As the meetings were not held in one locality, the wealthier subscribers were able to distinguish themselves by display according to their means ; and some instances are mentioned where great expense must have been incurred, as when Bernardino di Giordano gave the Mandragola of Niccolò Macchiavelli in 1524 with the scenes and properties by Andrea del Sarto and Aristotile da S. Gallo. This comedy was played before Alessandro and Ippolito de' Medici, adolescents at that time under the care of Silvio Passerini, Cardinal of Cortona ; and it was not considered improper to let them listen to dialogues the indecency of which is said to exceed the utmost stretch of licence.³ In the fifteenth century Lorenzo de' Medici patronised, as we have seen, with a judicious measure and a due regard to social positions. He respected men of genius like Domenico Ghirlandaio. He made an associate of a scholar like Alberti. In the sixteenth century, artists were drawn into the vortex of dissipation and immorality which peculiarly characterised the upper classes in Italy ; and there is reason to believe that their decline was the more rapid for that cause.

The frescoes of S. Philip Benizzi had scarcely been finished by Andrea del Sarto, when commissions poured in upon him from many quarters. To accept these whilst he was bound to finish the court of the Servi was dangerous. The sacristan had a contract, and might have enforced it. But he probably had enough knowledge of the world to be aware that if he pressed his advantage too hard, Del Sarto might escape from his obligation indirectly. It was therefore arranged that two more frescoes should be furnished in the SS. Annunziata for a better price than that which had hitherto been conceded, and their completion was probably left indefinite as to time. It is hardly to be doubted that at this juncture, as Vasari says, part of the refectory of the Vallombrosans at S. Salvi was adorned with figures of saints, that an Annunciation was done at the corner of Orsanmichele, and that two or three altarpieces were delivered at the same period. The first of these are so like the frescoes of S. Philip at the Servi, that they must date immediately after them. They represent two cardinal saints, SS. Giovanni Gualberto and Benedict, resting on clouds in a blue sky; and they are the ornament of a vaulted recess in which Andrea many years later placed a Last Supper.¹ The Annunciation, at the corner of Orsanmichele, is all but obliterated.²

A fine and fairly preserved Christ appearing as a Gardener to the Magdalen, ordered by the monks of S. Gallo, is said to exist in a private church belonging to the Covoni in Casentino, finished contemporarily with an Annunciation in the same monastery which is now at the Pitti.³ The angel in the latter seems to have dropped slowly from heaven on a cloud, and to have surprised the Virgin at her desk. His mien is calm and composed, and the mode in which he is presented recalls Fra Bartolommeo in the altarpiece intended for S. Pietro at Murano. But the movement and lines, though soft and gentle, are unconstrained and free, as in Del Sarto's own creation, the Nativity at the Servi. The Virgin is most dignified in air and pose. Decorum and grave beauty are almost as completely combined as in Della Porta. Without the emptiness which grew into a defect with Andrea's later years, the colour is rich, and in good keeping with a landscape full of atmosphere. The lights and shadows are almost as well defined as in Mariotto and the Frate, and the handling is surprising for its lightness and ease. All that is wanting to entitle the painter to an equal rank by the side of the masters we have named, is the scientific correctness of form and chiaro-scuro. We ascertain the exact date of this panel from the fact that the predella was entrusted to Pontormo, who entered the atelier at the Sapienza in 1512, and left it in 1513.⁴

If, in 1510, Andrea deserved already to be called one of the best executants in fresco of his day; in 1512, he might fairly be adjudged excellent in the practice of oil. Nor is there any reason to doubt but that this excellence was willingly admitted. Amongst the acquaintances made during the study of the cartoons of Michael Angelo and Leonardo in the Papal Hall at Florence, Baccio Bandinelli is to be numbered. His designs had been praised so highly by his comrades and other judges for their boldness and decision, that his vanity claimed a place abreast of Buonarrotti. Anxious to add to this quality that of a good colourist on panel, he asked Andrea del Sarto to take his portrait, hoping, in the event of his consenting, to secure a good likeness and to surprise the newest tricks of the profession. Vasari amusingly dwells on the indignation of Del Sarto at this mixture of cunning and deceit in Bandinelli, and affirms that Andrea kept Baccio so long sitting he could not learn any of the desired secrets.¹ The story, apart from its illustration of Baccio's character clearly proves the respect felt by Andrea's contemporaries for his power as an easel-painter.

Towards the end of 1511, and during the two following years, Del Sarto was occasionally busy in finishing a Nativity of the Virgin, and a Procession of the Magi, in the court of the Servi, and two Parables in the garden of the same convent. With the help of Andrea Feltrini and his own pupil, Pontormo, he got up the cars for a triumph with which the elevation of Leo X. to the Papacy was celebrated in the early part of 1513. All Florence was in excitement at the return of the Medici. But neither his professional occupations nor the vicissitudes of politics were of interest to Del Sarto in comparison with one particular pursuit to which his attention was most exclusively devoted. He had long been under the charm of a lovely hatter's wife, whose husband Carlo Recanati, had a shop in the Via S. Gallo. The death of the latter gave Del Sarto an opportunity which he is said to have long desired. He married Lucretia del Fede, and, according to Vasari, took a very beautiful but very faithless partner to his side.² Lucretia, it is certain, was of a most overbearing and intermeddling temper; and her treatment of Andrea's apprentices, Vasari amongst the number, is perhaps the cause why her character has been depicted in a most unfavourable light. It is not said, indeed, that Pontormo left his master because Lucretia teased him, but there is no doubt that this occurred immediately after Andrea's marriage in 1513.³

As regards Andrea himself, it cannot be affirmed that his new state contributed in any sense to impair the talents with which he had been gifted. On the contrary, there are no examples of success in his whole lifetime equal to that which his two last frescoes in the court of the Servi obtained.

A glance at the Nativity will show that he really possessed the eminence that was conceded to him as a composer. Consistently in the path which had been opened with the incidents from the legends of S. Philip, the great art of appropriately disposing figures is applied. You see two principal groups occupying the chief places, and bound to each other by the brooding Joachim, who moodily sits, as if carved by Michael Angelo, in the background. S. Anna is the centre of attraction in the group on the right, the infant Virgin that of the group to the left. The dimpled faces of the females in attendance, and the grave dignity in the gait and air of the two visitors are those which we admire in Leonardo and Domenico Ghirlandaio. There is an excessive freedom and natural appearance in the movements and full developed forms which tell of the progress of the age and the influence of Fra Bartolommeo. The proportions are good, the outlines sweeping. The action is varied and expressive, the draperies full and excellent in cast. The perfect fusion and more than usually successful contrast of light and shade suggest the presence of real flesh and blood,¹ the handling being more than ever faultless, and producing transparence without objectionable thickness of surface. Richness and relief are united with finished modelling. What Da Vinci produced with oils in the Mona Lisa seems realised by Andrea del Sarto with fresco. In the subdued yet gay tones peculiar to himself, he gives sweet chords of harmony with none of the glare of the primaries, yet without the excessive soberness of tertiaries. There is a calm depth of atmosphere over all, in the upper mist of which cherubs disport with charming vivacity.² In short, the Nativity is on the highest level ever reached in fresco. There is only more bravura in the Last Supper of S. Salvi, or in the Madonna del Sacco.

Yet, as every object in life has its unfavourable side, this masterpiece has also its defects. We miss in its complex the strong control which is usual in Fra Bartolommeo, Raphael, and Leonardo. Domenico Ghirlandaio accustoms us to a serene severity in the presentation of such scenes as these. Leonardo and Michael Angelo added what was necessary to create modern arts in its technical improvements, its select ideal in elegance of action and shape. Fra Bartolommeo had his part in this striving, which was crowned with final success by Raphael. Andrea del Sarto, who gave the last polish to fresco, introduced the germ of a licence which soon became very marked. The variegated aspect of his tints, which is already apparent even in his Nativity, becomes offensive by excess. Masaccio, who was the colourist of his age, and who forestalled it as regards atmosphere and chiaroscuro, kept to a stern simplicity of key. Fra Bartolommeo already shows us how surfaces can be broken, especially in shadow, by intricate interweaving of tints. This principle was carried out with still greater frequency by Del Sarto, who thus rivalled the Frate in giving a new feature to Florentine painting. But they inaugurated a system which was soon to be productive of evil by substituting artificial effect to the study of nature. This evil arose in Del Sarto probably from the attempt to work on panel with the same fluid vehicle as on lime, using the under-ground as a means for transparency. But in this attempt the speed with which he laboured placed him at a disadvantage, and for that and other reasons he remains far below Leonardo. Thus it happened at Florence that the very reverse occurred from that which we note in Venice. In Florence, fresco was carried to far greater excellence than oil-painting because its use was most common. The Venetians transferred the technical methods usual to them from canvas to wall, and failed almost invariably in the trial.

As Jacopo da Empoli sat in the court of the Servi copying the Nativity of Del Sarto (about the year 1570), an old lady, who had evidently come to Mass, stopped by his easel and began talking to him. She pointed out one of the figures in the fresco as a likeness of Andrea's wife, and, as she warmed over this theme, revealed herself to Jacopo as Lucretia del Fede.¹ The person most like Del Sarto's spouse is the female in the centre of the foreground, whose type and face her husband, with or without intention, repeated from this time forward in almost all his Madonnas. She was a full matronly woman of fine proportions, of whom we have the lineaments in a fine portrait by Andrea at the Berlin Museum,² though not perfectly coinciding in every respect with a second in the Museum of Madrid.³ She must have had some considerable amount of patience to sit, as she so frequently did, to her better half.

Simultaneously with those of the Nativity of the Virgin, Andrea had made the cartoons of the Procession of the Magi, intended as an amplification of the Nativity of Christ by Baldovinetti. With great activity and ready movements in the crowd of kings accompanied by their court and suite, with sufficient dignity in the several parts, this fresco is done with a still more running hand, but with less chastened sentiment than its companion. Perhaps the wish to contrast staid and modest bearing in females, of which the Nativity chiefly consists, with bravery and energy in males, of which the Procession is exclusively composed, had something to do with the self-confident swing generally prevalent in the figures. The result only confirms the impression previously created. Amongst the king's followers, to the left of Sansovino, who stands with the musician Ajolle on the right foreground, is the likeness of Andrea del Sarto, by himself; the same in features as another at the Uffizi which Vasari engraved for his Lives. The face is regular; it is that of a man of robust constitution, but far from refined, and in this respect a reflex of Del Sarto's individuality. It neither suggests the elevation of Leonardo, nor the polish of Raphael, nor the grand force of Michael Angelo. Without the feeling for gorgeous tone peculiar to Titian, but with a sense of vapour akin to Correggio's, he is well described as almost "divine" in his mode of colouring. Born a painter, according to Vasari,¹ he was versatile as a composer, with a tendency to conventionalism because he overlooked the variety required in the treatment of different objects, such as flesh, cloth, wood, stones, leaves, and sky. But he was homely even in his energy, because he had not the breed of his great rivals. We have spoken of the portrait at the Uffizi. It is on a tile hastily but freely laid in at a late period of the master's life.² There is a much finer one in possession of the Marquis Campana, who purchased it from the Capponi family at Florence. Here we have the same general contour, shape of bone, and character of the head, as in the Procession of the Magi at the Servi. Though much restored, it unquestionably resembles that of the Uffizi, and is undoubtedly by Andrea himself, when aged about thirty.³

The frescoes of the Servi having been finished in 1514, were uncovered at the same time as the Sposalizio of Franciabigio.⁴ Those of the Servi garden, which have perished, and others of inferior interest, were no doubt completed at the same period.⁵ We do not know when

The face is turned three-quarters to the left. The head adorned with long hair of pleasing curl falling from a black cap, the white chemisette covered by a dark silk vest with violet sleeves. On the green ground the double A interlaced. Life-size, oil, wood. The face and hair much repainted. [Is this No. 66, Pitti?]

⁴ The whole sum promised to A. del Sarto for the frescoes was 98 florins. He received a bonus of 42 florins in addition (Annot. VASARI, p. 257).

⁵ There are records of part payment for the Procession of the Magi on the 12th of December 1511, and for the Nativity on the 25th of the same month. Also an item for work in the garden in June 25, 1512, and a further notice of the same kind in June 1513. The date of 1514 on the Nativity, and the statement of VASARI, vol. ix., p. 98, that that fresco, as well as that of the Magi and the Sposalizio of Franciabigio, was uncovered at one time are conclusive as to when this series at the Servi was finished (see Annot. VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 259 to 260 and 301). There are two panels in the Collection of Mr. Fuller Maitland which seem copies of Andrea's frescoes in the garden. They are by Nanaccio.

The other frescoes at the Servi were in the Novitiate, now part of the Academy the Head of Christ on the high altar, which Vasari praises so much, and which in a great measure deserves his encomiums, was done.¹ It is known that the Assumption for which he contracted in June (16th) 1515, was afterwards carried out by Pontormo.² The Brotherhood of the Scalzo had overbid the brethren of the SS. Annunziata, and Del Sarto had been induced to promise the continuation of the monochromes, of which a solitary example had been furnished so many years before.

Before November 1515 he had finished there the Allegory of Justice, and the Sermon of S. John in the Desert, in which the simplicity and repose of the composition distinctly recall Domenico Ghirlandaio, whilst some of the personages about the saint, who preaches from a stump in the centre of the space, have a wildness and angular drapery that betray a sudden and passing change in the spirit of the artist. It was the time in which the engravings of Dürer's Passion, first published in 1511, had found their way to Italy, and received a genuine tribute of admiration. Del Sarto was tempted to imitate them, and surrendered some of his old Florentine simplicity, in order to assume a broken system of line, and an unnatural exhibition of strong action and muscular force.

As he brought these frescoes to a close, the news of Leo X.'s coming spread through Florence; and unusual efforts were required, considering the shortness of the notice, to get ready the triumphal arches and other decorations with which that event was celebrated. Del Sarto and his friends, Jacopo Sansovino and Rustici, concerted measures with extraordinary decision; and the two first were thus enabled to produce a gigantic model of the front of S. Maria del Fiore, which Leo only wished he could have seen carried out in stone with equal readiness.³

Resuming his duties at the Scalzo immediately after, he laid the borders round the Baptism of Christ, the Justice, and the Sermon; and at midsummer 1517, he gave the final touches to S. John Baptizing in the Desert, and the Capture; both of them animated scenes, full of exuberant strength and well-balanced groups, but slightly mannered in the drawing.⁴

In the meanwhile, and in order to vary the monotony of labour at monochromes, he did for S. Francesco of Florence the Virgin and Child of Arts. [No. 75] of that Gallery is a naked Christ on the tomb, life-size, very easily handled and transparent. The other piece is an interior in monochrome; in a room used as an infirmary for women (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 275).

¹ The head is of a warm pleasing tone, of a fine mould for Del Sarto. The hands are crossed on the breast (wood, oil, life-size). Another Head of Christ (? a replica), on canvas in the same place, is missing, having been sold (VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 279-80).

with S. Francis, S. John Evangelist and two Angels, now in the Gallery of the Uffizi. In the young and handsome Virgin seated on a very high pedestal, the study of a good model is as evident as that of a coarse one is betrayed in the vulgar realism of the S. Francis. The Evangelist, on the contrary, is full of feeling and of a mild character well deserving praise. Nothing can exceed the harmonious vagueness of the misty tone which bathes and almost obliterates the outlines. For fusion and transparent gaiety of colour, Del Sarto was never more remarkable. But the striking feature here is not so much that the picture is a masterpiece as that we find the painter adapting his means to his subject with astonishing versatility. At the very moment that he surprises us in the Scalzo by strength and energy, he drops into an excessive softness in the handling and tinting of a quiet scene on panel.

In order to show at the same time that he was at home in every mood, he accepted a commission from the monastery of S. Gallo, and thought out the noble altarpiece of the Pitti: the Fathers Disputing on the Doctrine of the Trinity, in every line of which stern power and boldness are discerned. Yet as usual there is abundance of the atmosphere and vapour which are now his peculiar characteristics. He seems at this moment to have been looking at some of Fra Bartolommeo's latest emanations, such as the solitary S. Vincent, now at the Academy, or some statues of Michael Angelo; for the marks are expressive and resolute, the attitudes are grandiose, the forms well proportioned, weighty and nobly draped.

Michael Angelo is said to have expressed a high opinion of Andrea del Sarto, amongst others to Raphael, to whom he is reported to have observed: "There is a little fellow in Florence (meaning Andrea) who will bring sweat to your brow, if ever he is engaged in great works."¹ That they knew each other is certain, because it was Buonarrotti who took young Vasari to Del Sarto's shop in 1524;² and Andrea for a period was a fanatic admirer of his style. We see this not only in the Dispute on the Trinity, but in a Charity at the Louvre, and a Pietà in the Belvedere at Vienna, both of which were fruits of the year 1518, and one of them produced at a distance from Florence.

Before the close of 1516, Giovambattista Puccini, a dealer, had bought from Andrea del Sarto a Dead Christ mourned by three angels, which, with little satisfaction to the author, had been engraved by Agostino Veneziano.³ This picture, having been sent to the French court, attracted attention, and created a demand for others. The subsequent despatch of a Madonna to Paris and its sale for a large profit raised the reputation of Del Sarto still higher, and an agent was instructed by Francis I., in the spring of 1518, to sound the artist as to his inclination for an engagement in his capital.¹ The prospect was too enticing to be resisted, and Andrea, leaving wife and kith and kin behind, started about June for France, furnished with ample means for his journey, and in company of his assistant Sguazzella.² His reception, and the rich presents of money and clothes made to him on arrival, were well calculated to inflame his zeal, and he was employed forthwith on a likeness of the babe Dauphin,³ for which the King gave a purse of three hundred gold pieces.⁴

Amongst the productions of this time none is more important, as showing Andrea's leaning towards Buonarrotti, than the Charity which now hangs in the collection of the Louvre.⁵ Though it has lost much beauty of colour, it was evidently done with Andrea's most consummate art, the style being more seriously considered than that of the Madonna of 1517. The maxims of Michael Angelo are applied with a determined purpose, so as to be obvious not only in the conception, the arrangement and action, but in the grandeur of the forms, the way in which motion is suggested, and the drawing of the parts. We are reminded of nothing so much as of the Madonna, with the Child at her breast, left unfinished by Michael Angelo in the Medici Chapel at S. Lorenzo of Florence. There is no other creation of this period so like this one, as the Pietà at the Belvedere in Vienna, where the dead Christ lying on the foreground, is bewailed by the Virgin and two angels. The effort made by Andrea in this piece to realise despairing lamentation is accompanied by no refinement. There is nothing ideally select in the shape of the Redeemer or in the face of His mother; but the naturalism of the nude, the correctness of the drawing and modelling, and the intensity given to the expression of grief are so genuine that, whilst we miss the instinctive dignity of the period of Giotto and Angelico, the nobleness of Masaccio and Ghirlandaio, the elegance of Leonardo and Fra Bartolommeo, and the elevation of Raphael, we still find much to admire and to praise, the more as the colour is still brilliant and powerful.⁶

Whilst Del Sarto was thus charming his new patrons with these and other masterpieces,¹ his wife was spending a solitary time at Florence, and wrote letters urging her husband to return. The tenderest fibres of Andrea's heart were moved by her prayers, and he asked for leave, promising a speedy return. Francis acceded to this application, and even trusted Del Sarto with funds for buying works of art in Italy. But his confidence was betrayed by Andrea in the most unpardonable manner.

Having squandered his own and the King's money at Florence in the building of a house, Andrea found himself unable to make the necessary purchases, and, dreading his patron's anger, he was forced to remain at home. How he succeeded in escaping punishment for his breach of trust is a mystery unexplained to the present day; and it is characteristic of the condition of morals in that age, if we admit the truth of Vasari's history, which was never impugned, that Andrea suffered little in position or in purse from an offence that might have been productive to him of the most serious consequences.

In 1520, Del Sarto, no longer thinking of his French connection, and evidently secure from all pursuit, resumed his business at Florence, and renewed his old relations with the Brotherhood of the Scalzo. In 1520 he composed the allegories of Faith and Charity in that cloister, and would have continued the series, but that he was called away by more powerful patrons.

Ottaviano de' Medici having been charged by Cardinal Giulio, as we have related, to put the country palace of Poggio a Caiano in order, engaged Franciabigio, Pontormo, and Del Sarto to paint frescoes there, and Andrea undertook the Cæsar Receiving Tribute. The half of that subject, which he completed, is imposing by the variety and richness of episodes like those with which we become familiar in the canvases of Paul Veronese. It is not so much a composition as a lively and picturesque scene in which great difficulties of perspective are overcome in the representation of circular lines of buildings and steps, and in the position of figures in various planes. Cæsar stands at an arched gate to which various personages ascend with their tribute. One carries a cage full of parrots, another leads a string of Indian sheep, a third ascends with a monkey; a dwarf comes with a chameleon in a box. A statue of Abundance is on a pedestal to the right.

A man capable of doing this must be strongly endowed with the pictorial spirit, specially organised for depicting showy incidents of pomp and wealth; quick in execution and versatile in the invention of groups. It is almost needless to mark in addition that Del Sarto's drawing is resolute and free, his knowledge of the human frame in every aspect solid, his action ready and suitable, and his transitions of light and shade properly defined. The gay variety of his colours looks to much advantage at Poggio a Caiano by the side of the bricky tones with which the feeble Allori finished the Tribute. Compared with Franciabigio, Del Sarto is playful, genial, pleasing, and in every sense superior. Both are far above Pontormo.¹

The death of Leo X. having interrupted the laying out of this country palace, Andrea returned to the decoration of the Scalzo, where he furnished, at successive intervals the Dance of the Daughter of Herodias, the Martyrdom of John the Baptist, the Presentation of the Head, the Allegory of Hope, and the Apparition of the Angel to Zachariah, the last of which was uncovered and paid for on the 22nd of August 1523. Perhaps we owe to the same period the two pictures illustrative of the Life of Joseph, now at the Pitti. They are assigned to the year 1523 by Mr. von Reumont with a better insight than we can obtain into the history of the Borgherini family, for whose palace in Florence they were done.²

Pier Francesco Borgherini namely was betrothed to Margaret, daughter of Ruberto Acciaiuoli, and his father, Salvi, had conceived the idea of preparing for the young pair on their wedding-day a room entirely decorated with panels, and a nuptial bed painted by the best artists. The taste with which his orders were carried out was so remarkable that Vasari never lets an occasion pass without mentioning the masterpieces which the place contained; and he dwells with complacency on the carved work of Baccio d'Agnolo and the subjects introduced by Del Sarto, Granacci, Pontormo, and Bacchiacca. But the most striking testimony to their value is afforded by the fact that during Pier Francesco's absence at the time of the siege of Florence, Giovambattista della Palla, an agent of the King of France, persuaded the Florentine government to let him have the spoils of the palace situated in the Borgo S. Apostolo, his intention being to strip the walls and send the confiscated pieces to Francis I. He was met with firm countenance in the precincts themselves by the wife of Pier Francesco, who loudly addressed him with the volubility of her sex: "Vile broker," she said, "paltry twopenny salesman, how dare you come to remove the ornaments of gentlemen's rooms, and deprive this city of its richest treasures, that they may embellish the houses of strangers, our enemies. The bed you have come for was made for my wedding, in honour of which my husband's father,

Some slight abrasions have been caused by time, especially in the sky, which is much discoloured. Vasari had the drawing of the subject by Andrea in his portfolio, and describes it as the most finished by him that he had ever seen.

Salvi, prepared all this magnificent and royal furniture, which I am fond of, and intend to preserve and defend in memory of him with the last drop of my blood." With this and much more the worthy descendant of the Acciaiuoli received the dealer of the King of France, and to such purpose that he retired crestfallen and empty-handed to his own lodgings.¹ Subsequent vicissitudes dispersed the contents of the Borgherini Palace, as we perceive, to public galleries. Andrea del Sarto's part consists of two pictures, in which the various incidents of Joseph's dreams, the conspiracy of his brothers, the captivity in Egypt, the interpretation of the vision of the kine to Pharaoh, are put together with a copiousness of incident, a breadth and ease of style that cause these episodes to be justly considered as extraordinarily worthy of admiration. Nor is it less remarkable to find in them, in addition to Andrea's usual atmosphere and perspective, a powerful colour with more than common vigour in its relief of light and shade.²

In the midst of these occupations Del Sarto could not but occasionally remember the bright days which he had spent in Paris; and he even laboured under the hallucination that he might be restored to favour if Francis I. could but see something new from his hand. He therefore proposed to himself to tempt the French monarch first by a Virgin with the Child and Saints which an Italian named Zanobi Bracci was to send through Jacques de Beaume to Paris; next by a figure of S. John the Baptist in the Desert. Yet he had scarcely finished them than he was struck by the futility of his purpose, and the figure at least was forwarded to Ottaviano de' Medici. It was this nobleman who had employed him at Poggio a Caiano, and who, now that he had no longer the power of spending the money of his relatives on artists, thought himself bound to lay out his own. He not only kept the Baptist, which afterwards came into the Pitti, and is entitled to a high place in that collection,³ but ordered Madonnas and portraits in considerable numbers. Of the Madonnas the fate is not known⁴ any more than is that of the portrait of Giulio Cardinal de Medici; but the Naples Museum still contains the copy, which was done for Ottaviano, of Raphael's Leo X.

That Pontiff had been dead but a short time, and had been followed quickly to the grave by Adrian VI., when Frederick II., Duke of Mantua, being on his way (1523) to Rome to pay his homage to Clement VII., passed through Florence, and received hospitality in the Palazzo Medici. Amongst the jewels of art which were treasured there, not the least famous was the portrait of Leo between two cardinals, by Raphael. On his arrival at Rome, Frederick asked for and obtained from the Pope a present of this panel, and on his way home brought an order to Ottaviano to pack it up and send it to Mantua. Ottaviano, however, was too well aware of the value of the thing so lightly given away to surrender it; and with the cunning of his race he determined to keep the original and palm off a copy on the Duke. He employed Del Sarto to make this copy, which was duly sent away, and was accepted not only by Frederick, but by Giulio Romano, who was in his employ. Vasari happened to be visiting the palace of Mantua a little later with Giulio Romano; and the latter vaunted to him the beauty of the Raphael, the only one there. Vasari, who about this period had been introduced to Del Sarto, and had friendly relations with Ottaviano, was aware of the deception which had been practised, and said to Giulio: "It is very fine, but not Raphael." "How not," sharply replied the other, "do I not know it, who recognise the strokes of my own work?" "You have forgotten," urged Vasari; "this is by Andrea del Sarto, as you can see from a sign that I shall show you." Upon this Giulio looked at a mark to which Vasari pointed,¹ which, had it been kept, would have prevented a long and wearisome dispute. The genuineness of the Leo at the Pitti has been questioned in favour of that in the Museum at Naples; though on the face of it the latter bears all the evidence of being taken from the former. No doubt, had Raphael been asked for a replica, he might have reproduced his own design, and yet have betrayed to us which of the two was the repetition. But in the Naples Leo the question presents itself more boldly. We miss in it the perfect keeping, ease, grandeur, modelling, and relief of form; the peculiar flavour of art which distinguish Sanzio from Del Sarto. The Mantuan double, of less simplicity in the outline than Raphael's, has a contour with the twang of Andrea's accent in it; chiaroscuro of comparatively little massiveness, shadows of a less mysterious depth, because imperfectly modelled. The difference lies in the variety of the principles upon which the two painters laboured. The peculiarity of their schooling produces distinct modes of handling. Andrea did not place tones over each other and fuse them together by glaze and half glaze, according to the process which Raphael had learnt from Leonardo and Perugino. His is a more immediate and rapid system, which has frequently the disadvantage of giving an air of emptiness to his works in oil. That system is applied in the Naples Leo, where the lights are fused and bright enough to be accepted as a good imitation of Raphael, but where the shadows, owing to their viscous consistency, imperfectly fill the outlines; where the tints of the drapery generally copy those of Sanzio without their spotless unison of harmony.

That Giulio Romano, when doing the honours of Mantua to Vasari, should not have critical leisure to observe these minutiae, and that Vasari on his part should prefer to convince him by a private sign rather than by a dissertation on styles, is quite natural. The only startling thing is Giulio's assertion "that he had a share in Raphael's Leo X.," a fact which no one could have believed, especially at the time of the incident which has just been related, but which, if admitted, would show how much better a subordinate can work under the supervision of his superior than when he is alone.

Independently of the internal proofs to which our attention has been devoted, there is testimony of a subordinate kind not to be undervalued in discussing the comparative genuineness of the Neapolitan and Florentine pieces. In favour of the former we usually find a couple of lines quoted which are undoubtedly to be read on the back of the panel. These lines run: "P. LEON X. M^A DI RAFAELO D'URBINO. GIO. BATTA B^ETOLUZZO. A.N." (Agostino Nerone). In the Gallery of Naples, however, another picture is known to have the same inscription, and that is the Madonna della Gatta by Giulio Romano, which no one except Vasari (once by an oversight) ever attributed to Raphael.¹

The sudden appearance of the plague in Florence and its neighbourhood now drove Del Sarto, amongst others, out of his usual place of abode; and his patron Antonio Brancacci having got him a commission from the nuns of S. Piero at Luco in Mugello, he migrated thither with his wife and a heavy suite of relatives in the spring and summer of 1524. The fruits of his stay there were a Pietà, now at the Pitti, a Visitation, and a Head of Christ like that on the altar of the Servi.² In the Pietà we have Del Sarto's version of the incident so ably depicted by Perugino and by Fra Bartolommeo. The dead Redeemer is raised at the shoulders by the Evangelist, His arm held up by the Virgin. The Magdalen bends over the feet, and wrings her hands, whilst in rear of her, S. Catherine looks on. Behind the two latter, S. Peter, his body thrown forward and his arms open, expresses grief and horror with tragic, if not with noble, action and features. S. Paul, near the Evangelist, forms a counterpoise to S. Peter. This is a fine example of Del Sarto's versatility, a composition according to the correct rules, very dramatic and powerful, in which even the merit of originality cannot be denied. It has neither the severe grandeur of the Frate, nor the serene calmness of Perugino. But the Michaelangelesque fibre in it shows strength; and the cleverness with which Andrea presents a scene, in its movements forcible, yet human and familiar, in its expression realistic, yet sufficiently elevated, is greatly to be praised.¹

² The Visitation and the Head of Christ are now missing (see VASARI, vol. viii., p. 279).

On Del Sarto's return to Florence in autumn, the Visitation at the Scalzo, a very fine unit in the number of his monochromes, was followed by an equally fine Madonna and Saints at the Pitti, the predella of which, containing portraits of his acquaintance Beccuccio Biccherei da Gambassi, is missing.² Then came a series of five Saints of good type and of elegant and life-like shapes, intended for the church of the Madonna di S. Agnese, but at present in the cathedral of Pisa; figures of such a misty vagueness in their colouring that they remind us instantly of Correggio, though graver and more contained in mien than those of Antonio generally.³

In 1525, Andrea was employed with Bugiardini in making cartoons for the balustrade of the tribune or "ringhiera" of the Palace of the Signori at Florence,⁴ but his masterpiece in that year was the lunette fresco in the cloisters of the Servi, known all over the world as the Madonna del Sacco. Vasari, enraptured, says of it: "that for drawing, grace, and beauty of colour, for liveliness and relief, no artist had ever done the like";⁵ and no doubt it is Andrea's best, producing an impression of life which is only proper to works of the highest order. There is no denying that a masculine stamp is given to the youthful and thoughtful yet inspired Virgin, as well as to the form of the Child. Yet, this in no wise diminishes their grandiose effect. The centre of vision is appropriately chosen for the high place in which the subject is introduced. The grouping is scientific, the attitudes are noble, the drapery admirably calculated to show off the frames, and the balance of light and shadow is perfect. The excellence which Del Sarto here attained was never surpassed, and though we have two noble specimens in the Birth of S. John (1526) at the Scalzo, and the Last Supper at S. Salvi (1526-7), they are not superior, if indeed they are equal, to the Madonna del Sacco.¹

¹ Pitti [No. 58]. On the foreground Andrea's monogram (wood, oil, figures life-size). The payment for this piece and for the Visitation (80 ducats) is printed in Com. VASARI, vol. viii., p. 305; the date being October 11, 1524. A predella, said to have remained at Luco, has not been seen by the authors. Vasari relates how the whole altarpiece narrowly escaped being carried off by the freebooter Armaciotto de' Ramazzotti (1529-30), who wanted an ornament to his chapel at S. Michele in Bosco of Bologna.

² Pitti [No. 307]. Wood, oil, figures all but life-size. The Virgin and Child in the clouds are adored by the kneeling SS. John the Baptist and Magdalen, the standing SS. Sebastian, Roch, Lawrence and another. This is a fine, easily handled work of the master, of well-fused tones.

³ These five Saints are all on wood, and life-size. S. John with the Cross kneeling and pointing upwards (restored by pointing); S. Catherine with a palm, S. Margaret with a little Cross, both very grand and in good attitudes; S. Peter much injured by repainting, S. Agnes in lively action. These were all taken into the Pisa Duomo in 1618. Four are at the sides of the high altar; the S. Agnes on a pilaster in the transept.

The Birth of S. John was the latest fresco by Andrea in the cloister where he had competed with Franciabigio.² Adding to the series at intervals only, and finishing the last eleven years after the first, he gives us leisure to examine in one place the expansion and the changes of his style. We see in the Sermon of S. John something that reminds us of the grave Ghirlandaio; and, simultaneously, traces of the influence of a great foreign master. The action of Dürer upon Andrea's mind remains apparent in the Baptism of the Proselytes, and in S. John before Herod, inducing him to indulge in energetic and forcible developments of movement. The Apparition of the Angel to Zachariah illustrates the return to a simpler and more natural mood in an Italian, and prepares us for the greater breadth and boldness of the Madonna del Sacco.³ The two remaining monochromes are good and interesting as compositions.⁴ At S. Salvi the Last Supper completes a decoration begun a long time before. It appropriately adorns the refectory and is calculated to be seen at a burst on entering the door. At that distance and from that spot the reality of the thing is striking, the Saviour and the Apostles all sitting at a long table in a room, at the middle window of which two persons converse. On a nearer view the scenic nature of the handling and the mannered outlines betray the artist's trick. The effect of nature is produced by the able complex of distribution grouping and diversified attitude. The types are characteristic of the age and habit of the men represented, whose faces all seem portraits. To this are superadded colour, in every wave of which there is light, plasticity and air. It is marvellous how the shadows cast by the figures,

and the parts in them, turned away from the light, keep their value; how the variegated tints preserve their harmony. The action is everywhere true, the drapery of grand and simple cast, but sculptural in the flattened aspect of its relief.¹ The Saviour, at the centre of the table, puts His hand on that of S. John Evangelist, towards whom His face is bent. In the right He holds the bread in the direction of Judas, who sits by Him. This is a group in which all Andrea's faults and qualities are combined. A supreme ideal of goodness, depth of noble thought are not to be found in the Redeemer, who is a man of no very select form. His movement is essentially that of an ordinary mortal; and in every other instance, where we hope for refinement, we fail to discover it, yet the Apostles at the ends of the table are admirably bound in questioning converse; and there is decorum in them all, if high breed be lacking.

In comparing Del Sarto with Leonardo, we thus find the essential difference which exists between the two men, and a key to their inner organisation. We should say from the contemplation of the Cena at Milan that the painter is high bred; looking at that of S. Salvi, that he is accustomed to lowly company. Both in their parts yielded something that was original and great; but Andrea, knowing his own strength and capacity, chose his ground accordingly, and for his success under these conditions he is entitled to thanks.² If we contrast the magnificent fresco of S. Salvi with the sketch of it which is now in the Gallery at Oxford, we cannot but be surprised anew at the power of Del Sarto. The panel is a counterpart of the fresco without the people at the window, painted in oil with the utmost ease, extraordinarily full of life, but particularly charming for the transparence and harmony of its colour.

The last years of Del Sarto were taken up exclusively with the completion of altarpieces, in all of which we shall trace an unmistakable grandeur of style, together with increasing facility of hand and mannerism in outlines. One of his last public duties was the representation of certain outlaws on the Piazza del Podestà at Florence in 1530.

We shall proceed to register the works of this and earlier periods which have not found a place in the foregoing text, premising that the painter's death took place on the 22nd of January, 1531.³

³ He had been enrolled in February 2, 1529, a member of the Compagnia di S. Sebastiano; and in the registers of that society we find the notice of his death on the day in question. See Tav. Alfab. Vasari says that Del Sarto visited Rome. He does not say when. At any rate this could have been but a short trip, of no influence on his pictorial career (see VASARI, vol. viii., p. 292, and vol. ix., p. 293).

Florence. Academy of Arts.—[No. 76]. Four Saints, Michael, John the Baptist, Giovanni Gualberto, and Bernardo degli Uberti, originally in Vallombrosa (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 285). [No. 61]. Two children embracing and holding a scroll. [No. 77]. Predella, with scenes from the Lives of the Saints in [No. 76]. These three numbers are parts of one altarpiece, the principal figures, almost of life-size (wood, oil), being grand and bold in movement, the children sprightly and full of movement, though a little mannered in outline, the predella episodes lively and forcible in the fashion of Michael Angelo. (The central Annunciation of the predella is at the Louvre.) Inscribed between the legs of the S. Michael: "ANN. DOM. M.D.XXVIII."

Berlin. Museum.—[No. 246]. Of the same year is this fine Virgin and Child amongst saints; inscribed on the steps of the throne: "ANN. DOM. MDXXVIII" (wood, oil, figures life-size); the lunette with the Virgin and Angel Annunciate being in Florence. Originally done for one Giuliano Scala for some patron at Sarzana, then at Genoa; bought at last from Mr. J. Lafitte in Paris (1836) for the King of Prussia. (See VASARI, vol. viii., pp. 285-6.)

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 163]. Annunciation. Lunette of the foregoing, squared in canvas and injured by restoring, originally at the Servi (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 286). A copy of the latter is: Louvre—Annunciation.

Florence. Uffizi.—[No. 1254]. Originally at S. Giacomo Nicchio (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 287). Of the same date as the above; canvas, with S. James caressing a child in the dress of a battuto; a little dim and injured.

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 62]. The Virgin kneels and looks at the Infant Christ, who smiles at her as He lies on a cloth. The youthful Baptist standing, points to the Saviour; and S. Joseph, to the left, leans his head on his hand. Fine and pleasing; done for Zanobi Bracci, possibly about 1521 (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 275); wood, oil. The face of S. Joseph restored. REUMONT, Life of Del Sarto, pp. 130-1, speaks of a replica in the Pommersfelden Collection, near Bamberg.

Same Gallery.—[No. 81]. The Saviour, astride on the knee of the Virgin, who sits on the ground, turns to the young Baptist supported by S. Elizabeth. Splendid, beautifully arranged, and pleasing in types as well as in movements. Perfectly handled in Andrea's fused transparent manner. Done circa 1529, for Ottaviano de' Medici; wood, oil (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 290). See postea, a copy at Dulwich.

Same Gallery.—No. 266. Half-length Virgin, with the Child, of great feeling and graceful action, reminiscent a little in style and conception of Fra Bartolommeo.

Vasari tells in detail how Giovambattista della Palla, having authority from the King of France to order or to buy works of art, "commissioned of Del Sarto, Abraham about to Sacrifice Isaac. Andrea produced a masterpiece in obedience to this request. You could see in the face of the old man an expression of lively faith and constancy, in obedience to which he was ready to immolate his own son. You saw him turn his head towards a beautiful boy-angel who seemed to tell him to arrest the blow. It is needless to explain the attitude and dress of the father. Isaac, naked, trembled for fear of death; his neck was tinged by the heat, the rest of his body of a fair complexion. The sheep in the thorn seemed to live, and the clothes of Isaac on the ground were real rather than imitated. Besides, there were naked people watching a donkey at pasture, and a landscape so true, it could not be better. After the death of Andrea and the imprisonment of Giovanni della Palla, this picture was purchased by Filippo Strozzi, and given by him to Alfonso Davalos, Marquis del Vasto, who placed it in his Gallery at Ischia. . . .”¹ “Paolo da Terrarossa, having seen a sketch of the Abraham, asked for a copy of it, which Andrea did for him in small.”²

We have thus notice of a large and a small Sacrifice of Abraham. Intelligence of a third is given in a letter written (Florence, October 1531) by Giovanni Battista Mini to Baccio Valori at Rome, in which the former announces the sale of a Quadro de l’Abram by Andreino del Sarto for 125 ducats to James Stuart, Duke of Albany.

The replicas in existence at this time are three in number, none of them worthy of the praise which Vasari heaps on the original ordered by Della Palla :—

Dresden. Museum.—[No. 77], with the monogram. Vasari’s description of the composition is well given, and need not be repeated. The execution, however, is not first-rate, though it seems by Del Sarto (wood, oil, figures life-size). The drawing is free and a little mannered, and the touch very bold, the colour bright, but empty in the shadows. There is much expression in the face of Isaac.

Lyons. Museum.—No. 161. Carried away from Holland, and given by the Emperor Napoleon in 1811 to this Museum as a copy from Andrea del Sarto. The execution is less agreeable than at Dresden, Andrea’s transparency and gaiety of colour being wanting, especially in the grey shadows ; the nude ill rendered. The authorship might be assigned to Pontormo (see De Ris, Les Musées de Province, vol. ii., p. 377). Wood, oil, figures life-size.

Madrid. Museum.—[No. 387]. Wood, oil, under life-size. This may be the Terrarossa copy. It is injured, but bears the stamp of Del Sarto’s own hand.

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 191]. Assumption (wood, oil, figures life-size). Left unfinished in 1531, and without the last glazes, having been ordered by Bartolommeo Pianciatichi (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 274). A masterpiece for lightness, vapour, and finish, and of a good sfumato.

Same Gallery.—[No. 225]. Same subject as No. 191, and showing with what versatility Del Sarto was gifted. In this, however, there is a more quiet and orderly distribution, and something more reminiscent of Fra Bartolommeo. The Virgin is raised up towards heaven most gracefully, and there is an atmosphere almost like Correggio’s in the glory (wood, oil, figures life-size) ; according to the annotators of VASARI, vol. viii., p. 274, originally in the Duomo of Cortona.

Same Gallery.—No. 123. Virgin in Glory, adored from below by four saints. Ordered of Andrea in 1529, paid for in 1531 though unfinished, and completed in 1540 by Vincenzo Bonilli, who wrote the latter date on a cartellino at foot. The upper part is Del Sarto's, the lower, poor and by another hand (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 288, and Annot., p. 307; REUMONT, pp. 201-2).

The foregoing having been all more or less traced to the last years of our artist, we proceed to register pieces of which the history is more obscure, classing them according to the places in which they are exhibited.

Florence. Uffizi.—[No. 188]. Bust of a woman, genuine. No. 1147. Alleged likeness of himself, life-size, youthful and full of bravura in the execution (canvas). No. 1169. Bust of a youth, called: "The Commesso di Vallombrosa" (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 287), but apparently a person of higher station. Completely repainted (wood, oil, life-size). No. 1230. Bust of a female with a basket of spindles; paltry in style, reddish, and misty in colour, like a Bacchiacca.

Florence. Pitti.—[No. 97]. Annunciation, originally in S. Godenzo (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 260). Wood, oil, life-size. S. Michael and a canonised friar form part of the scene. This injured panel is much repainted, so that Andrea's hand is hardly discoverable. [No. 66]. Bust of a male, alleged portrait of Del Sarto (?). No. 184. Ditto, wood, oil; fine, but robbed of its bloom. No. 118. A male and female (half-lengths, wood, oil), said to be Andrea and his wife (?); not, certainly, by the master.

Florence. Prince Corsini.—No. 11. Apollo and Daphne (wood, oil). Very careful, touched with gold, and fanciful in costumes. We are reminded of Piero di Cosimo by the general aspect, and of Del Sarto by the execution. The name of the latter is appropriate in so far as we have here, possibly, an effort of his younger days. No. 19. Virgin, Child, young Baptist and S. Joseph (wood, oil), raw, positive in tone, and damaged by restoring; by a pupil rather than by Andrea in person. Vasari mentions a panel with the same figures as having been done for Gio. Borgherini (vol. viii., p. 290). No. 8. Virgin, Child, and four Angels (wood, oil), feeble in character and dark in shadow, like a Puligo. No. 22. Angel and Tobit (on copper), a copy, of which there is a counterpart in the Pitti (No. 292). Unnumbered. Virgin seated with the Child, behind them the young S. John. This is a modern imitation (wood, oil, life-size) of a copy from Del Sarto's fresco near the Porta a Pinti (Vasari), now destroyed. The copy is in the third corridor at the Uffizi, without a mark (p. 24 of catalogue; see VASARI, vol. viii., p. 273-4). The same composition, not by Del Sarto, to whom it is assigned, is in the Collection of the Duke of Sutherland in London. Another, like that in Stafford House, minus the young Baptist, belongs to Sir William Miles, Bart., of Leigh Court.

Florence. Galleria Ginori.—Half-length of S. Sebastian holding a bundle of arrows, a little exaggerated in drawing and forms, and not quite certainly by Andrea, having more impasto than is usual to him (? see VASARI, vol. viii., p. 292), wood, oil.

Florence. Galleria Pianciaticchi.—No. 109. Bust of Baccio Valori (?), feeble and probably not original.

Rome. Galleria Barberini.—The Virgin leaning against a tree, holds the child who seems to have just turned away from the breast. Her face is the usual one of Del Sarto; the child large and S. Joseph, to the left, of stern mien. Done by Andrea or under his supervision, about the time of the S. Salvi Supper; retouched, especially in the heads of the Virgin and Child. There is a study of the head of S. Joseph in the Munich Pinakothek (see postea), wood, oil, life-size. Two copies of the Barberini Madonna by other hands exist in the Madrid Museum, No. 788, and in the Collection of the Marquis of Westminster in London.

Rome. Palazzo Spada.—Visitation, portion of a predella, with six figures in lively movement, stamped with the impress of Andrea's manner, and certainly done in his atelier.

Rome. Galleria Borghese.—There are no less than seven pieces claiming to be by Del Sarto, in this gallery, all of them by his pupils or imitators.

Rome. Palazzo Corsini.—Virgin and Child, dated 1509, reminding of Bugiardini (see antea).

Naples. Museum.—Portrait of Bramante (?), with one hand on a sheet of paper, the other grasping a pair of compasses. He shows a plan to a Duke of Urbino (?); named Andrea del Sarto, but a mixture of Pontormo and Bronzino, and of hard outlines and cold tone.

Modena. Gallery.—Virgin, Child, and S. Elizabeth, with the boy S. John, two angels attending, one of them with a flute. This Holy Family is not like that of the Pitti done for Ottaviano de' Medici (No. 81), nor is it the same as that of the National Gallery, No. 17. It is similar to one at the Belvedere in Vienna (No. 3 Italian School, Room IV.), under Del Sarto's name, but really by Puligo. The repetition at Modena is not even by Puligo. Of eight other panels in this gallery attributed to Del Sarto, it is needless to say more than that the nomenclature is false.

Turin. Museum.—No. 207. The Virgin, seated, holds the Infant erect on her lap. He turns towards the young Baptist (wood, half life-size), feeble in character as in colour, and of a glossy surface, yet laid in with a certain ease; a school copy repeating a part of a Holy Family at the Louvre (the S. Elizabeth excepted). A more modern repetition of this number at Turin is in the Museum at Leipzig (No. 209), another at Windsor Castle.

Rovigo. Galleria Comunale.—No. 30. Virgin and Child, and infant Baptist, imitation of Andrea by a later painter.

Vienna. Belvedere.—Italian School. Room IV. Archangel and Tobit attended by S. Lawrence, and to the right a kneeling donor, Christ with His Cross in the sky (arched, wood, oil, figures under life-size). The colour is rich, pleasant, and sfumato. The Leonardesque smile is on every face. No. 3. The Virgin kneeling holds the Child, S. Elizabeth to the right, with the young Baptist pointing to the sky. To the left two angels, one of whom plays a flute. This, which recalls Puligo, is taken from a Holy Family (No. 438) at the Louvre, in the same manner as one at the Munich Pinakothek (see No. 548). The principal group is transferred to a panel at Windsor Castle, and to another at Lord Yarborough's, neither of which is original (see postea). No. 19. Portrait of a female inscribed: "AN. ETAT. LXXII" (wood, oil, life-size). She is seated with a book in her hand; fine, but restored, of a low tone, and apparently a late Pontormo. No. 28. Catalogued No. 30 (by mistake). Virgin and Child in a landscape, with S. Joseph, leaning on a sack (wood, oil, half life-size), is perhaps by Pontormo, its colour being of a reddish, even tinge, the figures short and fat. No. 30. Catalogued by mistake as No. 28. The Virgin kneeling, holds the Infant Christ, who plays with the boy S. John. Distance a landscape with ruins, a well, and little figures (wood, oil, figures life-size). This is either by Pontormo or by Rosso, imitating not so much Del Sarto as Franciabigio.

Vienna. Lichtenstein Gallery.—Half-length of S. Sebastian, wood, oil, life-size; weak, by an imitator of Del Sarto. Head of the Baptist on a plate, wood, oil, life-size, of the close of the sixteenth century.

Vienna. Harrach Gallery.—No. 178. Virgin, Child, Baptist, and S. Joseph, (wood, oil), of the decline of the Florentine School. The head of the Virgin repainted. We forbear to weary the reader with other pieces of the same kind.

Berlin. Museum.—Nos. 236–41. Incidents from the legend of S. Anthony of Padua (wood, oil, small), rather Umbrian than Florentine in stamp, and reminding of the brothers Zaganelli (Cotignola), particularly in respect of colour.

Munich. Pinakothek.—No. 576. Bust of S. Joseph, life-size, on paper (oil), same as at the Galleria Barberini, equally bold and characteristic, but extensively retouched. No. 548. Wood, oil, copy, by a stranger to his school, of Andrea's Holy Family at the Louvre (No. 438), a very feeble production, inferior to that at the Belvedere. (No. 3. Room IV. Italian School.) No. 544. The Virgin sitting on the ground, with the Infant Christ and young Baptist. Behind the latter, two angels; a piece of a comparatively recent date, very unlike Andrea. Cabinets—Nos. 582, 583, 589, 594, copies in monochrome from the Scalzo frescoes, without the genuine stamp of the master.

Schleissheim.—No. 1123. Named A. del Sarto, but not by him. Subject, the Virgin, Child, and young Baptist.

Dresden. Museum.—[No. 43]. Marriage of S. Catherine, under a conical dais, the curtains of which are held up by angels. This is an example of Andrea imitating Fra Bartolommeo, very rich and sfumato in colour; the figures short and paltry; wood, oil. The monogram is on the border. No. 45. The Dead Christ on the lap of the Virgin, by an artist of the close of the sixteenth century. No. 46. Holy Family, falsely inscribed "ANDREAS SARTUS" by a Venetian of whom we shall have more to say at a later period. Much restored.

Brunswick. Gallery.—No. 423. Virgin, Child, and young S. John. Half life-size, canvas, oil, rough copy, much repainted. The same composition, not catalogued, poor, but better than this of Brunswick, is on a wall in the staircase leading to the secretary's office in the Hermitage of S. Petersburg.

Stuttgart. Museum.—No. 327. Small Holy Family. Imitation. No. 299. So-called portrait of Galeazzo Campi, not by a Florentine, but by a Lombard, one should think.

Madrid. Museum.—[No. 385]. The Virgin raises her veil. The Child is erect on her lap. An archangel with a book crouches at the step of the Madonna's seat to the right. S. Joseph sitting on the ground to the left, a fine pyramidal composition in a landscape, in the distance of which S. Elizabeth leads the young Baptist (wood, oil). The monogram is at S. Joseph's feet. Though no longer transparent in shadows nor soft in outline, because of bad condition, this is still grand and plastic in the masses, with something in the drawing and colour that tells Pontormo was still in Del Sarto's atelier.

The subject in this form seems to have been prized. There is an injured school copy of it, done at one painting, and hard of colour, but with the monogram (wood, oil) in Dudley House. A second, likewise with the monogram, not so old in appearance as that of Dudley House, but of a more milky transparency, and by a clever imitator of Del Sarto, is in the collection of Mr. Holford in London; a third, on canvas, of a later time, without signature, at Ince, near Liverpool (see postea). No. 871. Virgin and Child, all but life-size (wood, oil), quite in Andrea's character, but more exaggerated in forms and not quite up to his level in power. A feeble copy of this is in the Dulwich Gallery (postea). No. 788. Virgin, Child, and S. Joseph (wood, oil, under life-size), reduced from that of the Barberini Gallery in Rome (antea, p. 579), at one painting, perhaps by Salviati. There is, we have said, a repetition of the subject at Madrid in the collection of the Marquis of Westminster (postea). No. 911 (wood, oil). Virgin, Child, two cherubs to the left, and to the right, in distance S. Francis in ecstasy at an angel playing a fiddle. This seems taken by Puligo from an original now belonging to the Marquis of Hertford, in London, of which there is also an imitation at Longford Castle (postea). No. 681. Repetition of No. 911, also of the school.

Paris. Louvre.—[No. 1515]. Round, wood, oil. Holy Family, with the monogram, and inscribed: "ANDREA DEL SARTO FLORENTINO FACIEBAT." The Virgin kneels in profile, behind her S. Joseph. She holds the Infant Christ, whilst S. Elizabeth, in front of her, has S. John in her arms. This is so completely repainted that one cannot judge of its original condition. The composition, however, is reminiscent of Fra Bartolommeo. See for replicas, not original, one in Count Sergei Stroganoff's Collection at S. Petersburg, and another belonging to the Earl of Portarlington (postea, p. 587). [No. 1516]. Holy Family (wood, oil, life-size). The kneeling Virgin supporting the Infant Christ who looks at S. Elizabeth, keeping back the boy Baptist. The latter points towards heaven. Two angels are behind the Virgin. Though here the fullest power of Andrea del Sarto is not exhibited, the panel seems to be the original of those at Vienna (No. 3. Room IV. Italian School, antea), at the Grosvenor Gallery (Marquis of Westminster, postea), and at Ince (postea). [No. 1517]. Annunciation, supposed to be a part of the predella [No. 63] at the Florence Academy of Arts, and a copy from Andrea's Annunciation at the Pitti [No. 163].

Montpellier. Musée Fabre.—No. 6. Virgin and Child, and S. John in the distance, by a very tame imitator of Del Sarto. No. 7. Sacrifice of Isaac, not in Andrea's manner.

Caen. Musée.—No. 3. S. Sebastian. No. 4. S. Sebastian. These are not only not genuine, but it is doubtful whether they are of the Florentine School.

Nancy. Musée.—No. 1. Arched, wood, oil. The Angel and Tobit, recalling Andrea and Fra Bartolommeo; a careful thing, perhaps by Sogliani.

Brussels. Museum.—No. 698. Jupiter and Leda, a poor school piece (? Bacchiacca).

S. Petersburg. Hermitage.—No. 24. Virgin and Child, S. Catherine to the right, S. Elizabeth with the young S. John to the left (wood, oil, figures under life-size), originally at the Malmaison, and inscribed: "ANDREA DEL SARTO FLORENTINO FACIEBAT." This is a replica of a Holy Family at Windsor Castle. Its bloom has been removed by cleaning, and the restoration leaves doubts whether we have to deal here with Andrea, or one of his scholars. No. 25. Wood, oil, but transferred to canvas. Bust of S. Barbara, life-size, retouched (? Bacchiacca).

S. Petersburg. Count Sergei Stroganoff.—Round of the Holy Family. Copy of No. 439, at the Louvre ; but older in date than a second copy (No. 26). at the Hermitage.

S. Petersburg. Collection of Princess Kutschubey.—Judith with the head of Holofernes (wood, with a border added all round, oil), an imitation of Del Sarto by Puligo. Also in this collection, a Holy Family—Virgin and Child between two angels, and the boy Baptist with the Cross to the left of the Virgin. This is much in the style of the Judith, and reminds of Puligo when he imitated Raphael and Fra Bartolommeo, but it is much repainted—the angel to the left completely so.

Copenhagen. Gallery of Christiansborg.—No. 3. Canvas. Portrait of a man in a black cap looking at the spectator over his left shoulder, much injured, and so completely renewed as to permit of no certainty as to whether it is by Del Sarto or his pupils.

London. National Gallery.—[No. 690]. Life-size portrait of a man, looking over his left shoulder, a tablet in his hand ; the monogram on the cool dark ground to the left. This is a very fine work touched with excessive ease and breadth. The warm lights are pleasantly tinged with rosy shades ; the mass of chiaroscuro well defined. The right hand is barely sketched. [No. 17]. Holy Family, without the vigour of Andrea's own hand, and probably by one of his disciples ; wood, oil, without brilliancy, and dimmed by old varnishes.

London. Marquis of Hertford.—Virgin and Child, three cherubs to the left and S. Francis listening in ecstasy to the music of an angel in the distance, with the monogram on the upper left corner ; beneath, an inscription as follows : “ ANDREA DEL SARTO FLORENTINO FACIEBAT ” (wood, oil, life-size). This is one of A. del Sarto's good productions, slightly injured by cleaning and retouching, ex gr. in the left wrist of the Virgin, and the shadows of her profile. See for copies : Madrid, No. 911 (antea) ; Longford Castle (postea).

London. Marquis of Westminster.—No. 173. Virgin, Child, and S. Joseph ; not genuine, but feebly done after that of the Galleria Barberini in Rome ; like No. 788 at Madrid (antea). Portrait of the Countess Mattei, not by Del Sarto, but reminiscent of Allori, or still better of Carlo Dolce (wood, oil). No. 88. S. John in the Desert ; No. 90. A Child with an orb (both wood, oil) are very different from works of our master. No. 81. Holy Family, a late repetition of No. 438, at the Louvre (antea). See also Ince (postea).

London. Stafford House.—No. 46. Wood, oil, life-size. Virgin, Child, and Baptist ; taken from an original of Del Sarto, by Salviati, Nanaccio, or some other disciple of that class, masterly enough in handling, but of ruddy tone.

London. Baring Collection.—The Virgin, seated with the Child on her lap, patting His chin. Below A. del Sarto's powers, pleasing and probably by Puligo (wood, oil, half life-size), injured and restored. See for a replica, Alnwick (postea), and Hampton Court. No. 139. Portrait of a man (half-length ; wood, oil, life-size). ? Puligo or Pontormo.

London. Mr. Farrer.—Canvas, life-size. Pietà, after that of Vienna (Belvedere—Italian School, Room IV., No. 23), by a follower of Del Sarto.

London. Mrs. Butler Johnstone.—Pietà. Canvas, same as that of Mr.

Anderson.

PORTRAIT OF HIMSELF

Farrer, careful and pleasing, but not done in the master's style or according to his habits.

Panshanger. Seat of Earl Cowper.—Life-size portrait of a man in a cap, writing a letter at a table, supposed, erroneously we think, to be Del Sarto himself. The letter is legible and runs so: "... Dicenbre. Mastro Domenico assai mi chamo sod (^{disfat}) to verso di voi, a vendo mostro propinquo ingenio per dimostrararmi qual proprio a . . . sono tanto molto obligato 1523 m. Andr." The person mentioned in these lines is perhaps Domenico Conti, the friend and pupil to whom Andrea bequeathed all his drawings (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 295), whose likeness may be here depicted. The features are those of a man of thirty, too young for Andrea in 1523 (he was then aged thirty-six), and besides, unlike his face as given in Vasari and observed elsewhere. The painting is clearly Del Sarto's, and finely touched.

Portrait of a female at a table with a volume of Petrarch in her hand. On a building to the right are the words: "MELIORA LATENT," and on the edge of the table: "IN DEO, TU PRESENS NOSTRO SUCCURRE LABORI." This is called the "Laura." It is a fine, bright piece, done with great mastery in Del Sarto's later years. The hands are long and of good breed, the neck delicate, the forehead fair, the eyes grey. The rosy half-tints are well fused into delicate shadows. The hair chestnut (wood, oil, life-size).

Portrait of a man in rustic dress, with his right hand in the bosom of his vest, smiling, a very fine work in perfect preservation, genuine and masterly, very bold in the handling, full of gaiety and transparence in tone.

Bust of a man (round, wood, oil, life-size), holding a sheet of paper in his right hand, pleasing; assigned to Del Sarto, but probably by Puligo.

Piece of a predella. Scene from the life of Joseph. He sits as a judge whilst Benjamin is brought before him. The brethren kneel or stand in front imploring. Nothing can be more animated than this composition, more energetic and lively than the attitudes, more perfect and airy than the colour. It is the quick and able production of a pencil in the full consciousness of its strength.

Two other stories from the life of S. Joseph are here: 1. The baker taken out to execution, and the butler with Joseph. 2. The sale of Joseph to Potiphar. Of these panels the colour is reddish and low. The drawing is mannered, the proportions are faulty, and the attitudes affected. All this points to Pontormo.

Tunbridge Wells (near). Hon. P. Ashburnham.—Charity, with two children at her breast, and one asleep at her feet (canvas, life-size). This subject was done by Andrea for G. B. della Palla (VASARI, vol. viii., p. 290). Here is a shield with two red lions on a yellow field, and above it a crown of five points (? more modern than the picture). The execution is much below that of Andrea, the drawing is incorrect, the colour weak and washy. It is likely that a pupil worked this up from Del Sarto's original; possible that it had been left unfinished at his death, and was completed by another.

Hamilton Palace, near Glasgow.—State Drawing Room. Half-length, life-size (wood, oil), of a Magdalen, not by Del Sarto, but more truly a slovenly thing by Bacchiacca.

Dalkeith Palace. Seat of the Duke of Buccleuch.—Dispute of the Trinity. SS. Catherine, Francis, and Dominic, Lawrence, Augustine and Sebastian (canvas, life-size), inscribed: "AND. SAR. FLO. FAC.," a diligent copy, perhaps by Allori, of Andrea's picture at the Pitti, and of his signature (No. 172).

Longford Castle. Seat of Lord Folkestone.—Holy Family, almost a copy (? by Puligo) of that of the Marquis of Hertford (antea, p. 584); very feeble (wood, life-size).

Alnwick. Seat of the Duke of Northumberland.—Virgin and Child, properly called Pontormo; a replica of that in the Baring Gallery.

Windsor Castle.—Virgin, Child, and infant Baptist; wood, oil, life-size (see antea, Turin, and postea Lord Yarborough). This seems an old imitation, (?) by Puligo. Portrait of a female, three-quarters to the right, of olive tone, opaque, and dark in shadows, freely done by Nannaccio or Salviati. Virgin, Child, S. Elizabeth, and young Baptist, and on the right S. Catherine, inscribed on the wheel: "ANDREA DEL SARTO FLORENTINO FACIEBAT." This is a composition similar to that of the National Gallery (No. 17), with the addition of the S. Catherine, and a replica of No. 24 at the Hermitage of S. Petersburg; a careful, but tame imitation of Andrea, by a comparatively modern painter.

London. Lord Yarborough.—Virgin, Child, and young Baptist (wood, oil, all but life-size), copy of that in Windsor Castle, to which it is inferior.

Dulwich Gallery.—No. 327. Virgin and Child, S. Joseph, S. Elizabeth, and the boy Baptist (wood, oil, life-size). This looks like a repetition by Salviati of No. 81 at the Pitti, S. Joseph being added. The latter figure, at Dulwich, is of a different character from the rest of the picture, in movement, drawing, and features. The colour is oily and without brightness. No. 326. Virgin, Child, and Baptist (wood, oil, life-size), a copy of No. 44, at Madrid, with the Baptist added, much lower in the scale of art than the Holy Family, No. 327.

London. R. S. Holford, Esq.—Virgin, Child, S. Joseph, and an angel (wood, oil, life-size), with the monogram, a school copy of No. 772 at Madrid. See also Dudley House.

Leigh Court. Sir W. Miles, Bart.—Virgin and Child, of heavy shape and dull yellowish colour, but freely handled, similar to one at Stafford House in which a S. John accompanies the other figures, and by the same hand, i.e. Salviati or Sguazzella.

London. Hon. C. C. Cavendish.—S. John, exhibited at the British Institution in 1856. Of the school.

London. Hon. W. Warren Vernon.—No. 110 at Manchester. Holy Family, with S. Elizabeth, and the small Baptist; copy from Andrea by a pupil.

London. Sir Humphrey de Trafford.—No. 111 at Manchester. Holy Family. School piece.

Hampton Court.—No. 139. Virgin and Child, like those of the Baring and Alnwick Collections, and an old copy of the former.

Dublin. National Gallery.—The Virgin, with the dead body of Christ on her lap, between S. Peter and a female saint. Predella in three parts, not to be assigned with certainty to A. del Sarto, being mannered in drawing and form, and too variegated in colour. No. 10. Adoration of the Magi (small wood, oil), by some of the followers of Andrea.

Dublin. Earl of Portarlington.—No. 8 at the International Exhibition. Holy Family. Round (since squared). Wood, oil. Copy of No. 439, at the Louvre, by a modern.
